We think the finding was fully justified. The answer seeks to set up two elements of damage: First, that the land as conveyed was worth $20,000 less than it would have been without the incumbrance; second, that the defendant George R. Bentel made contracts for the resale of parts of the land, and that he lost the benefits of such contracts because the existence of the incumbrance made it impossible for him to convey to his proposed grantees the unincumbered title upon which they insisted.

There was no proof to sustain the first element of damage claimed. The defendants showed the value of the lots remaining unsold, but failed to establish that they would have had any greater value if there had been no restriction against the use of firearms. On the contrary, the admissions of George R. Bentel himself were such as to warrant the conclusion that the restriction had no effect whatever on the value of the land.

[5] The other element, i. e., the loss of resales, was too remote to be allowed as an item of damages. The measure of damages for the breach of a covenant against incumbrances is, ordinarily, the amount which the plaintiff has actually expended in removing the incumbrance, not exceeding the value of the property at the time of the breach. Rawle, Cov. for Title, § 188 et seq.; 2 Suth. Dam. § 622. This rule, which has been embodied in section 3305 of our Civil Code, refers to such incumbrances (e. g., mortgages and other liens) as may be satisfied by the payment of money. It is not applicable to incumbrances like easements or restrictions on the use of land, which cannot be extinguished, at the will of the owner, by the payment of any sum. In such cases the damages are based upon "the natural and proximate consequences to the plaintiff of the existence and continuance of the incumbrance." Rawle, Cov. for Title, § 191. "Just compensation in such cases has generally" (as is said in 2 Suth. Dam. § 627) "been estimated by the amount which the existence of the easement reduces the market value of the land." And so, in a case similar to the present one, where the land was subject to a building restriction, it was ruled that the damages were measured by the difference in the value of the property unrestricted and restricted. Foster v. Foster, 62 N. H. 532.

[6] This is in accord with the general rule providing for the measure of damages for the breach of an obligation arising from contract, i. e., "the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, or which in the ordinary course of things would be likely to result therefrom." Civ. Code, § 3300. But the loss resulting to the grantee from his inability to complete a particular sale does not meet the requirements of this test. There is, in the record before us, neither allegation nor proof that the plaintiff and his associates, in conveying to the defendants, were informed that the latter were buying for the purpose of resale. In the absence of such showing, at any rate, it cannot be said that the failure of the purchaser to sell the lots at a price which he might have obtained was the proximate result of the breach of the covenant, or a detriment, likely, in the ordinary course of things, to result therefrom.

[7] "In awarding damages for the nonperformance of an existing contract, the gains or profits of collateral enterprises in which the party claiming them has been induced to engage by relying upon the performance of such a contract, and of which no notice has been given the other party, cannot be included." 1 Suth. Dam. § 47. The claim of the defendants for loss of resales falls within the principle thus stated, which has often been recognized by this court. Friend, etc., Co. v. Miller, 67 Cal. 464, 8 Pac. 40; Mitchell v. Clarke, 71 Cal. 163, 11 Pac. 882, 60 Am. Rep. 529; Elder v. Kutner, 97 Cal. 490, 32 Pac. 563; Martin v. Deetz, 102 Cal. 55, 36 Pac. 368, 41 Am. St. Rep. 151; Shoemaker v. Acker, 116 Cal. 239, 48 Pac. 62. An authority more directly in point is Harrington v. Murphy, 109 Mass. 299, where, in an action for breach of a covenant against incumbrances, it was held that the plaintiff could not recover expenses incurred in making a sale which the purchaser refused to complete upon discovering the incumbrance. Such expense, said the court, was "too remote and indirect to be an element of damages."

Concluding, as we do, that the finding on the issue of damage is supported by the evidence, and is sufficient to sustain the judgment against the counterclaim, we see no other point requiring notice.

The judgment is affirmed.

DUNPHY v. DUNPHY. (S. F. 5,685.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 28, 1911. Rehearing Denied Dec. 27, 1911.)

1. MARRIAGE (§ 58*)—ANNULMENT—MENTAL INCOMPETENCY.

In order that a marriage may be set aside because of mental incapacity of one of the parties, the mental derangement must be shown to have been one having a direct bearing on the particular act; the test being whether the party was capable of understanding the obligations assumed by the marriage.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1010*)—FINDINGS—REVIEW.

In a suit to annul a marriage because of plaintiff's alleged unsoundness of mind at the time it was contracted, a finding that he had not sufficient mental capacity to legally contract a marriage would be sustained on appeal, unless there was a total lack of substantial evidence to support it.

SLOSS, J. On the 22d day of June, 1909, a marriage ceremony was performed between James C. Dunphy and Lydia M. Valencia. Six days later, the plaintiff, James C. Dunphy, commenced this action to annul said marriage by filing a complaint in which he alleged that, at the time of the ceremony, he was so intoxicated from alcoholic drinks that he had no comprehension of what he was doing, or of the nature or effect of said ceremony, and that, by reason of said intoxication, he was then mentally incompetent to contract marriage. He alleged, further, that at all times after the ceremony and until the commencement of the action he had been intoxicated and had not had normal control of his mental faculties; that as soon as he realized the purport and effect of said ceremony, on the 26th day of June, 1909, he had left the defendant, and had not thereafter cohabited with her. The defendant demurred, denying the allegations of plaintiff's intoxication and incompetency, and averring that he had voluntarily cohabited with her. She also cross-complained, alleging the marriage, desertion of her by plaintiff, his possession and her want of means, and asking a judgment for maintenance. The plaintiff answered the cross-complaint. Subsequently, on November 15, 1909, an amended complaint, seeking annulment of the marriage upon an allegation that plaintiff, at the time of the marriage and ever since, had been of unsound mind, was filed in the name of plaintiff, by Jennie C. Dunphy, his guardian ad litem. The appointment of the guardian was alleged to have been made on November 10, 1909. To this amended complaint, after filing a demurrer, which was overruled, the defendant answered, denying the appointment of the guardian and the unsoundness of mind of the plaintiff, and averring voluntary cohabitation. The case was tried, and the court found as facts the due appointment of the guardian, that the parties were married as alleged, that plaintiff at the time of said marriage was of unsound mind, that plaintiff had never, since the marriage, freely cohabited with the defendant as her husband, and that he had continued to be of unsound mind from the time of the marriage until after the 21st day of July, 1909, the day upon which he finally left the defendant. Judgment annulling the marriage followed. The defendant appeals from the judgment, bringing up the evidence by means of a bill of exceptions.

The principal contention of the appellant is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding that plaintiff was of unsound mind at the time of the marriage and during the time of his cohabitation with the defendant.

[1] This court has never had occasion to define the degree of unsoundness of mind which will authorize a judgment annulling a marriage. But we take it that the question of what is an unsound mind must, in cases of this character, be determined by the same tests which are applied in any case where it is sought to set aside the contract or other act of a person alleged to be insane. It is universally held that a variation from a normal mental condition is not in itself enough to avoid every act. The mental defect or derangement must be one having a direct bearing upon the particular act which is brought in question. Thus, in will contests, the validity of the testamentary effort is not affected by delusions on the part of the testator, unless the delusions are such as to have been "operative in the testamentary act." In re Redfield, 116 Cal. 637, 48 Pac. 794. They must have a relation to some person or object affected by the will. Id. In Estate of McKenna, 143 Cal. 580, 77 Pac. 461, this court upheld an instruction to the effect that it was only such insane delusions as actually influenced the testatrix in the making of the will, and which caused its production to the prejudice and injury of the contestants, which would invalidate the will. So, in criminal cases, a partial insanity, or an insanity with respect to certain subjects, is not incompatible with the possession of mental capacity sufficient to make the party liable to punishment for his acts. People v. Willard, 150 Cal. 543, 89 Pac. 124. The same reasoning is to be applied when the question is the mental capacity of a party to contract marriage. "The true test in actions to annul a marriage on account of insanity at the time of the marriage," says Nelson (Div. & Sep. § 658), "is whether the party was capable of understanding the obligations assumed by marriage." The capacity requisite to a valid marriage is defined, in Durham v. Durham, 10 Prob. Div. 80, as "a capacity to understand the nature of the contract, and the duties and responsibilities which it creates." See, also, Kern v. Kern, 51 N. J. Eq. 574, 26 Atl. 837; Lewis v. Lewis, 44 Minn. 124, 46 N. W. 323, 9 L. R. A. 505, 20 Am. St. Rep. 559; St. George v. Biddeford, 76 Me. 593. The learned judge below undertook, as appears from his opinion contained in the transcript, to apply this test to the evidence before him, and, so applying it, reached the conclusion that Dunphy, at the time of the marriage and while he was cohabiting with the defendant, did not possess the mental capacity to understand the nature of the duties and obligations imposed by the marriage contract. Was there enough evidence to justify this conclusion?

[2] The testimony, the greater part of which deals with this issue, is voluminous, covering almost 650 pages of the printed transcript. It would prolong this opinion beyond all reasonable bounds to give more than the briefest summary of the facts testified to by the large number of witnesses called. In referring to the testimony, we must constantly bear in mind that the determination of issues of fact is primarily for the trial court, and that the findings of that court are to be overthrown on appeal only when they totally lack the support of substantial evidence. We are not empowered to determine, as an original question, whether the plaintiff was or was not of unsound mind. Our duty begins and ends with the inquiry whether the trial court had before it evidence upon which an unprejudiced mind might reasonably have reached the conclusion which was reached. Conflicts of testimony are deemed to have been finally resolved in the court below. Accordingly, the testimony in support of the finding attacked, if sufficient to support that finding, is all that need be mentioned in this opinion, and this testimony must, so far as it is subject to differing inferences, be read in the light most favorable to the party prevailing below.

The plaintiff was the only son of wealthy parents, and from his early youth had followed no regular occupation, with the exception of giving some casual and intermittent attention to the affairs of his father's estate, in which he was interested. For many years, he had been addicted to the habit of drinking intoxicating liquors to excess, taking, as one witness testified, from 20 to 40 drinks of whisky in a day. On one or more occasions his excesses in this direction had brought on attacks of delirium tremens. He was frequently seen in public places in a condition of helpless intoxication. He was unable, in conversation, to concentrate his mind upon a subject under discussion, showed little intelligent interest in his own business affairs, was vacillating and uncertain, as well as suspicious, and showed signs of failing memory.

In support of the allegations of the complaint, a number of witnesses, having first qualified as intimate acquaintances of Dunphy, expressed the opinion that he was of unsound mind. In accordance with the provision of the Code of Civil Procedure (section 1870, subd. 10), each of these witnesses gave "the reason for the opinion." The appellant undertakes to analyze the various reasons so given, and argues that they are not adequate to justify the conclusion drawn from them. Reliance is placed upon Estate of Dolbeer, 149 Cal. 227, 86 Pac. 695, where it was said that the opinion of an intimate acquaintance respecting the mental sanity of a person "can have no weight other than that which the reasons" (upon which it is based) "bring to its support." We do not understand this to mean that the appellate court is to put itself in the position of the trial court, and, from an examination of the reasons assigned, determine as an original question whether the opinion of the witness is to be given any weight or is to be rejected. No doubt the reasons assigned may be so irrelevant or inconsequential as to deprive the opinion, professedly based upon them, of any probative value. This, as the court viewed it, was the situation in the Dolbeer Case.

[3] But where the reasons assigned have some bearing on the question of mental capacity, it is for the court below to determine the weight to be given to the opinion of the witness. The statute expressly permits such opinion to be given in evidence, and it must contemplate that some weight may be attributed to the opinion, over and above that which would follow, as matter of necessary inference, from the reasons assigned. If this were not so, there would be no justification for permitting an intimate acquaintance to state his opinion at all. He should then be restricted to a statement of his observations of the person whose sanity was questioned, and a conclusion on the ultimate question of soundness or unsoundness of mind would have to be drawn by the trial court or jury from the facts so stated. But it may be that an intimate acquaintance has a well-founded opinion on this subject, without being able to recall, or to formulate in words, all of the impressions which by their cumulative force have led his mind to the opinion. (Indeed, some of the witnesses here declared that this was, virtually, their situation.) The opinion itself is not for that reason worthless; nor is its weight to be judged solely by the conclusion which another mind might draw from a recital of the reasons which the witness is able to give. If, as we have said, those reasons furnished any logical support for the opinion declared, the opinion, in and of itself, is to be given such weight as the trial court may think it deserves.

[4] With reference to the testimony in this case, it would be impracticable to follow counsel into the field they have entered, and to discuss the multitude of incidents, many of them no doubt trivial in themselves, brought forward by those testifying to their opinion that Dunphy was of unsound mind. We must content ourselves with the statement that some, at least, of these witnesses fortified their opinions by a recital of reasons which had some legitimate bearing upon the question at issue. In this connection, we may cite, in addition to the facts stated by intimate acquaintances regarding Dunphy's habits of life, the account given by himself to witness Curtis of a former marriage contracted by him. On January 3, 1903, he notified Curtis that he had been married on the preceding night, and requested that his family be informed. On the following day he told Curtis that he had not wanted to marry the lady, that the marriage had taken place, in effect, at a moment's notice, that he did not know what he was doing at the time, and that he thought a thousand dollars would "call it off." We mention this, out of many circumstances shown in the record, because it has a more direct bearing on the question of the plaintiff's capacity to understand the nature of the marriage relation and the obligations attendant upon it.

Besides this, the plaintiff introduced the testimony of three medical experts. In response to hypothetical questions, embodying the showing made by plaintiff's witnesses concerning his intemperate life, each of these witnesses testified that a person who had led such life would be of unsound mind. One of them said that drinking to the extent stated "would have the effect of inducing a mental disease by producing an organic change in the brain. * * * He would necessarily be of unsound mind. * * * His brain has so degenerated by the use of whisky that his thoughts are as liable to be abnormal as normal," even when he is "not under the influence of liquor." The others testified that the person supposed was "of unsound mind."

The circumstances attending the marriage of the parties were, to say the least, peculiar. Dunphy and the defendant had been acquainted for a number of years. The exact nature of their relations does not appear. It was shown, however, that, while both resided in the same city (San Francisco), Dunphy had not, prior to the day of the marriage, visited the defendant at her home. There was no engagement, no exchange or giving of a ring or other presents. According to the testimony, the parties agreed, on the morning of the 22d of June, 1909, to be married, and on the same day, without any further preparation, without having made a change of clothing, or any provision for a wedding journey or a place of residence following the proposed marriage, they went in an automobile, accompanied by several friends of the defendant, to Redwood City, where a license was obtained, and a marriage ceremony was performed by a justice of the peace. On the road to Redwood City, and a few hours before the ceremony, the party had stopped at a roadhouse. A witness who saw them there testified that Dunphy was "very badly under the influence of liquor, or extremely intoxicated"; that he appeared disheveled, and his dress seemed to be more or less disarranged. While the evidence makes it probable that the demeanor of plaintiff at the time the ceremony was performed did not indicate to those who were present that he was intoxicated, the trial court may well have concluded, from all the facts before it, that he was still under the influence of liquor to such an extent as to affect his capacity for rational thought and action. In this connection it may be noted that there was testimony that Dunphy had been seen in a state of pronounced intoxication during every day from the 13th to the 17th of June, 1909, while he was in Sacramento, and that he was intoxicated after his return to San Francisco on the 20th of June, and again on the 21st, the day preceding that of the ceremony. Following the ceremony, the parties returned to San Francisco, and took up their abode in the defendant's flat. On the next day, the morning newspapers of San Francisco, containing articles relative to the marriage, were read by Dunphy. Among these publications was one which depicted the plaintiff as a dissipated spendthrift, and described the defendant's character and antecedents at some length in terms that would necessarily have been extremely offensive to any one entertaining any feeling of respect for her. The ceremony itself was represented as preceded and followed by drunken revels. Without going into greater detail regarding the contents of this article, we may say that it is almost inconceivable that they would not have aroused the deepest resentment and indignation in Dunphy, if he had possessed a rational understanding of the nature and the obligations of marriage. Yet, after reading the papers, he expressed himself as "not at all displeased with them," and said that "they were all very easy."

The testimony concerning Dunphy's condition during the period following his advent at the defendant's flat was such as to justify the inference that his mental capacity, so far as it depended upon his freedom from the influence of alcohol, did not improve during the time of his residence with the defendant. It was testified to that on the 26th day of June he was under the influence of liquor, and "was tapering off." On the 27th he was intoxicated, and on the 28th, the day on which the original complaint was filed, he was in a state of helpless intoxication. On the same day, he returned to defendant's flat, remained there two days, during which he did not become sober, and then left with his nurse for Paraiso Springs. After having been at the springs a few days, he again became intoxicated, and remained so until the 7th of July, when a friend of the defendant appeared and brought him back. He arrived at the defendant's flat on July 9th and remained there until the 21st or 22d of July, when he finally left the defendant. While there is a conflict of testimony on this point, the trial court had before it enough to justify the conclusion that he did not regain a condition of complete sobriety during this period.

Under this showing, we think it cannot be said, as matter of law, that the evidence was not sufficient to sustain the trial court in its finding that Dunphy was incompetent, mentally, to contract marriage, and that his incompetency continued while he was cohabiting with the defendant. His excessive indulgence in alcoholic drink, persisted in for so many years; the testimony of qualified experts regarding the effect upon the mind of such excess; the evidence of irrational and peculiar conduct; the unusual circumstances attending the marriage; the fact that the ceremony took place in the midst of a prolonged debauch or "spree," and that he continued to be more or less affected by liquor while he remained with the defendant; the actions of the plaintiff indicating a want of proper understanding of the relation and obligations of matrimony; the opinions of many reputable persons, who, after an intimate acquaintance with Dunphy, thought he was of unsound mind—all of these considerations, taken together, made a case which vested in the trial court the power of drawing an inference, conclusive upon the appellate court, of the soundness or unsoundness of the plaintiff's mind. That a finding contrary to the one made would find adequate support in the record is beyond question. But, even though we might think, on a mere reading of the transcript, that the preponderance of the evidence was with the appellant, we would not be authorized to overthrow the finding. As we said at the outset of this discussion, the determination of the trial judge on issues of fact is binding, unless it be without substantial evidence to support it. It does not lack such support here.

[5] The other points urged for reversal require but brief consideration. There was no error in appointing a guardian ad litem for plaintiff. Such appointment on behalf of an insane or incompetent party may be made "when it is deemed by the court in which the action or proceeding is prosecuted, or by a judge thereof, expedient. * * *" Code Civ. Proc. § 372. The order was made on the application of a relative, as provided by section 373 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and there was evidence tending to show that plaintiff was incompetent.

[6] It is also claimed that the court erred in permitting an amended complaint to be filed. The granting of leave to file amended pleadings is a matter peculiarly within the discretion of the trial court. There is nothing to indicate that the discretion was abused in this instance.

The appellant suggests that the court erred in failing to find upon certain issues. But we think these issues, so far as they were material, were met by the findings which were made.

The judgment is affirmed.

11. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 74*)—LEASES—RIGHTS OF LESSEES.

Where a lessee in an oil and gas lease, with a right to develop 160 acres of land for oil, gas, and mineral, and sell the same when acquired, executed a lease to a third person to develop 120 acres for oil, gas, and mineral, the third person, if acquiring the right of possession, could sue for the possession, and to restrain others from interfering with his possession and taking oil from the land.

12. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 74*)—LEASES—RIGHTS OF LESSEES.

An oil and gas lease for 50 years gave the lessee the right to develop the land described for oil, gas, and mineral, and to sell the same when acquired. The lessee leased to a third person, for 20 years, the exclusive right to drill wells on a part of the land and take oil therefrom, but required the drilling to begin within a specified time, and to continue with diligence to a specified depth, unless oil was sooner found. The lessee agreed to protect the third person in his possession during the term, and to give him the further right, after the 20 years, to remain in possession of such part of the premises as should be required to enable him to operate wells thereon that were then producing oil. The lessee reserved the right to enter on the land to inspect the work done by the third person, and the right of the original lessor to reside on the premises, and to farm the land not actually needed for the oil business. Held, that the lease gave to the third person a present right of possession for the specified purposes, and vested in him a corporeal interest in the land for years, and he could enjoin another, claiming under a lease from the original lessor, from interfering with him.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by W. F. Chandler and another against William H. Hart and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Wm. H. H. Hart and Aylett R. Cotton (M. F. McCormick, of counsel), for appellants. Sutherland & Barbour, M. B. Harris, and E. M. Harris, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The defendants appeal from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

The complaint alleges that the plaintiffs at all times mentioned were the owners of a tract of land containing 120 acres; that they were in possession thereof in March, 1909; and that the defendants on that day ousted them, took possession of the land, and have ever since held the same. They pray for the recovery of possession and damages, and for an injunction to prevent defendants from boring wells or extracting oil from the land. Judgment was given, declaring that plaintiffs were entitled to the possession of the land, with the right to occupy it for the purpose of mining and developing it and carrying out a certain lease, executed on March 6, 1909, by the Fearon Oil Company to the plaintiffs. This lease purported to let, lease, and demise to the plaintiffs, for the period of 20 years, the exclusive right, privilege, and easement of sinking wells in the land, and taking, appropriating, and selling oil and gas therefrom, yielding to the lessor a royalty thereon.

At the time this lease was executed, the only right or title which the Fearon Oil Company had to the land was under a certain instrument, executed by Joseph Fearon and wife to said Fearon Oil Company on September 6, 1907, leasing a tract of 160 acres, including the 120 acres afterwards leased, as aforesaid, by that company to the plaintiffs. Joseph Fearon at that time owned the land in fee. Defendants claim under a lease, made by Fearon and wife to the defendant the California-Coalinga Oil Company on March 6, 1909. The respective rights of the parties to this action in the land depend upon the validity and effect of the lease by Joseph Fearon to said Fearon Oil Company. Omitting the formal description of the parties and property, we give this lease in full. Fearon and his wife were named as parties of the first part and said Fearon Oil Company as the party of the second part:

"That the said parties of the first part for and in consideration of the issuance and delivery to them of five hundred and twenty-five thousand (525,000) shares of the capital stock of the Fearon Oil Company, full paid up, receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, does by these presents lease and demise unto the said party of the second part and to its successors and assigns (subject to the provisions and limitations hereinafter mentioned) (describing the 160-acre tract) for a term of fifty years from the 24th day of August, A. D. 1907.

"It is mutually agreed and understood that the said Fearon Oil Company shall have the right to explore and develop said lands for the purpose of removing therefrom oil, gas and such other minerals as the same may contain; to erect thereon the necessary works and machinery, tanks, pipes, and all other appliances required for carrying out the purposes mentioned in the articles of incorporation of the Fearon Oil Company; and to establish and maintain any business or enterprise allowed within the scope of the business of said corporation.

"This lease is made upon the express provision and agreement that the shares of stock delivered to the said parties of the first part in payment therefor shall never be assessed while the same or any of said shares of stock shall remain the property of the said parties of the first part, and in the event said party of the second part shall levy an assessment upon the same or the attempt to collect from the said first parties, or either of them, any assessment upon said shares of stock, then, and in that event, this lease shall immediately terminate. and the said parties of the first part shall have, and they are hereby given, the right to eject therefrom all agents, officers or employés of the said party of the second part.

"It is further understood and agreed that there is now standing upon the land described a residence owned and occupied by the said parties of the first part, and the said parties of the first part are hereby given the right to continue and maintain said residence where the same is now located, together with all necessary buildings in connection therewith and to have free and uninterrupted access over and upon said lands not actually used or needed for the business of said second party, for the purpose of farming the same; and the right to farm said lands is hereby expressly reserved to said parties of the first part.

"This agreement shall bind the successors, assigns, heirs, executors and administrators of the said parties of the first part."

The said articles of incorporation of the Fearon Oil Company show that the capital stock of that corporation was $1,000,000, divided into 1,000,000 shares, of the par value of $1 each. The articles state the purposes of the corporation to be "to explore, acquire, exchange, develop and deal in oil and gas lands; to acquire, build, maintain, operate and dispose of pipe lines for conveying and conducting oil, gas, water and fluids of every description and to acquire, hold, enjoy and dispose of rights of way for the purposes thereof and for other purposes; to purchase, sell, lease, deal in, exchange, convey and accept conveyances of real property, and to mortgage and hypothecate the same; to improve, develop and cultivate lands whether mineral or agricultural, or adapted for any other use whatsoever; to refine, manufacture, buy, sell and deal in minerals and mineral products and personal property of every description and generally to acquire, hold, manage, improve and dispose of such real and personal property and to do such other things necessary and proper for the full and complete execution of the purposes set forth above, and for the exercise of the powers and transactions of the business of the corporation for the creation of which we have hereby associated ourselves."

[1, 2] 1. The lease above set forth was duly executed by Fearon and his wife, but it was not signed by the Fearon Oil Company, or by any one in its behalf. Defendants contend that it could not have any effect, unless it was duly executed by the corporation as the party of the second part. There is no merit in this objection. The lease contains no covenants on the part of the lessee to which its signature was necessary as evidence of its consent thereto. The conditions contained therein became binding upon the lessee by virtue of its execution by the lessors and its acceptance by the lessee. Its execution became effectual and complete upon delivery to and acceptance by the Fearon Oil Company. Thornton on Oil Leases, § 85; Castro v. Gaffey, 96 Cal. 424, 31 Pac. 363; Crescent, etc., Co. v. Simpson, 77 Cal. 290, 19 Pac. 426; 1 Underhill on L. and T. § 232. The evidence shows, without conflict, that the instrument was delivered to the Fearon Oil Company, and that it was accepted by that company with intent to take under it. This was sufficient to bind the company to the performance of the conditions expressed therein. Even if it is true that Fearon might have insisted upon a formal execution by the company, as suggested in Castro v. Gaffey, supra, where there were covenants to be performed by the lessee, his conduct in delivering it without such formality was a waiver thereof, and it became at once operative against him, his heirs and assigns.

2. It is next claimed by defendants that the lease was inoperative, because the Fearon Oil Company did not explore or develop the land, or any part of it, or discover oil thereon, or take oil therefrom, prior to the lease to the plaintiffs of the 120 acres, on March 6, 1909, or at all, nor do anything on the land to carry out the purposes expressed in the instrument. It is argued that, under the terms of the instrument, no estate or interest in the land would vest in the lessee, unless it did something upon the land in performance of the purposes for which it took the lease, and that, having no interest itself, it could not transfer any to the plaintiffs.

[3] The instrument purports "to lease and demise" the land to the Fearon Oil Company for the term of 50 years from its date, September 6, 1907. It further declares that that company shall have "the right to explore and develop said lands for the purpose of removing therefrom oil, gas" and other minerals, and to erect thereon the works, machinery, tanks, and pipes necessary to carry out the purposes stated in its articles of incorporation. These articles give the company power to acquire, develop, improve, buy, sell, deal in, and dispose of real and personal property and mineral products. These powers and purposes are very broad and comprehensive. They clearly include the business of extracting oil from the land described in the lease, and selling such oil when acquired in that manner. When the entire lease is considered in connection with the articles and the circumstances disclosed by the writings, there can be no doubt that the lease was intended to convey these rights in the land.

[4] It is for these purposes that the instrument demises and leases the land to the company for 50 years. A demise or lease is more than a license to enter and occupy for a specified purpose. A demise is defined as "a conveyance, either in fee, for life, or for years," and as "a lease or a conveyance for a term of years." 1 Bouv. Law Dic. The use of the word "demise" creates an implied warranty of title and a covenant for quiet enjoyment. Id.; Anderson's Law Dic.; 1 Taylor on Landl. & Ten. § 252. A lease is a "conveyance by way of demise" (1 Bouv. Law Dic.), or "a conveyance by the owner of an estate to another of a portion of his interest therein for a term less than his own" (Anderson's Law Dic.). It passes a present interest in the land for the period specified. 1 Taylor Landl. & Ten. § 14a. This instrument, therefore, granted to and vested in the Fearon Oil Company a present interest and estate in the land for the term of 50 years, for the purposes specified. The right to develop, extract, and market oil therefrom must likewise endure for that period, unless forfeited by a breach of the conditions of the lease.

[5] A lease may, of course, limit the uses which the tenant may make of the land, and the purposes for which he shall have the right of possession. This lease does limit the rights of the tenant by particularly describing them. The implication is that it shall not be used by it for other purposes. The result is that the lessee was granted an estate in the land for 50 years for the purposes of discovering oil therein, and of extracting and selling it, with the other incidental rights mentioned. The only conditions of the lease are those referring to the effect of an assessment upon the shares of stock given to Fearon as a consideration for the lease, and reserving to Fearon the right to reside on the land and farm it. There is no claim that either of these conditions have been broken. The lease does not require the lessee to begin operations under the lease within any specified time within the term. Forfeitures are not favored in law or equity. We know of no rule declaring that a demise of land for such purposes, upon a full consideration received in advance, is forfeited by a failure of the lessee to develop and extract the oil, unless such right of forfeiture is reserved in the demise, either expressly or by necessary implication, from the expressed terms.

There are so-called "oil leases" of which this may be true. In them, the so-called lessee is granted the right to enter upon the land within a limited time, for the purpose of making a discovery of oil. If, upon due search, none is found, the right of entry and possession ceases. If oil is found, the lessee is then given a further right, which then usually becomes a vested right in the oil in place, it being while so situated a part of the land, and this right carries with it the vested right to occupy the land for the purpose of extracting it, usually for a named period, or until the oil is exhausted, and conditioned upon the diligent prosecution of the work. A contract of this character was considered in Brookshire Oil Co. v. Casmalia, etc., Co., 156 Cal. 211, 103 Pac. 927. Defendants' counsel cite this and other similar cases, wherein it is held that, under such contracts, no title to the oil or interest in the lands passes until the oil is found, or, in some cases, that no title to the oil passes until it is extracted, and that the estate and right of possession of the lessee in the premises ceases if he does not diligently prosecute to success the work of discovery and the work of extraction after discovery. These decisions are not in point here. In each of them the rights of the parties were controlled by the particular conditions expressed in the contract limiting or forfeiting the right of the licensee or the estate of the lessee. No such conditions are found in the Fearon lease. Cases are also cited of leases for farming purposes upon an annual rent, consisting of a part of the annual crops raised by the tenant, in which it is decided that the tenant forfeits his term if he fails to plant the crop which was to provide the rent. It is said that in such cases there is an implied covenant to plant such crop in due time. Manifestly these cases do not apply where the rent is paid in advance, as in the case at bar. No conditions have been violated, the rent is fully paid, and consequently the estate and right of possession continues to exist, notwithstanding the failure of the company to do any of the work contemplated by the parties to the lease, or to make a discovery of oil in the land.

[6] The estate of the lessee is not a mere possibility, not coupled with an interest, which, by section 1045 of the Civil Code, is not transferable, but is a present, subsisting estate for years, which may be transferred, the same as any other species of property. Civ. Code, § 1044. There is no condition or covenant in the lease forbidding the lessee to assign the lease, or to sublet the premises or part thereof. Hence the conclusion necessarily follows that the lessee had the right to make the sublease to the plaintiffs for only 120 acres of the land, unless there is something in the nature of the estate demised by the original lease which forbids such subletting of a part.

3. It is earnestly contended by the defendants that the estate and right given by the lease to the Fearon Oil Company is indivisible; that a part of the premises could not be lawfully sublet without Fearon's consent; and that by attempting to sublet the 120 acres to the plaintiffs the entire estate of the lessees was terminated and extinguished. In support of this proposition, they cite the following cases: Mountjoy's Case, 1 Godbolt, 17; Caldwell v. Fulton, 31 Pa. 475, 72 Am. Dec. 760; Grubb v. Bayard, 2 Wall., Jr. 81, Fed. Cas. No. 5,849; Funk v. Haldeman, 53 Pa. 229; Harlow v. Lake Superior I. Co., 36 Mich. 105; Smith v. Cooley, 65 Cal. 46, 2 Pac. 880; Hughes v. Devlin, 23 Cal. 502; Hall v. Vernon, 47 W. Va. 297, 34 S. E. 764, 81 Am. St. Rep. 791.

The foundation of all these decisions is the Mountjoy Case. It was decided in 1583, during the reign of Queen Elizabeth. It is reported in Godbolt, as above, and also in Anderson, 307, Moore, 174, 4 Leonard, 147, and in Coke on Littleton, 164b. The case, as reported in Godbolt, states the reasons for the rule briefly, but clearly. We give the report on this point in full, retaining the archaic orthography:

"The Lord Mountjoy by deed, indented and inrolled, did bargaine and sell the manor of Camford to Brown in fee; and in the indenture this clause is contained, provided alwayes, and the said Brown covenants, and grants to, and with the Lord Mountjoy, his heirs and assigns, that the Lord Mountjoy, his heirs and assigns, may digg for ore within the land in Camford, which was a great waste; and also to digg turffe there to make allome and coperess, without any contradiction of said Brown, his heirs and assigns. They agreed, that the Lord Mountjoy could not devide the said interest, viz., to grant to one to digg within a parcel of said waste. And they also agreed, that notwithstanding that Grant, that Brown, his heirs and assigns, owners of the soile, might digg there, also, like to the case of common sans nomber. The case went further, that the Lord Mountjoy had devised this interest to one Laicott for one and twenty years, and that Laicott had assigned the same over to two other men; and whether this assignment was good or not was the question; forasmuch that if the assignment might be good to them, it might be to twenty; and that might be a surcharge to the tenant of the soile. And as to that the justices did agree, that the assignment was good; but that the two assigness could not work severally, but together with one stock, or such workmen as belonged to them both."

The reservation in the deed was as follows: "That it shall be lawful for the said Lord Mountjoy, his heirs and assigns, at all times hereafter to have, take and dig, in and upon the heath ground of the said premises, from time to time, sufficient ores, heath, turves, and other necessaries for the making of alum and copperas." See Anderson, supra, and Caldwell v. Fulton, supra, 31 Pa. 485.

It will be seen that the main reason here given for the proposition that a right to mine in the land of another cannot be divided and transferred as to a parcel only, and cannot be enjoyed by co-owners separately, but only "together with one stock," is that if this could be done a similar right might be given to 20 persons, which "might be a surcharge to the tenant of the soil;" that is, to the lessor or owner of the fee. The idea is twofold: First, that the owner of the soil has a common right to dig for the same ore, and the giving of the same right, separately, to more than the number originally provided, would permit mine openings in many different places, thereby unduly interfering with the owner in the enjoyment of his own mining right, contrary to the intent of the reservation, which implies a single right and a single use of it; and, second, that the owner has the right to make other uses of the land, and this multiplying of the persons and places where the mining right was to be exercised by others, under a reservation which was construed to give only a right to mine "with one stock," would impair the other uses of the owner to a greater extent than the reservation intended.

It is clear that the lease to the Fearon Oil Company, in effect, gives to the company the exclusive right to develop and take the oil, and that Fearon thereafter had no right to do so in common with the company. This is not expressly declared, but the respective provisions necessarily imply it. It leases and demises "all" the land described. This, as above stated, covenants for the quiet enjoyment of all by the lessee. It provides that the lessee shall have the right to explore, develop, and take oil from all of it, except that required for the Fearon residence. The only restriction as to area, and the only reservation as to possession or enjoyment by Fearon, is the paragraph giving Fearon and his wife the right to occupy the house then standing on the land, and the buildings in connection therewith, as a place of residence, and the right to "free and uninterrupted access over and upon said lands, not actually used or needed for the business of said second party, for the purpose of farming the same," and reserving the right to farm said lands. Nothing is here said about Fearon and wife taking oil, or using the land for any purpose, except for farming and in part as a residence, and the language quoted does, in effect give the company the paramount right to the exclusive use and possession, so far as necessary for its business of raising the oil. See, on this point, Caldwell v. Fulton, supra, 31 Pa. 479, 483; Funk v. Haldeman, supra, 53 Pa. 247. Therefore, so far as the rule of the Mountjoy Case is based on the fact that the lessor and lessee have a common right to develop and take the oil, the reason is wanting, and the rule, being in derogation of the right conveyed, should not prevail.

Whatever force there may have been in the second branch of the reason under the conditions of law and fact prevailing in England in the sixteenth century, or as applied to the mining of coal and mineral ores, it does not seem to justify the application of the rule of the Mountjoy Case to a lease of a large body of land for the purpose of extracting the oil from it, and especially to the particular lease here involved. The basis of it is the inconvenience to the owner of the land in his use thereof that would arise if a large number of persons were occupying the land in the exercise of the granted right at the same time. Because of this inconvenience, it will not be presumed that he intended such right to be exercised by more than one, unless he so declares in the lease or grant, either directly or indirectly. Thus, it is said, a grant of common of pasture, without stint as to amount, was nevertheless limited at common law to the use by a reasonable number only of the grantee's cattle, and it could not be aliened to several, so as to be enjoyable by each separately, because in each case the right would be enlarged by the additional use, and the grantor's estate would be burdened more than was contemplated. In the case of ores and coal, the usual method of taking them, and perhaps the only practicable one, is to sink a shaft or run a drift to the ore bed or vein, and obtain the mineral by means of underground workings from such shaft or drift. A grant or lease of a mining right for coal or ores would create a presumption that this method was understood and intended, and that it was expected to cause little interference with the ordinary use of the surface.

This is not true with respect to mineral oil. It lies far below the surface. It can be extracted only by means of wells. Each well is separate from every other, and by means of it the oil can be taken only from a limited area of four or five acres immediately surrounding it. For this reason, the extraction of oil from the whole of a large tract granted by an ordinary oil lease requires, not one "stock," or one well, as a means of access to the whole deposit of oil, but a separate and independent well upon every few acres of the oil-bearing territory. The tract must be dotted with wells, each as separate and distinct in its installation and operation as if owned by different persons. Consequently, one who leases his land for this purpose necessarily understands and intends that as many wells will be sunk and operated thereon as may be required to raise all the oil in it. His own possession and use of the surface will be substantially as much interfered with by the operation of all these wells under one management as it would be if each well was operated independently by a different person. If his rent is paid by a royalty, as is common, it will be to his advantage to have the oil taken out rapidly, and this may often be better done by subletting in tracts to different persons than by keeping it in control of one person or corporation. The conditions are the very opposite of those which support the rule of the Mountjoy Case. "When the reason of a rule ceases, so should the rule itself." Civ. Code, § 3510.

If this is so with respect to an ordinary oil lease upon a royalty, it is much more so in the case of the lease to the Fearon Oil Company. That company was organized on August 24, 1907, with 1,000,000 shares of stock, of which only 653,000 have been issued. The lease was made 12 days after the company was incorporated. As a consideration for the lease, the company issued to Fearon 525,000 shares of its capital stock.

The lease constitutes practically all of the property of the company. Fearon owned nearly all of the stock, and was in potential control of the company. In practical effect, he leased the land to himself. The consideration for the lease was complete, and fully paid upon its execution, by the issuance to him of said stock. But his actual profit must come from the dividends to be paid by the company upon that stock. The amount of these dividends would depend upon the number of wells in operation and the quantity of oil taken. It was to his interest to have as many wells in operation as possible. The corporation had no means, and could obtain money to develop and extract the oil only by borrowing or by selling some of the treasury stock. It is easily to be seen that it would be greatly to its advantage, and to Fearon's advantage also, to have the power to sublet parcels to others, who would extract the oil and pay a rental or royalty.

For these reasons, we are of the opinion that the rule of the Mountjoy Case is inapplicable, and that the estate of the Fearon Oil Company, whether capable of being justly partitioned between tenants in common or not, could be sublet in smaller parcels to different subtenants. In Hughes v. Devlin, supra, the court held that mining claims upon public lands of the United States were corporeal interests in land, and, as such, were subject to partition, if owned by tenants in common. The case, in effect, supports our conclusion. In Smith v. Cooley, supra, Smith, being the owner in fee, had granted to Cooley a "mining right" in the undivided one-third of the land, and he afterward sued Cooley in partition. The right of Cooley was declared to be an incorporeal hereditament, and not capable of partition. The case is distinguishable from an exclusive oil lease upon the grounds heretofore stated.

4. The clause imposing the condition that the lease shall terminate, if an assessment be levied on the stock of the Fearon Oil Company, provides that upon a breach thereof the lessors shall have the right to eject from the land "all agents, officers or employés" of said company. Appellants, from the phrase quoted, endeavor to deduce the conclusion that the lessors could not eject any person who was not such agent, officer, or employé, and that, therefore, there is an implied covenant against subletting in parcels. The same argument would apply to an assignment or sublease of the whole tract. Without discussion, we think it sufficient to say that, in our opinion, the conclusion is not justifiable on any allowable theory of interpretation.

5. It is claimed that the lease from the Fearon Oil Company to plaintiffs is void, because its execution was not authorized by the lawful board of directors of the company. It runs in the name of the Fearon Oil Company. It is signed by the plaintiffs and by "Fearon Oil Company, by Wm. W. Goldnamer, its Secretary." The corporate seal of the company is attached, and the execution was duly acknowledged. A resolution, authorizing Goldnamer, as secretary, to execute the lease for the company, purporting to have been adopted by the board of directors of the company, was received in evidence.

The defendants assert that the authorization to the secretary to execute the lease to plaintiffs was invalid upon a number of technical grounds. They say the meeting of the directors at which it was authorized was not properly called; that three of the four persons who assumed to act as directors at said meeting were neither directors nor stockholders of the company; that the articles of incorporation limited the number of directors to three persons; that Joseph Fearon, Addison Fearon, and Wm. W. Goldnamer were thereby appointed, and have ever since held and exercised office as such directors; that an attempted increase of the number to seven was illegal, because it was made at a stockholders' meeting illegally called and held by persons not stockholders; that the four additional directors thereupon elected, namely, H. Z. Austin, H. G. Traeger, M. B. Harris, and J. H. Fearon, were not and could not be directors, because there were no additional lawful offices of director to be held or filled; that the only persons present and assuming to act as directors at the meeting were Goldnamer, Austin, Traeger, and Harris, and that Goldnamer alone was a lawful director; and that the by-laws empowered the president to execute the contracts of the company, and did not authorize the secretary to do so.

[8] The evidence shows that the meeting of stockholders at which the increase in the number of directors was made was held on December 13, 1907; that the additional directors were elected on the same day; that a certified copy of the amendment to the articles of incorporation, declaring such increase in the directorate, was duly filed in the offices of the county clerk and Secretary of State; and that, from December 13, 1907, to the day the lease was authorized (March 6, 1909), these persons continued to act as directors of the company, without objection on the part of any stockholder. At the stockholders' meeting of December 13, 1907, all of the 653,000 shares of issued stock were represented, either in person or by proxy, except 2,600 shares. Another meeting of stockholders was held on January 11, 1908, which was attended by the holders of stock amounting to 650,800 shares, at which meeting the proceedings of the stockholders' meeting of December 13, 1907, were ratified. There is no merit in the claim that these persons were not stockholders. They held certificates of stock regularly issued. The objection that the consideration for the stock was not lawfully sufficient cannot be raised to invalidate their action, when third persons have dealt in good faith upon it.

[9] The persons thus chosen as directors, and recognized and permitted to act as such, were at least de facto directors, and their acts were therefore valid, so far as they were acted on in good faith by third persons. "Persons who hold office as directors, or other officers, with the consent of the corporation, and under color of an election or appointment, are de facto officers, although their election or appointment may have been illegal, and their acts as such, in so far as third persons are considered, are just as valid and binding upon the corporation, as if they were officers de jure." 3 Clark & Marshall on Corp. p. 2035, § 6002; Waterman v. Beecher, 101 Cal. 80, 35 Cal. 349; Sherwood v. Wallin, 154 Cal. 735, 99 Pac. 191.

[10] Joseph Fearon was a large stockholder in the Fearon Oil Company, it is true, but he was also its lessor, and as such he stood in the position of a third person to that company, so far as this question is concerned. Defendants have no relation to that company, other than that which they had as privies in estate with Joseph Fearon as such lessor. They have no status as stockholders, and cannot attack the corporate action in that capacity. They are not entitled to act on behalf of that company. The plaintiffs, so far as appears, acted in the honest belief that the persons who authorized the secretary to make the lease were lawful directors. They are therefore protected by the rule above stated against all attacks of the defendants upon the validity of the lease, grounded upon the claim that the directors were usurpers. And as to the plaintiffs the question whether the meeting of directors was a regular meeting or was duly called is immaterial. 2 Cook on Corp. §§ 713a, 725. And so is the objection that the by-laws do not expressly authorize the secretary to sign corporate contracts, but do authorize the president to do so. 2 Cook on Corp. p. 1825, § 725.

We do not think that the principle that there cannot be a de facto officer, unless there is a de jure office for him to hold, is applicable to this case. The same strictness does not obtain as in the case of public offices, which can be created only by law. Stockholders are private persons, and are subject to the principle of estoppel by conduct, as such, and in their relation to the corporate affairs, the same as in any other business matters. They are the human components of the corporation. The statute itself creates the office of director. Civ. Code, § 290. The number of the directors, in excess of three, is entirely dependent on the will of the majority of the stockholders. They have full power to increase the number. If that majority meets and regularly adopts, certifies, and files in the proper offices an amendment to the articles of incorporation, increasing the number of directors, and then suffers the persons so constituted directors to transact the business of the company without objection, the plainest principles of equity and justice would prevent them, or the corporation in their behalf, from asserting the lack of authority of such board of directors, or a lawful quorum thereof, to do business and make contracts for the corporation. We think the better rule is that the corporation is bound by such conduct to this extent, at least, that a third person may safely deal with the corporation on the faith of such a certificate, regular on its face, and without inquiring whether or not the stockholders had been regularly called to meet at the time the change was made; and that a contract authorized by such board, made by a third person in good faith, with the authorized corporate officers, binds the corporation. The plaintiffs' lease is therefore valid.

[11] 6. Appellants contend that the finding that plaintiffs took possession of the land under their lease on March 10, 1909, is not supported by the evidence. There was evidence that they went upon the land on that day and deposited a wagon load of well-drilling tools thereon, intending to bore a well thereon, and that they returned the next day with more tools for that purpose, but were excluded by Joseph Fearon. This was a sufficient entry, if any entry was necessary, to enable them to maintain the action. We do not regard this part of the finding as important or necessary to the judgment. The plaintiffs were thereafter and ever since excluded from the land by the defendants, and the findings so state. The suit is for the recovery of possession, and to enjoin the defendants from extracting oil therefrom. If the plaintiffs had and have the right of possession, this was sufficient to support the judgment given, to the effect that plaintiffs are entitled to the possession of the land for the purpose of drilling wells and taking oil therefrom under their lease from the Fearon Oil Company; and that defendants be enjoined from interfering with plaintiffs' work of well drilling thereon and taking oil therefrom; and that defendants be also enjoined from drilling wells thereon themselves.

[12] There is no merit in the claim that the lease of the Fearon Oil Company to the plaintiffs did not give them any right to the possession of the 120 acres. That lease purports to let, demise, and lease to plaintiffs, for 20 years, the exclusive right to drill wells on the 120 acres and take oil therefrom, the said drilling to begin within 90 days, and to continue with diligence to a depth of 2,500 feet, unless oil was sooner found, and the right to continue thereafter to drill at least eight other wells thereon, and to operate the same; the company agreeing to protect the plaintiffs in their possession during the term, and giving them the further right, after the 20 years, to remain in possession of such part of the premises as should be required to enable them to operate all wells thereon that were then producing oil. It also contained a covenant, in favor of plaintiffs, that they should quietly hold and enjoy the premises for the term. The company reserved only the right to enter upon the land to inspect the work done by plaintiffs, and the right of Joseph Fearon to reside in the house then on the land, and to farm the land not actually used or needed for the business of drilling the wells or removing the oil. This clearly gave the plaintiffs the present right of possession for the purposes specified in the judgment. It vested in them a corporeal interest in the land, an estate for years, with right of possession for a limited purpose. Frisbie v. McClernin, 38 Cal. 571; Gracioso Oil Co. v. Santa Barbara Co., 155 Cal. 144, 99 Pac. 483, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 211; Brookshire Oil Co. v. Casmalia Oil Co., 156 Cal. 215, 103 Pac. 927. The question whether plaintiffs became the absolute owners of the oil, or had any title to it at all before it was raised to the surface, is not material to the case. The issue concerns only the right to the possession of the surface, and the right to protect and keep the oil in place while the plaintiffs are engaged in obtaining it, as provided in their lease.

7. Certain rulings upon the admission and rejection of evidence are assigned as error. The conclusions reached upon the points hereinbefore discussed disposes of all these objections. They are all based on the propositions advanced by defendants, which we have held to be untenable. We do not deem it advisable to extend this opinion by stating or considering them.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

BLAEHOLDER v. GUTHRIE. (Civ. 968.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Oct. 23, 1911.)

1. LIFE ESTATES (§ 25*)—LEASE BY LIFE TENANT—RIGHT TO CROPS.

The death of a life tenant does not deprive his tenant for a year or at will of his right, as against the remainderman, to the crops resulting from the tenant's labor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Life Estates, Cent. Dig. § 47; Dec. Dig. § 25.*]

2. LIFE ESTATES (§ 25*)—LEASE BY LIFE TENANT—RIGHT TO CROPS.

A life tenant executed a lease for a year to a tenant who should be entitled to a half of the crops. After the death of the life tenant, the remainderman gave to the tenant a lease for a year under similar terms. At the time of the execution of the lease, a crop produced under the lease given by the life tenant was matured, but was not harvested. Held, that the subject of the lease made by the remainderman was the crop to be raised during the year specified in the lease, and did not refer to the crop produced the preceding year under the lease executed by the life tenant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Life Estates, Cent. Dig. § 47; Dec. Dig. § 25.*]

3. LIFE ESTATES (§ 25*)—LEASE BY LIFE TENANT—SHARES OF CROPS—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action by a tenant for his share of the crops produced during the term of the lease, defendant claimed that a crop which was matured, but not harvested at the time of the execution of the lease, was the crop referred to in the lease, the tenant could show that he was the owner of such crop, having produced the same while in the possession of the property under a lease given by the life tenant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Life Estates, Dec. Dig. § 25.*]

4. CONTRACTS (§ 169*)—CONSTRUCTION—SITUATION OF PARTIES—EVIDENCE.

Where there is any uncertainty in a contract, it is competent in aid of its interpretation to show the situation of the parties and the surrounding circumstances at the time of the execution of the contract.

5. TRIAL (§ 29*) — MISCONDUCT OF TRIAL JUDGE — RULINGS ON EVIDENCE — STATEMENTS.

A statement by the trial judge, on overruling an objection to evidence, which embodies a correct statement of the law does not amount to misconduct.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by Henry Blaeholder against Sallie Knox Guthrie, as executrix of J. E. Guthrie, deceased, substituted for J. E. Guthrie. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. O. Daniel, for appellant. Clyde Bishop and Williams & Rutan, for respondent.

SHAW, J. On May 1, 1908, plaintiff and J. E. Guthrie, defendant's testator, entered into a written contract of lease, whereby plaintiff was to take care of defendant's ranch, and in consideration of the performance of certain covenants on plaintiff's part, as provided in the contract, defendant was to sell the oranges and walnuts grown thereon and pay plaintiff 50 per cent. of the net proceeds of such sales; it being provided that plaintiff should continue in possession of the property and care for the same, subject to the termination at the will of either party of the relations so created.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Plaintiff's possession of the property under the terms of the contract covered the period from May 1, 1908, to May 31, 1909, when, pursuant to notice given by Guthrie, requesting him so to do, he removed therefrom. At the time of his removal, there was a crop of Valencia oranges, consisting of 1,077 boxes, ripe and matured, and which were picked in the month of June following his removal, and which Guthrie sold and received therefor the sum of $1,186.36. The action was brought upon the contract to recover 50 per cent of this sum. A jury trial was had, with the result that a verdict was rendered in favor of plaintiff for one-half of the proceeds from the sale of the Valencia oranges, and also for the amount of another item, as to which there appears to be no controversy on this appeal. From the judgment entered upon this verdict, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

It appears that on May 1, 1908, when plaintiff and Guthrie made the contract, the crop of oranges grown the preceding year, during which period plaintiff occupied the property under a lease in like terms given him by Guthrie's father, who held a life estate therein, although matured and ready to harvest, had not been gathered; that it was thereafter gathered and plaintiff received one-half of the proceeds of the sale thereof. It is appellant's contention that the oranges grown on the ranch, and which Guthrie, as provided in the contract, was to sell and pay one-half of the proceeds thereof to plaintiff, had reference to the then existing crop grown and produced by plaintiff the preceding year under the lease from the owner of the life estate in the property, and not to the crop which was grown and produced during the year that plaintiff was in possession of the property as a tenant of Guthrie. We cannot assent to this contention. The existing crop had been produced by plaintiff under the terms of the lease for the preceding year. At the time of executing the lease (May 1, 1908), it was matured and ready to harvest and was picked in June.

[1, 2] The death of the holder of the life estate did not deprive the tenant of his right to the crop, the production of which was the result of his year's labor. This by reason of what is termed "the doctrine of emblements," the basis of which is "the justice of assuring to the tenant compensation for his labor, and also upon the desirability of encouraging husbandry as a matter of public policy." Section 251, Tiffany's Landlord and Tenant. "If a life tenant, after making a lease, dies before the end of the term thereby created, the lessee is entitled to take the crops as against the remainderman." Section 251, supra. And the same is true where a tenancy at will is terminated by the death of the holder of the life estate. Plaintiff was the owner and entitled to one-half of the existing crop grown by him in the years 1907 and 1908 as lessee of the life tenant. This being true, it must follow that the subject of the contract, made May 1, 1908, with defendant's testator, was the crop to be grown the year following the making of the lease, one-half of the proceeds from the sale of which was the subject of the action. To hold otherwise would be to place an interpretation upon the contract, the effect of which would deprive plaintiff of any compensation for the labor performed by him in the care and cultivation of the orchard.

[3, 4] At the trial, the defendant interposed objections to certain questions touching the possession and occupancy of the property by plaintiff under the lease given him by the life tenant, claiming that the same were outside the issues. The objections were overruled. There was no error in the rulings, for the reason that the defendant based his defense upon a claim that the crop picked in June, and which had been grown the preceding year, was the one to which the contract had reference. It was, therefore, competent for the plaintiff to show that he was the owner of this crop, having produced the same while in possession of the property under the lease given him by Guthrie's father. If there was any uncertainty or ambiguity in the contract, or the application of the same, it was competent in aid of its interpretation to show the situation of the parties and the surrounding circumstances as they existed when the contract was made. Preble v. Abrahams, 88 Cal. 245, 26 Pac. 99, 22. Am. St. Rep. 301.

[5] With reference to the crop of oranges produced in the years 1907 and 1908, plaintiff was asked: "Were you in possession of the premises from the time that crop of oranges set until the time they were picked?" To this question defendant interposed an objection. In overruling the objection, the court stated: "It is so conclusive to the court that the position of counsel for plaintiff is correct that I will have to overrule this objection, and permit counsel for plaintiff to show the condition under which the first crop of oranges was made. It certainly cannot be that this plaintiff should be required to be content with accepting and receiving a crop he was already entitled to at the time of making the lease, unless there is some stipulation or understanding by the lease that that was to be so." It is claimed that the statement so made by the court constituted misconduct on its part. What we have said in regard to the interpretation to be given the contract, and the subject to which the contract applied, sufficiently answers appellant's contention in this regard. Moreover, as the language of the court embodied a correct statement of the law, we are unable to perceive wherein the same constituted misconduct.

There are other alleged errors, but an examination of the same convinces us that they merit no discussion.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 59*)—PARTIES TO OFFENSES—PRINCIPALS.

Application of Francis A. Sullivan for a writ of habeas corpus for his discharge from custody. Prisoner discharged.

Charles S. McKelvey, for petitioner. Guy Eddie, City Prosecutor, and Ray E. Nimmo and Frank W. Stafford, Deputy City Prosecutors, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Petitioner was committed to the custody of the chief of police on account of nonpayment of a fine imposed by a police judge in a certain proceeding wherein petitioner was charged with cohabitation and adultery with a married woman named. The affidavit of complaint upon which the proceedings before the police court were based charged that on a day named, in the city of Los Angeles, "the crime of adultery and cohabitation was committed by Francis A. Sullivan (petitioner herein), who at the time and place last aforesaid did willfully and unlawfully live with one Corinne Royse in a state of cohabitation and adultery, the said defendant Francis A. Sullivan being then and there an unmarried man, and the said Corinne Royse being then and there a married woman." The sufficiency of this affidavit is the question for determination. The proceeding was based upon section 269a of the Penal Code, as amended March 21, 1911 (St. 1911, p. 426), which provides that "every person who lives in a state of cohabitation and adultery is guilty of a misdemeanor and punishable by a fine," etc.

[1] Adultery is defined by section 93 of the Civil Code as "the voluntary sexual intercourse of a married person with a person other than the offender's husband or wife."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It was made to appear in the affidavit of complaint that petitioner was not a "married person"; hence, he was shown to be incapable of committing the offense.

[2] Conceding that petitioner was not, for the reason given, charged with committing the substantive offense as the same is defined by the Code, it is, nevertheless, insisted by respondent that, inasmuch as the complaint alleged the woman with whom he cohabited to be a married woman, and therefore guilty of adultery, he must be deemed a principal under the provisions of section 31 of the Penal Code, which provides that "all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether it be felony or misdemeanor, and whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, * * * are principals in any crime so committed." The theory of respondent is that, inasmuch as the woman named in the complaint was shown to have been guilty of the offense, in aid of the commission of which petitioner contributed, therefore he is properly charged therewith as a principal. The complaint, however, does not purport to charge the woman with any offense; neither does it appear therefrom that petitioner knew that she was a married woman. Hence, in no event, under the circumstances here disclosed, can the complaint be said to state a public offense against petitioner.

[3] While unnecessary to the decision of this case, we are of the opinion that it manifestly was not the intent of the Legislature, by said section 31, to declare a person guilty of aiding and abetting another in the commission of a crime where such person, by reason of his status, is himself incapable of committing the offense.

The prisoner is discharged.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1068½,* New, vol. 13, Key. No. Series)—APPEAL—ORDER DENYING A NEW TRIAL.

Since Pen. Code, § 1237, authorizes an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial, but neither the Code nor the rules of the appellate court prescribes any procedure on such an appeal, the appellate court is authorized, by Code Civ. Proc. § 187, to adopt any proper method which may have been employed by the aggrieved party in perfecting his appeal.

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1087*)—APPEAL—ORDER DENYING NEW TRIAL—PROCEDURE.

Pen. Code, § 1237, having authorized an appeal from an order denying a new trial, but no procedure having been prescribed, a record on appeal from such an order, in the form prescribed for use on an appeal from final conviction, purporting to show in full the proceedings and evidence at the trial, including the hearing and determination of the motion for a new trial, is sufficient to move the court to dispose of the appeal on its merits.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Francis H. Robinson was convicted of embezzlement, and from an order denying a new trial, and denying his motion in arrest of judgment, he appeals. Affirmed.

Thos. A. Keogh, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, C. M. Fickert, Dist. Atty., and Jas. F. Brennan, Asst. Dist. Atty., for the People.

LENNON, P. J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of embezzlement. He has appealed only from the order of the lower court, refusing him a new trial, and denying his motion in arrest of judgment.

The Attorney General, upon behalf of the people, has interposed a preliminary motion to dismiss the appeal, upon the grounds (1) that an order denying a motion in arrest of judgment is not appealable; (2) that there is no statutory procedure provided for the presentation to this court of an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial in a criminal case; and therefore, if such an order can be reviewed at all, it must come here upon an appeal from the judgment.

[1] It is clear that no appeal lies in a criminal case from an order denying a motion in arrest of judgment; and therefore the appeal in this case, in so far as it relates to the order denying defendant's motion in arrest of judgment, cannot be considered. People v. Markham, 64 Cal. 157, 30 Pac. 620, 49 Am. Rep. 700; People v. Majors, 65 Cal. 100, 3 Pac. 401; People v. Henry, 77 Cal. 446, 19 Pac. 830; People v. [2] It is true that nowhere in the Codes, or the rules which govern this court, is there to be found a prescribed procedure for perfecting an appeal to this court from an order denying a motion for a new trial in a criminal case. The Code, however, does grant to a defendant in every criminal case an appeal from such an order (Pen. Code, § 1237); and it may now be considered the settled law of this state that, where a court has been by the Constitution invested with appellate jurisdiction in a particular class of cases, that court has inherent power, in the exercise of its jurisdiction, and for the purpose of bringing before it a cause in which an appeal has been granted and taken, to adopt any appropriate and approved mode of procedure which may have been employed by an aggrieved party in the perfecting of his appeal, even though the Legislature and the rules of this court have failed to prescribe the means or method of taking such an appeal. Code Civ. Proc. § 187; People v. Jordan, 65 Cal. 644, 4 Pac. 683; Cummings v. Conlan, 66 Cal. 413, 5 Pac. 796, 903; Somers v. Somers, 81 Cal. 616, 22 Pac. 967; In re Jessup, 81 Cal. 479, 21 Pac. 976, 22 Pac. 742, 1028, 6 L. R. A. 594.

[3] The record before us upon the defendant's appeal from the order denying his motion for a new trial is in the form prescribed by the statute for use upon an appeal from a judgment of final conviction; and, as it purports to show in full the proceedings and evidence had and taken in the lower court up to and including the hearing and determination of the motion for a new trial, we deem it our duty to resort to that record and dispose of the appeal upon its merits.

[4] In support of his appeal, the defendant relies mainly upon the claim that the evidence shows that the offense of which he was convicted was wholly committed in a county other than that in which the information against him was filed. The information upon which the defendant was tried and convicted charged, in substance, that on the 17th day of May, 1910, the defendant, in the city and county of San Francisco, embezzled the sum of $500 which had been intrusted to him as the agent of one Esther Hoover. The evidence in the case shows that at several different places and times the defendant was intrusted by the complaining witness with large sums of money, among which was the $500 mentioned in the information. The complaining witness testified that this money was to be returned to her by defendant upon demand. The case was tried apparently upon the theory that a demand upon the defendant for the return of the money was necessary, before he could be charged with the crime of embezzlement, and the people depended for a conviction solely upon proof of a demand, made in the city and county of San Francisco, and the refusal of the defendant to comply with the same. Such demand was made upon the defendant for the return of the money at the Von Dorn Hotel in the city of San Francisco, some time during the month of April, 1910. The defendant then refused, and ever since has refused, to return or account for the money. This demand, coupled with the refusal of the defendant to comply therewith, and all of the circumstances surrounding the demand and refusal, were sufficient evidence of the fraudulent appropriation by the defendant of the property which had been intrusted to him.

It is the contention of the defendant that a previous positive and unqualified demand for the return of the money had been made upon him by the complaining witness in Los Angeles county, and that by reason of his failure to comply with that demand the crime charged against him was then and there consummated, and that therefore the venue of the offense was in the county of Los Angeles, and not in the city and county of San Francisco. The record does not sustain the defendant's contention in this regard. It nowhere clearly appears in evidence that the complaining witness made a positive and unequivocal demand upon the defendant in the city of Los Angeles for the return of the money. The testimony referred to in support of the defendant's contention shows that some time in the month of January, 1908, the plaintiff and defendant, at the city of Los Angeles, had a general conversation concerning the status of the money; but it cannot be fairly said that the sum and substance of this conversation constituted an unequivocal demand for the return of the money, which was met by a positive refusal, and thereby evidenced the commission and completion of the crime at that precise time and place. That the defendant himself did not consider or construe this conversation to be in the nature of a full and final demand is best shown by his own testimony upon cross-examination, where he said: "I don't know whether it was a demand, but [she] requested me to send this money to her father. * * * This was the point: She wanted me to send it, and I said 'You will have send to Salt Lake City and get the drafts and send them back.' * * * She requested me to send her father the money."

[5] The evidence upon the whole case is sufficient to warrant the finding of the jury, implied from the verdict, that the only demand and refusal occurred at the city and county of San Francisco; and, even if the testimony of the complaining witness as to what occurred at Los Angeles could be construed as a complete, unqualified demand and refusal, this would do no more than create a conflict of evidence upon the point involved. The question as to when and where a definite and final demand was made was exclusively for the jury to determine. They were fully and fairly instructed upon that phase of the case; and, as there is some evidence in the case which tends to support the verdict upon the point of proof here challenged, the verdict is conclusive, and must stand.

There is no merit in the suggestion, made in the closing brief of the defendant, that the evidence does not show that the defendant was in fact the agent of the complaining witness.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

17 Cal. App. 280

STEVENSON v. SUN INS. OFFICE.

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct. 20, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 18, 1911.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 103*)—BROKERS—AUTHORITY—CANCELLATION OF POLICY.

Ordinarily the authority of an insurance broker terminates when he has placed insurance and delivered the policy to his principal, so that mere employment to secure insurance gives no authority to cancel the same.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 130; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 238*)—BROKERS—AUTHORITY—CANCELLATION OF POLICY.

Authority to cancel a policy may be shown to have been conferred on an insurance broker, and, when shown, his acts or agreements in that behalf will be imputed to, and will be binding on, the insured.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 238.*]

3. INSURANCE (§ 665*)—CANCELLATION—AUTHORITY OF BROKER.

Evidence held to warrant a finding that insured in modifying an order given to an insurance broker for insurance, so as to reduce the amount from $30,000 to $25,000, authorized the broker to cancel a policy for $3,000, so as to effect the reduction.

4. INSURANCE (§ 236*)—CANCELLATION—SURRENDER OF POLICY.

Where an insurance broker was authorized to cancel $5,000 of plaintiff's insurance, and, pursuant to such authority, notified defendant of the cancellation of a $3,000 policy in which defendant acquiesced, the policy was canceled from the date of the notice, though the policy was not formally and physically surrendered until after a fire had occurred.

5. INSURANCE (§ 103*)—CANCELLATION—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action on a policy claimed to have been canceled before loss, an instruction that, if plaintiff's insurance broker was directed to cancel any particular policy, he would be bound by the direction, but, if he was given a general and unqualified order to cancel so much of the insurance ordered as might be necessary to reduce the amount carried to $25,000, then the broker's designation of the policy or policies to be canceled would be binding on plaintiff, and, if the minds of the parties met on the subject of cancellation, it was not necessary that it be physically delivered and surrendered prior to the fire, was proper.

6. INSURANCE (§ 103*)—CANCELLATION—KNOWLEDGE OF INSURED.

Where plaintiff ordered her insurance broker to reduce plaintiff's insurance from $30,000 to $25,000, whether plaintiff knew that the original order to place $30,000 insurance had been executed before the order to reduce it to $25,000 was given was not material as a matter of law to plaintiff's right to recover on one of the policies which the broker attempted to cancel in order to comply with the modified order.

7. EVIDENCE (§ 243*)—DECLARATIONS OF AGENT—COMPETENCY.

Where an insurance broker attempted to cancel the policy sued on in order to effect a reduction of plaintiff's insurance, in accordance with plaintiff's direction, a conversation prior to loss between the broker and defendant's manager with reference to cancellation of the policy, indicating that it had been actually canceled before the fire, was admissible on the theory that the broker was plaintiff's agent to place, and, if necessary, to cancel a part of the insurance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 908–915; Dec. Dig. § 243.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Rebina Longwill Stevenson against the Sun Insurance Office. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. P. Black and W. C. Sharpstein, for appellant. L. A. Redman, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover upon two policies of insurance. The case was tried with a jury, and this appeal is from the judgment rendered and entered upon a verdict which awarded the plaintiff the sum of $1,410.07 upon the first cause of action stated in her complaint, and in effect denied her the relief which she sought upon the facts stated in her second cause of action. The appeal, which was taken from the judgment only, is prosecuted under the provisions of section 941b, Code Civ. Proc. It was taken to the Supreme Court in the first instance, and by that court transferred here for hearing and determination. The record before us is the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions which purports to contain all of the evidence adduced at the trial.

The first cause of action stated in the plaintiff's complaint is founded upon a policy of fire insurance which called for $1,000 on the stock, and $1,000 on the furniture and fixtures of the plaintiff. To this cause of action the defendant interposed no defense.

The second cause of action was stated upon a policy of insurance for $3,000 on a stock of merchandise, which was destroyed by fire on the 29th day of February, 1908. While admitting the execution and delivery of the policy, the defendant, as a defense to this cause of action, pleaded that "on February 28, 1908, the plaintiff and defendant agreed to cancel said policy, and said policy was on said day, at the request of the plaintiff theretofore made, canceled by the defendant, and thereafter, in conformity with said agreement and cancellation, plaintiff surrendered said policy to the defendant."

The plaintiff excepted to the verdict at the time of its rendition, upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support it, and in that behalf clearly and succinctly specified the particulars in which it was claimed that the evidence was insufficient. Those particulars in the form in which they were originally specified are incorporated in and plainly made a part of the duly authenticated bill of exceptions, which purports to contain all the evidence; and, as the specifications of insufficiency fully notified opposing counsel and the trial court of the precise points relied upon to support the appeal, the evidence and its sufficiency to maintain the judgment must be reviewed and determined.

The circumstances surrounding the procurement of the policy in controversy were these: The plaintiff was the owner of a toy and notion store originally located in Post street in the city and county of San Francisco. The plaintiff was about to remove her business to a new location in Market street, and through her son and manager directed and authorized one Kenna, an insurance broker, to procure insurance upon incoming stock, which was to be installed in the plaintiff's store at the new location. In accordance with his instructions, Kenna placed a portion of the insurance with the defendant, and the policy in controversy, covering merchandise to the amount of $3,000, was issued and delivered to the plaintiff, and remained in her possession until after the building and its contents were destroyed by fire. When the plaintiff's stock of merchandise had been fully removed from the old to the new location, Kenna, by direction of the plaintiff's manager, did what was necessary to have this policy transferred to the new location. The plaintiff, in addition to the $3,000 policy sued on, had, through the agency of Kenna, placed and was carrying insurance in several other companies, aggregating the sum of $20,000. All of the various policies which covered the latter amount had not been written and delivered to plaintiff at the time the premises were destroyed by fire; but, shortly after the change of location was made, Kenna by letter informed plaintiff of the status of all of the insurance which she was carrying, and advised and notified her that he "was having the policies that were to be transferred canceled and reissued" so as to have all of the insurance expire at one time. After the receipt of this information, plaintiff's manager, while taking stock, concluded that it was not fully covered, and directed Kenna to increase the insurance to $30,000. Upon receipt of this order Kenna placed the additional insurance, but did not immediately notify plaintiff of that fact. Later, however, when plaintiff had concluded taking stock, she found that $25,000 insurance was all that was necessary to protect her from loss by fire. Thereupon plaintiff's manager called at the office of Kenna for the purpose of readjusting the amount of insurance originally ordered. Kenna was not at the office, and plaintiff's manager testified that he left an order with the clerk in charge to amend the previous order for insurance so as to have it read $25,000 on stock and $1,000 on furniture and office fixtures. However, the original order for insurance in the sum of $30,000, although not actually written in the form of policies, had been in fact executed by Kenna arranging for and securing covering notes, which bound the several companies undertaking the risks until such time as regular policies could be written and delivered. The order modifying the original request for insurance as given by the manager of plaintiff was taken down in writing by the clerk of Kenna, and subsequently verified by Kenna in a conversation over the telephone with Stevenson. As communicated to Kenna, he understood the modified order to mean that the plaintiff desired to cancel $5,000 of the $30,000 insurance already secured upon the stock of merchandise. In this behalf Kenna testified: "I had done this (procured the $30,000 on the stock) prior to February 27th, on which day I received an order through my assistant that Mr. Stevenson (plaintiff's manager) wanted $5,000 of insurance on the stock canceled, and to place $1,000 on furniture and fixtures. I got the order late on February 27th. On Saturday morning I went to the office of the office manager of the defendant, Mr. Henry, as was my practice at the end of the month, in regard to policies canceled. * * * I told Mr. Henry that Mr. Stevenson had ordered a part of their insurance canceled, and that the policy of $3,000, the policy in controversy, was canceled. Mr. Henry told me to obtain the policy and get it into the office to go along with the other cancellations before the books were closed for the month. I told him that I would. The fire occurred that night. * * * There was a policy of $2,000 in defendant, which is the policy described in the first cause of action. I did not discuss with Mr. Henry the changing of the $2,000, but it was fixed in my mind to change that policy. The actual change (on the $2,000) was made after the fire. I then indorsed the policy to cover $1,000 on stock and $1,000 on furniture and fixtures. I executed the order to give him $1,000 on furniture and fixtures by a rider on the $2,000 policy. I saw Mr. Stevenson on Monday after the fire. Before seeing him I arranged for an adjuster so that the loss could be adjusted without delay. I called upon Mr. Stevenson after I had arranged for the adjuster. I told him that I had canceled the $3,000 Sun policy and wanted it. * * * Mr. Stevenson obtained the policy and handed it to me. I told Mr. Stevenson that he was fortunate that the whole amount of $5,000 he had ordered canceled had not all been canceled, because I had only attended to the canceling of the Sun policy. I had not time after getting his order to order the cancellation of any other policy. He thanked me for the interest I had taken in his loss and looking after him. I told him that the adjustment was going along. He made not a bit of objection to turning over the Sun policy to me, and it has ever since been in the office of the defendant. * * * The order to cancel $5,000 on stock was never fully completed. There was not any cancellation of any policy except the Sun. Actually there was only a reduction to $26,000, so that they had $1,000 more than they would have had if their order had been completed." The defendant's manager, Mr. Henry, in response to Kenna's notification that the policy in controversy was canceled, clearly indicated his assent to the cancellation, and requested Kenna to procure the policy and include it in his report of cancellations for the month. Some time after the fire David B. Wilson, as the representative of the insurance companies, called upon the plaintiff's manager for the purpose of adjusting the loss. At the request of Wilson, Mr. Stevenson, plaintiff's manager, produced all the outstanding policies so that they might be adjusted. The policy in controversy, however, was not among them, and nothing was said about it by Stevenson. At that time Stevenson told Wilson that he had but $26,000 insurance upon the property at the date of the fire, and that he had produced all of the policies of every company that he was insured in.

It was conceded at the trial that Kenna was the agent of the plaintiff for the purpose of negotiating and placing the required insurance; but it is now urged upon behalf of the plaintiff that the evidence shows that Kenna's employment was only that of a broker, and as such his authority extended solely to the placing of insurance, and not to its cancellation. With this contention we cannot agree.

[1] It is undoubtedly the rule, as suggested by counsel for plaintiff, that ordinarily the authority of an insurance broker terminates when he has placed the insurance and delivered the policies to his principal, and that under a mere employment to secure insurance no authority to cancel the same is given or implied.

[2] Authority to cancel, however, may be shown to have been conferred upon the broker, and, when shown, his acts and agreements in that behalf will be imputed to and are binding upon the insured.

[3] The evidence in the case at bar is without conflict that the plaintiff's original order for insurance in the sum of $30,000 was in effect executed by Kenna before the modified order was given, and that Stevenson, the plaintiff's manager, did not know at the time he gave the modified order whether or not the original order had been executed. Stevenson, in giving the modified order, proceeded—so he testified—"just exactly as if it (the original order) had not been executed by sending in a new order for $25,000 instead of $30,000." In brief, all that was said, done, and understood by the plaintiff through her manager and Kenna, her agent and broker, warranted Kenna in the conclusion and belief that Stevenson, in the event that the original order had not been executed, wanted merchandise insurance only to the extent of $25,000; but if, on the other hand, the original order had been executed, he wanted the merchandise insurance reduced to that amount. It is obvious that in either event the result to the plaintiff was the same, and the conclusion is unavoidable, it seems to us, that, if Stevenson intended to withhold from Kenna authority to cancel any particular policy of the insurance already placed, the general and unqualified order for a reduction to $25,000 would not have been given. However that may be, it is clear that the plaintiff's modified order as conveyed to Kenna could not have been executed except by canceling one or more of the policies previously negotiated, and it necessarily follows that the modified order impliedly authorized and required Kenna to cancel so much of the insurance placed in the first instance not exceeding $5,000, and without regard to any particular policy or company, which, if cancellation was necessary, would bring the total insurance of the plaintiff within the desired limit of $25,000. That Stevenson so understood the situation, and fully recognized the fact that the policy in question had been actually canceled prior to the fire, may be fairly deduced from his acquiescence in the surrender of the policy after the fire for the express reason that it had been previously canceled. This deduction is strengthened by the further fact that Stevenson not only failed to include this particular policy in his list of adjustable insurance, but stated to the adjuster that at the time of the fire he had all told only $26,000 of insurance. It is true that Stevenson denied having surrendered the policy for the reason stated by Kenna; but Stevenson's explanation of what occurred in that connection evidently was not accepted by the jury, and, in so far as his evidence conflicts in this and other particulars with the testimony adduced upon behalf of the defendant, it must be ignored upon this appeal.

[4] There is no merit in the contention discussed and urged by plaintiff that the contract of insurance in the case at bar cannot be considered as canceled merely because the policy in controversy was not formally and physically surrendered into the possession of the defendant prior to the fire. A contract of insurance must be governed and interpreted by the same rules which ordinarily apply to other contracts, and it will be enforced only according to the manifest intention of the parties. It is a self-evident proposition that a contract of insurance may be as readily rescinded, as it was made, by the mutual agreement of the parties or their authorized representatives: and, while the surrender of a policy of insurance by the insured and its acceptance by the insurer is usually prima facie evidence of cancellation, yet a formal physical surrender is not absolutely necessary to a rescission and cancellation of the contract. The formal surrender and acceptance of the policy is at best a piece of evidence tending to show a cancellation, and, if the fact of rescission is established (as we think it was in this case) by the mutual agreement of the parties, the rescission is as complete and effectual as if the policy had been actually indorsed "canceled," and surrendered into the possession of the defendant.

[5] It is claimed that the trial court erred in its charge to the jury wherein it was in substance declared that, if the jury found from the evidence that Kenna was directed to cancel any particular policy, he would be bound by the direction; but, on the other hand, if the jury found that Kenna was given a general, unqualified order to cancel so much of the insurance ordered as might be necessary to reduce the amount thereof to $25,000, then his designation of the policy or policies to be canceled would be binding upon the plaintiff; and (2), if the minds of the parties had met upon the subject of cancellation, it was not necessary to a valid cancellation of the policy in suit that it be physically delivered and surrendered to the defendant prior to the fire.

The charge of the court upon these subjects is in harmony with our previously expressed understanding of the law of the case, and, as it accords with our conception of the evidence, we must hold that in these particulars the charge of the court was free from error.

As heretofore indicated, we are of the opinion that, upon the whole case, the evidence was sufficient to justify the finding of the jury, which must be implied from their verdict, that the plaintiff had empowered and authorized Kenna to effect and cancel her insurance; and, this being so, the trial court did not err in charging the jury that the plaintiff would be bound by anything done by Kenna within the scope of his authority as the broker and agent of plaintiff.

[6] Complaint is made of the refusal of the trial court to give, upon behalf of the plaintiff, a requested instruction which in effect required a verdict for the plaintiff if the jury found that, at the time the order to reduce was given, the plaintiff did not know that Kenna had already executed the order first given. The record does not disclose any dispute upon the question of Stevenson's knowledge as to whether or not the original order had been executed before the modified order was given. It seems to be conceded that Stevenson had no information upon the subject, and that he did not seek to be informed thereon. The order to reduce was absolute and unqualified, and, as it was to be executed in any event, we are unable to perceive how as a matter of law the knowledge or lack of knowledge on Stevenson's part, in the particular stated in the requested instruction, could alter the situation, or modify the duties and responsibilities of the parties to the transaction.

[7] The trial court did not err in admitting testimony as to the conversation had prior to the fire between Kenna and Henry, the defendant's manager, with reference to the cancellation of the policy in controversy. This testimony tended strongly to show that the policy had been actually canceled before the fire, and it was properly admitted upon the theory, amply sustained by the evidence, that Kenna was the agent of plaintiff for the purpose of placing, and, if necessary, canceling a part of the insurance in question.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Application for a writ of mandate by Ruth M. Rose against J. Lelande, Clerk of Los Angeles County, Cal. Denied.

E. M. Barnes, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. [1, 2] This application must be denied for two reasons: First, there is no duty devolving by law upon the clerk to certify or attest the transcript containing the reporter's notes, or the papers desired to be included therein, not included in the judgment roll. Second, the notice of appeal is from an order of court setting aside a default. This is not an appealable order.

FIDELITY & CASUALTY CO. OF NEW YORK v. FRESNO FLUME & IRRIGATION CO. (S. F. 5,541.)

1. Insurance (§ 129*)—Varying Insurance Policy—Representation of an Agent.

Where a written insurance policy, accepted by the insured, expressly provided that no condition or provision could be altered, except by the written consent of the president or secretary, an insured cannot escape payment of premiums due on such policy, because the insured relied upon the representations of the agent.

2. Insurance (§ 142*)—Actions for Premium—Ratification—Oral Contract.

Where an insurance policy provided for the payment of a certain premium which the agent orally represented would not be collected, an action upon the written policy was no ratification of the agent's oral representations.

3. Insurance (§ 136*)—Acceptance of Policy—Effect.

An insurance policy, though not signed by the insured, is, when accepted, conclusive as to its obligations upon both parties, for under Civ. Code, § 1589, providing that the acceptance by one party of a paper signed by another purporting to embody all the terms of the contract binds both parties.

4. Appeal and Error (§ 1175*)—Decisions—Rendition of Judgment.

In an action on an insurance policy, findings of fact by the trial court that the agent had represented that the premium would be much less than the amount stated in the written policy and that the contract was entered into upon faith of his representation will not, where a judgment for insured has been reversed on appeal, authorize the court on appeal to render judgment for the insurer.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

Action by the Fidelity & Casualty Company of New York against the Fresno Flume & Irrigation Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Chickering & Gregory, for appellant. L. L. Cory (Goodfellow, Eells & Orrick, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The appeal in this case was taken to the District Court of Appeal, which rendered a judgment of reversal. A rehearing was ordered, and, upon the second submission, two of the justices adhered to the views first announced, while the third wrote an opinion for affirmance. Upon this failure to agree the appeal was transferred to this court for hearing and determination.

Our own examination of the case has satisfied us of the correctness of the disposition first made by the Court of Appeal, and we adopt the following opinion of Hall, J., giving the reasons upon which that court based its judgment of reversal.

"This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant taken within 60 days after the entry thereof. The action was brought to recover a balance of premiums unpaid upon two insurance policies executed and delivered by plaintiff to defendant and accepted by defendant, whereby plaintiff insured defendant against loss or damage resulting from liability for damages or injuries to employés of defendant during the period of one year from the date of the policies. At the time of the execution of the policies a certain sum was paid as premium, based on the amount of wages that defendant estimated that it would pay to its employés during the year. The policies are attached to and made a part of the complaint. The policies clearly and without ambiguity provide that the premium to be paid shall be a certain given per cent. of the wages actually paid during the year by the defendant to its employés, and provide that, if the wages actually paid exceed the estimated wages stated in the schedule contained in the policies, the assured shall pay the additional premium earned, and, if the wages actually paid shall be less than the estimated wages stated, the insurer shall return to the assured the unearned premium pro rata. As a defense to the two causes of action set forth in plaintiff's complaint, the defendant pleaded: 'That heretofore, and on or about the 14th day of April, 1902, the plaintiff made application to the defendant to insure and indemnify it for one year from April 14, 1902, against all loss from any of the matters and things set forth in the complaint of the plaintiff herein. That the defendant thereupon informed the plaintiff that as it was then insured in another company covering all the matters and things set forth in the complaint of plaintiff, and for all such insurance paid as a premium a flat rate of $850 per annum, and the plaintiff thereupon assured the defendant that it would insure the defendant for one year upon the same terms, and it was then and there agreed upon, by and between the plaintiff and defendant, that the plaintiff would issue and deliver to the defendant, and the defendant would thereupon accept, the policies of insurance set forth in plaintiff's complaint, and that the defendant would be charged therefor and would only be required to pay a flat rate of $850 per annum in lieu and stead of the sliding scale and rate as set forth in plaintiff's complaint, and each cause of action therein, and that thereupon, and in pursuance to said agreement, and not otherwise, the policies of insurance set forth in plaintiff's complaint were so issued and delivered to the defendant, and the defendant accepted the same. That the sole inducement to the defendant leading it to accept said policies of insurance from the plaintiff was the statement and agreement and representation of the plaintiff that it would accept from the defendant the sum of $850 in full for all premiums due, or to become due, upon said policies of insurance, covering said policy year, and that no other sum of premium of any kind would be required or demanded or exacted of the defendant by the plaintiff. That at the time said policies of insurance set forth in plaintiff's complaint were issued and delivered to the defendant, the plaintiff then and there stated, represented, and assured the defendant that, notwithstanding the rate and terms of said policies of insurance, all the premiums that the defendant would be required to pay for said policies of insurance was the flat rate of $850, and in consideration of said assurances and statements the defendant was induced to, and did actually, accept said policies of insurance.' The court found the facts to be in accordance with the above allegations of the answer, and gave judgment for defendant accordingly.

"The only evidence to support the above findings of fact consisted of testimony as to statements and agreements orally made by Mr. Shepherd, the local agent of plaintiff at Fresno, to and with Mr. Shaver as the president of the defendant, and oral statements and conversations between Mr. Bosworth, the general agent of the plaintiff at San Francisco and Mr. Shepherd. This testimony as to oral negotiations and conversations, both before and at the time of the delivery of the policies, was admitted over the objections and exceptions of plaintiff, and these rulings are now relied upon as grounds for reversing the judgment.

[1] "It is not claimed that according to the written terms of the policies accepted by defendant the amount sued for is not owing from defendant to plaintiff, but it is claimed by defendant that it is not bound by the terms of the written contracts.

"The theory of defendant, upon which it claims that this case is taken out of the general rule that, where the terms of a contract are reduced to writing, parol evidence is not admissible to vary or contradict the terms of the writing, is that it would be a fraud to allow one party to enforce the covenants of the writing contrary to his oral agreement by which the other party was induced to enter into the contract. In support of this contention respondent has cited a number of cases, among which are Murray v. Dake, 46 Cal. 644, Isenhoot v. Chamberlain, 59 Cal. 637, and Eva v. McMahon, 77 Cal. 472, 19 Pac. 872.

"But conceding that a court of equity will not permit one party to enforce a written contract contrary to his oral agreement, where to do so would work a fraud upon the other party to the contract, and that the same matter may be set up in defense of an action at law on such written contract, without seeking a reformation of the written contract (Eva v. McMahon, supra; Hoppough v. Struble, 60 N. Y. 430; Walker v. Brem, 67 Cal. 600, 8 Pac. 320), it is essential that such oral agreement be made by the party to the contract or by his agent, acting with authority, actual or ostensible.

"The policies delivered to and accepted by respondent were signed by the president and secretary of plaintiff, and countersigned by its general agent, Bosworth. No evidence of the authority of Bosworth was given other than that he was the general agent of the plaintiff, and none was given as to the authority of Shepherd other than that he was the local agent of Fresno, and by the terms of his employment had no authority to change a policy in any way.

"It may be conceded that this was sufficient to clothe the agents with ostensible authority coextensive with the business intrusted to them, in the absence of any notice of a limitation thereon. But the policies accepted and retained by defendant contained the provision that 'no condition or provision of this policy shall be varied or altered by any one unless by written consent of the president or secretary of the company.' This was a limitation upon the authority of agents of which defendant had notice. That such provisions in policies are valid has frequently been decided. The matter is discussed at great length in Northern Assurance Co. v. Grand View Building Association, 183 U. S. 308, 22 Sup. Ct. 133, 46 L. Ed. 213, and it was there held (syllabus) that 'it is competent and reasonable for insurance companies to make it matter of condition in their policies that their agents shall not be deemed to have authority to alter or contradict the express terms of the policies as executed and delivered.'

"In Cleaver v. Traders' Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 527, 32 N. W. 660, 8 Am. St. Rep. 908, the Supreme Court of Michigan said: 'Where the policy of insurance, as in this case, contains an express limitation upon the power of the agent, such agent has no legal right to contract as agent of the company with the in sured, so as to change the conditions of the policy, or to dispense with the performance of any essential requisite contained therein, either by parol or writing; and the holder of the policy is estopped, by accepting the policy, from setting up or relying upon powers in the agent in opposition to limitations and restrictions in the policy.' To precisely the same effect are Catoir v. Am. Life Ins. & Trust Co., 33 N. J. Law, 487; Weidert v. State Ins. Co., 19 Or. 261, 24 Pac. 242, 20 Am. St. Rep. 809.

"The same rule is followed in Massachusetts. 'The company which has seen fit to prescribe that the terms and conditions of its policies shall only be waived by its written or printed assent has prescribed only a reasonable rule to guard against the uncertainties of oral evidence, and by this the assured has assented to be bound.' Kyte v. Commercial Union Assurance Co., 144 Mass. 43, 10 N. E. 518.

"To the same effect are Quinlan v. Providence Washington Ins. Co., 133 N. Y. 356, 31 N. E. 31, 28 Am. St. Rep. 645, and Hankins v. Rockford Ins. Co., 70 Wis. 1, 35 N. W. 34.

"Limitations upon the power, of agents contained in a policy, similar to the limitations contained in the policies sued on in this case, were held reasonable and binding on the assured in Westerfeld v. New York Life Ins. Co., 129 Cal. 68, 58 Pac. 92, 61 Pac. 667.

"Defendant in the case at bar accepted the policies and retained them until the expiration of the insurance year, with full knowledge of their terms. There is no pretense that any misrepresentations were made as to their actual terms, or that any trick or device was resorted to by which defendant was prevented from reading them, and under such circumstances defendant must be presumed to have known the contents of the policies. New York Life Ins. Co. v. McMaster, 87 Fed. 63, 30 C. C. A. 532.

"Defendant thus knew that the agent had no power to alter the provisions of the policies without the written consent of the president or secretary of the insuring company. If defendant chose to rely upon the oral agreement of the agent, it did so at its peril. The oral representations and agreement thus made were not the representations or agreement of the plaintiff, and for this reason the findings to that effect are not sustained by the evidence, and the evidence of such oral agreement and representations should not have been admitted in evidence.

[2] "We do not think the contention of respondent that plaintiff ratified the alleged oral modification of the contracts by bringing this action can be sustained. We are unable to assent to the proposition that by attempting to enforce a written contract according to its terms plaintiff ratifies unauthorized oral modifications thereof."

[3] Upon the second argument in the Court of Appeal, and in presenting the case here, the respondent has laid special stress upon the point that, because the policy was signed by the insurer alone, and not by the insured, it is conclusive with respect to its obligations alone, and not with respect to those of the party not signing. But we think there is no merit in this position. The receipt and acceptance by one party of a paper signed by the other, and purporting to embody all the terms of a contract between the two, binds the acceptor, as well as the signer, to the terms of the paper. 9 Cyc. 260, 391; Civ. Code, § 1589; Watkins v. Rymill, L. R. 10 Q. B. D. 178, 188. Under the common-law rules of pleading, the fact that one of the parties had not executed the writing, if it were a specialty, would have required that he be sued in assumpsit, rather than in covenant; but the binding force of his obligation and the extent of his liability would not have been affected by the mere form of action. Locke v. Homer, 131 Mass. 93, 41 Am. Rep. 199.

The respondent cites a number of cases in which, notwithstanding the existence of an agreement in writing (signed by one of the parties alone), the party not signing has been permitted to prove the real agreement by parol evidence. But none of these dealt with the situation here presented, i. e., that of a writing which was intended, when signed by one of the parties, and accepted by the other, to operate as a contract embodying all of the obligations on both sides. The authorities relied upon all fall within recognized exceptions to the parol evidence rule. Some of them deal with writings which were prepared for execution by both parties, but were signed by only one. The opinion in Cavanaugh v. Casselman, 88 Cal. 543, 26 Pac. 515, while generally favorable to the contentions of the appellant, contains some references bearing upon this point. See, also, Thomas v. Barnes, 156 Mass. 581, 31 N. E. 683. Other citations are to cases laying down the well-settled rule that recitals of consideration are not conclusive. Byers v. Locke, 93 Cal. 493, 29 Pac. 119, 27 Am. St. Rep. 212. This rule is not applicable here, where the clause relied upon is not a mere recital, but is a positive undertaking to pay premiums according to a specified mode of computation. The remaining authorities of respondent, so far as they have any bearing on the point under discussion, have to do with writings which were not intended to embody the entire agreement of the parties, but were either memoranda in the natureo f receipts or were silent with respect to some of the terms upon which the parties had agreed. Mobile R. R. Co. v. Jurey, 111 U. S. 584, 4 Sup. Ct. 566, 28 L. Ed. 527; Bank of Palmer, L. R. 1897 App. Cas. 540; Routledge v. Worthington Co., 119 N. Y. 592, 23 N. E. 1111; Rapp v. Giddings, 4 S. D. 492, 57 N. W. 237; Ames v. S. P. Co., 141 Cal. 728, 75 Pac. 310, 99 Am. St. Rep. 98.

On the other hand, the contention of appellant that a policy of insurance, when accepted by the insured, is conclusive evidence of the engagements of the parties with respect to the obligations declared in it, and may not be contradicted by evidence of previous verbal arrangements, is abundantly sustained. Ins. Co. v. Mowry, 96 U. S. 544, 24 L. Ed. 674; Thompson v. Ins. Co., 104 U. S. 252, 26 L. Ed. 765; Northern Assur. Co. v. Grand View Ass'n, 183 U. S. 308, 22 Sup. Ct. 133, 46 L. Ed. 213; L. & L. & G. Ins. Co. v. Lumber Co., 11 Okl. 579, 69 Pac. 936; Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 4 Kan. App. 16, 45 Pac. 789; Franklin F. Ins. Co. v. Martin, 40 N. J. Law, 568, 29 Am. Rep. 271; Moore v. State Ins. Co., 72 Iowa, 414, 34 N. W. 183; U. S. Cas. Co. v. Charleston, etc., Mfg. Co. (C. C.) 183 Fed. 238. The reasoning of these cases lends no support to the respondent's supposed distinction between the obligations of the party signing and those of the party not signing the policy. Indeed, the case last cited is, in this respect, precisely like the one before us.

[4] We cannot, however, give assent to appellant's claim that judgment in its favor should be ordered. The findings, as they stand, would not support such a judgment. Under such circumstances, it has been the usual practice of this court, where a reversal was found necessary, to send the case back for a new trial. There may be exceptional instances justifying a different procedure (see Finnell v. Goodman & Co. Bank, 156 Cal. 18, 26, 103 Pac. 483); but we see no reason, in the present appeal, for departing from the ordinary course.

The judgment is reversed.

1. Municipal Corporations (§ 289*)—Street Assessments—Compliance with Statutes.

Proceedings for street assessments must be based on a compliance with the statute authorizing the assessment, especially in so far as the statute provides for the giving of notice or other steps precedent to jurisdiction to order the work done.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by W. J. Haughawout against Catherine A. Percival. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Leslie R. Hewitt and Lee, Chase, Overton & Valentine, for appellant. Henry J. Stevens and O'Melveney, Stevens & Millikin, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The defendant appeals from a judgment foreclosing the lien of a street assessment for sewer work done in the city of Los Angeles. The proceedings were had under the Vrooman act. St. 1885, p. 147. Section 3 of that act, as amended in 1891 (St. 1891, p. 196), provides that the resolution of intention passed by the city council shall be "posted conspicuously for two days on or near the chamber door of said council." Section 5 requires that the notice inviting sealed proposals shall be "posted conspicuously for five days on or near the council chamber door of said council," and that notice of award of contract shall be posted in the same manner. St. 1891, pp. 199, 200. The complaint alleged a posting of the various documents for the required time "conspicuously near the chamber door of the council." The answer denied such posting. The finding was in favor of the plaintiff. The appellant attacks this finding as unsupported, and the only question argued is whether the court was justified in determining that the various postings were made near the council chamber door.

The case was submitted on a stipulation of facts, which described with particularity the place where the resolution and notices were posted. The room or chamber in which the city council met is on the second floor of the city hall of the said city of Los Angeles. The city hall is situated on the easterly line of Broadway. The main entrance of the building is on the Broadway frontage, access to the interior being had through a door opening from a porch or portico, which runs for a length of some 55 feet in a northerly and southerly direction along the outer side of the front wall of the building. To reach the council chamber, it is necessary to enter the building through said door, and then, after proceeding to the stairs or elevator, ascend to the second floor, and walk to said chamber from the head of the stairs or the place where the elevator stops. By way of the stairs this would require a journey of about 40 feet from the main entrance door of the building to the foot of the stairs, 26 feet in mounting the stairway, and 30 feet on the second floor from the stairs to the door of the council chamber. One going by elevator would be required to walk 56 feet on the main floor, and, after ascending 18 feet in the elevator, he would land on the second floor at a point 12 feet from the council chamber door. Either route involves several turns or changes of direction. The resolution and notices were posted upon a bulletin board situated upon the portico above referred to at a point about 20 feet northerly from the main entrance door of the building. All notices required to be posted by city officials were during the time of these proceedings, and for several years theretofore, posted upon this board. Any paper so posted would be in plain view of any one entering the city hall through the main entrance door, but notices could not be read by one standing at said door. There is a side entrance to the city hall, which is occasionally used by some of the public, but mainly by city officers and employés. The bulletin board would not be visible from this side entrance door, but the Broadway entrance is the one generally used by the public, and the customary and usual way by which the public reached the room in which the city council met is to pass through said Broadway or front entrance, and thence by way of the stairs or the elevator, to the upper floor.

[1] Was a paper posted upon the bulletin board thus situated posted "near the chamber door of the council"? Proceedings for street assessments, being in invitum, must, in order to charge the property of the owner, be based upon a compliance with the provisions of the statute authorizing the assessment, in so far, at least, as those provisions have to do with the giving of notice or other steps precedent to the jurisdiction of the board to order the work done. Himmelmann v. Cahn, 49 Cal. 285; Brooks v. Satterlee, 49 Cal. 289; Dehail v. Morford, 95 Cal. 457, 30 Pac. 593. In the case last cited the court says that "it is a fundamental principle, in proceedings of this character, that every requirement of the statute which has a semblance of benefit to the owner must be observed, in order to give to the municipality jurisdiction in the premises." Accordingly, if the notice is required by the statute to be posted at a certain place, a posting at a different place will not support an attempt to create a lien. This proposition, which, as above suggested, is elementary, is conceded by the respondent.

But, in looking to the statute to see what its requirements are, we are not compelled to give its terms the most restricted and literal construction. Section 53 of the Vrooman act, as amended by Laws 1891, p. 466, provides that "the provisions of this act shall be liberally construed to promote the objects thereof." The provisions regarding the posting of notices, and the like, are, therefore, to be read in the light of the purposes sought to be accomplished.

[2] The statute directs that the posting shall be "on or near" the council chamber door. The word "near" does not signify any precise measure of distance. It is a relative term, and its meaning must be determined with reference to the subject-matter. Kirkbride v. Lafayette Co., 108 U. S. 211, 2 Sup. Ct. 501, 27 L. Ed. 705; Barrett v. Schuyler Co., 44 Mo. 202. In this case, the subject-matter is the action of the city council in initiating and carrying on proceedings for street improvements. The object of the posting is to give notice of the steps taken to owners of property to be affected by the work, and the Legislature has presumably prescribed a method which in its judgment, would be likely to bring notice to such owners. The theory underlying the requirement that the posting should be made "on or near" the door of the council chamber was, no doubt, that owners whose property might be subjected to liens would, in seeking to learn whether proceedings had been instituted, and what they were, naturally visit the place of meeting of the council, the body charged with the duty and power of ordering the improvement. Since no exact place for posting was prescribed, it is reasonable to interpret the language of the law as requiring a posting in such location, convenient to and in the vicinity of the council chamber, as would be likely to catch the eye of any one approaching the chamber. It cannot be said, as matter of law, that the location must be within 10, or 50, or 100 feet of the door of the council chamber. Whether the place be "near" such door or not is, in each case, a question of fact to be decided upon the considerations suggested.

In the present instance we think the conclusion of the trial court was not without fair support from the facts shown. The council chamber was in the city hall. The bulletin board upon which the papers were posted was in a part of said city hall, and in plain view from its main entrance. This entrance was the one generally used by those who had occasion to visit the council chamber, and it was the board upon which notices were customarily posted. It was therefore so placed as to be likely to bring notices affixed to it to the attention of persons having occasion to visit the council chamber. Of course, if this place was not "near the door of the council chamber," the mere fact that a notice there posted would be as likely to be seen by persons interested as one posted at the point designated by the statute would not save the proceedings from failure. But, as we have said, the use by the Legislature of the indefinite term "near" necessarily left to the officials conducting the posting a measure of latitude. This, we think, was not exceeded by the posting here made.

The authorities cited by the appellant are not, we think, in conflict with this conclusion. It would not be profitable to review them, since the holding, in each instance, is based upon statutory language differing from that before us, and upon a state of facts unlike that here presented. It may, however, be said that the reasoning of most of these cases is in harmony with the views we have announced.

The judgment is affirmed.

2. Taxation (§ 734*) — Sales — Notice to Owner.

Under Pol. Code, § 3897, requiring a tax collector, before selling for the state land sold to it for taxes, to mail a copy of notice of sale to the person to whom the land was last assessed next before the sale at his last known post office address, the mailing of the notice, where the address is known or shown on the assessment roll, is essential to the validity of a sale by the state of land purchased by it for delinquent taxes.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by E. R. Wright against the Anglo-Californian Bank, Limited. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Preston & Preston, for appellant. Thomas, Pemberton & Thomas and Jordan, Rowe & Brann, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The land in controversy was sold to the state on June 28, 1901, for nonpayment of taxes. No redemption was made, and on November 4, 1907, in pursuance of proceedings for that purpose, the tax collector of the county sold and conveyed the same to the plaintiff. The plaintiff then began this action to quiet title. The complaint was in the usual form alleging that plaintiff was the owner of the land, but not giving the details of his title. One Fechheimer was the owner of the land on January 19, 1901, and on that day he executed a deed purporting to convey the same to defendant. The defendant, by cross-complaint, set up the title thus acquired asking judgment that plaintiff is not the owner of the land and that defendant is the owner thereof. Judgment was given for defendant. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

The cross-complaint alleges that the defendant was the party to whom the land was last assessed next before the sale and deed by the collector to the plaintiff, that its address was then, is now, and for many years has been, San Francisco, Cal., that said address was well known to said tax collector, and that no copy of the notice of the proposed sale of the land by the state was mailed to the defendant prior to the sale, as required by section 3897 of the Political Code.

[1] These allegations are not denied, and they therefore stand as admitted facts of the case.

[2] This brings the case within the rule established by Smith v. Furlong, 117 Pac. 527, Campbell v. Moran, 119 Pac. 89, decided November 9, 1911, and Smith v. Boston, 119 Pac. 91, decided November 10, 1911. The mailing of this notice, where the address is known, or shown on the assessment roll so that it can be ascertained, is essential to the validity of a sale by the state of lands purchased by it for delinquent taxes. The judgment was therefore correct. It is not necessary to notice the other points presented.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

CLOPTON v. CLOPTON et al. (L. A. 2,912.)

Husband and Wife (§ 299*) — Separate Maintenance—Decree—Notice.

Plaintiff recovered, in an action for separate maintenance, a decree against her husband for payment of a certain sum. Grantees of said defendant were made parties, and all the parties defendant appealed from an order denying a new trial. Pending the appeal, plaintiff obtained an order on an oral motion, requiring the defendant to pay a certain sum as attorney's fees. No notice was given to the grantees of the husband. Held, that an order granting the allowance and providing that it should be a lien on the property conveyed by the husband to his codefendants, entered without any notice to such codefendants, will be reversed.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by Jennie M. Clopton against Hoggatt Clopton, Pearl Clopton, and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, the last-named defendants appeal. Reversed.

Kendrick & Ardis, for appellants. H. T. Gordon and John E. Daly, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. Plaintiff recovered judgment in an action brought by her to obtain a decree requiring defendant Hoggatt Clopton, her husband, to pay monthly a certain sum for her maintenance and support. The judgment therein required said defendant to pay her $75 per month for maintenance, as well as $250 for her counsel fees. Pearl Clopton and Hugh Clopton were parties defendant in said action; they being the respective grantees of said Hoggatt Clopton of certain parcels of real property owned by him at the time of his marriage to plaintiff; the theory of plaintiff being that the conveyances to them by her husband were without consideration, and were made to enable him to escape her claim for support and maintenance. On July 1, 1910, the defendants' motion for a new trial was denied. An appeal was taken by all the defendants from the order denying the motion for a new trial, which appeal is still pending.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

During the pendency of this appeal, plaintiff gave to the defendants written notice of a motion, to be made November 14, 1910, for an order requiring defendant Hoggatt Clopton to pay plaintiff $500 as attorney's fees for prosecuting the suit on appeal, and $50 as suit money in preparing her brief and otherwise appearing in the Supreme Court.

On November 14, 1910, pursuant to such notice, plaintiff orally moved the court for an order requiring defendant Hoggatt Clopton to pay to plaintiff $500 for her attorney's fees on such appeal, and $100 per month for alimony and support of plaintiff pending such appeal, and $50 suit money for preparing her briefs and otherwise appearing in the Supreme Court. Nothing was said, either in the written notice or in the motion itself, about making the land conveyed to Pearl Clopton and Hugh Clopton liable for any of the amounts that might be ordered paid, or subjecting any of such land to a lien for the payment thereof.

Neither defendant Pearl Clopton nor Hugh Clopton is shown to have taken any part in the proceedings on the hearing of the motion, apparently assuming that no relief was asked against them or their property, which they were entirely warranted in doing, in view of the terms of both notice and oral motion. Defendant Hoggatt Clopton alone objected to the introduction of evidence offered by plaintiff, excepted to rulings made on such objections, and introduced evidence in opposition to the making of the order.

The motion being submitted for decision, the court made its order, directing the payment of certain amounts by Hoggatt Clopton to plaintiff for expenses of appeal, and counsel fees on appeal, and providing "that this allowance be, and the same is hereby, declared a lien upon all the property formerly standing in the name of said defendant, conveyed by him to his codefendants Pearl and Hugh Clopton, and which was released from the former judgment in favor of the plaintiff against said defendant, situate in the county of Orange." Pearl Clopton and Hugh Clopton alone appeal from this order, asking that it be reversed as to them.

No argument has been made or brief filed in support of the order, in so far as it purports to impose any lien for the allowance made upon the property conveyed to and standing in the name of either Pearl Clopton or Hugh Clopton.

It is unnecessary for the purposes of this appeal to consider whether, upon a motion of this character, property standing in the name of another than the husband, and claimed by such other, can be subjected, as against such other person, to a lien in favor of the wife for any allowance made thereon, or whether there was any legal evidence adduced on the hearing of the motion warranting the imposition of such a lien in this case. Certainly no such lien can be adjudicated without notice to such claimant that such relief is asked. An application for counsel fees, etc., pendente lite, "though it cannot be considered as a separate suit, is a proceeding for a separate judgment," and notice of the application and an opportunity to be heard thereon are essential (Baker v. Baker, 136 Cal. 302, 68 Pac. 971), and such an application must be determined upon the evidence introduced on the hearing thereof. The only notice afforded appellants as to the claim of plaintiff on this motion was such as was given them by the written notice of the motion, and possibly the motion itself, orally made in open court at the time fixed, if they were present in court at that time, in person or by their attorneys of record, and made no objection that no proper written notice thereof had been given. But there was no hint in either the notice or the motion itself that any such relief was asked, and there is nothing in the record on this appeal warranting the conclusion that appellants were at any time advised that plaintiff sought anything more than an order requiring Hoggatt Clopton to pay to plaintiff certain amounts of money. As said by their attorneys in their brief, "that part of the order (the part adjudicating a lien on the property they claim) does not appear to be on motion of plaintiff, but upon the court's own motion, and without any notice."

The portion of the order reading as follows, viz.: "That this allowance be, and the same is hereby, declared a lien upon all the property formerly standing in the name of said defendant, conveyed by him to his codefendants Pearl and Hugh Clopton, and which was released from the former judgment in favor of the plaintiff against said defendant, situate in the county of Orange"—is, as to the appellants Hugh Clopton and Pearl Clopton, reversed.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, Judge.

Action by Jacob Jacobson against the Oakland Meat & Packing Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with instructions.

Fitzgerald & Abbott, for appellant. L. A. Redman, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. In this case, in which plaintiff sought damages for personal injuries, the court sustained the demurrer to the amended complaint, and, plaintiff not desiring further to amend, judgment of dismissal was entered accordingly. From said judgment this appeal is taken, and the only question presented to this court relates to the correctness or error of the trial court in the ruling on the demurrer.

The complaint, after alleging the corporate capacity of the defendant, asserts that on October 6, 1908, and for about one year prior thereto, plaintiff was and had been continuously employed by defendant as a night watchman; that one Howard Monson was defendant's chief engineer, having the right at all times to control and direct the services of plaintiff; that one of plaintiff's duties as night watchman was to operate a certain pump which was moved by a powerful electric motor; that plaintiff had performed this duty for about a year prior to October 6, 1908; that, in operating the pump, it was necessary for plaintiff to open a certain oil cup after he had turned on the power; "that, in order to open said oil cup, it was necessary for plaintiff to lean and reach over and across two cogwheels, one large and one small, which cogwheels, when said power was on, revolved each in and upon the other; that at the time plaintiff began to operate said pump as aforesaid, and up to and including the 2d day of October, 1908, or thereabouts, said cogwheels were completely covered and protected by an iron guard; that, when said cogwheels were so protected and guarded, there was no danger attendant upon leaning or reaching over or across said cogwheels, when the same were in motion, in order to open said oil cup, or at all; that on or about the said 2d day of October, 1908, said Howard Monson, acting in the course of his said employment, removed said iron guard from said cogwheels for the purpose of having said guard repaired, and that said Howard Monson did not, nor did any other person, replace said guard, or put any other guard over said cogwheels, or in any wise protect or guard said cogwheels until after the injury to plaintiff; * * * that said cogwheels, when they were not guarded, were dangerous to plaintiff's life and limb, and that said Howard Monson knew and was aware of said danger; that plaintiff was informed that said guard was removed at or about the time of said removal, and was informed that said guard was removed for the purpose of having the same repaired, and was led by said Howard Monson to believe that said guard would be repaired immediately and replaced on the same day it was removed, and before it should be necessary for plaintiff to again operate said pump, and plaintiff did not know until after the injury to plaintiff herein described that said guard was not replaced as plaintiff had been led by said Howard Monson to believe that it would be; that a reasonable time for repairing said guard and for replacing the same was one hour, and that plaintiff knew at the time said guard was removed that one hour was a reasonable time for said repair and replacing, and because of said knowledge, and because he was led to believe that said guard would be replaced before he should be required to again operate said pump, plaintiff did not tax his mind with the fact of said removal, and wholly forgot before the injury * * * that said guard had been removed; that plaintiff was not informed by said Howard Monson or at all that said guard was not replaced within one hour, or at any other time until after the injury to plaintiff; * * * that the light in said pumping house was dim, and that the fact that said guard was not replaced was not apparent to plaintiff because of the said dimness of the light in said pumping house; that said Howard Monson, acting in the course of his said employment, knew that said guard was not replaced, and knew that plaintiff relied upon him to replace said guard, and knew that the absence of said guard would not be apparent to plaintiff, and knew of the danger to which plaintiff was exposed, but that said Howard Monson wholly failed and neglected to replace said or any guard over said cogwheels, and wholly failed and neglected to warn plaintiff of his danger, and plaintiff was not warned of any danger by said Howard Monson or at all." Then follow averments that on the night of October 6, 1908, plaintiff entered the pumping house and turned on the power as usual; "that he was not aware of the fact that said guard had not been replaced, and the absence of said guard was not apparent to him; that, after turning on said power, he leaned and reached over and across said cogwheels as he had been accustomed to do for about one year for the purpose of opening said oil cup; that as he leaned and reached over and across said cogwheels his sleeve was caught by said cogwheels, and his right arm was drawn in and between said cogwheels and broken in many places; * * * that said injury to plaintiff was caused by and resulted from the fact that said cogwheels were not guarded, and by the fact that plaintiff was not warned of the absence of said guard, and was caused by and resulted from the negligence and carelessness of the said Howard Monson, acting in the course of his said employment." The complaint closes with allegations of the permanent and complete character of plaintiff's injuries and a prayer for damages in the sum of $50,000.

[1] The court's ruling in sustaining the demurrer is, in effect, a finding that as matter of law the complaint alleges contributory negligence on plaintiff's part. While a court must sustain a demurrer to a complaint when the facts stated show that in any view of the law the plaintiff is guilty of contributory negligence, appellant contends that he stated in his pleading a case sufficient, if all of his allegations were proven, to go to a jury. That the existence or absence of contributory negligence is in general a matter primarily for the jury there can be no doubt. The rule with reference to the respective functions of the court and jury in cases involving a determination whether contributory negligence appears from a given state of facts or not is thus stated in Wahlgren v. Market St. Ry. Co., 132 Cal. 663, 62 Pac. 310, 64 Pac. 993: "If but one conclusion can reasonably be reached from the evidence, it is a question of law for the court; but if one sensible and impartial man might decide that the plaintiff had exercised ordinary care, and another equally sensible and impartial man that he had not exercised such care, it must be left to the jury. McKune v. Santa Clara Co., 110 Cal. 480 [42 Pac. 980]." That the guard over the cogwheels had been removed was a fact of which plaintiff was aware, but he knew that the repairs would require only a short time, and relied upon Monson to keep his word to the effect that the guard should be replaced on the very day of its removal. Respondent's counsel insist that this is a case of mere forgetfulness on the part of appellant. His only excuse for failure to observe the absence of the guard, they say, was that he had forgotten the circumstance of its removal. Forgetfulness, they insist, is as matter of law negligence which will defeat recovery.

[2] It is true that one employed in the vicinity of a known danger cannot ordinarily recover from his employer for injuries sustained by reason of a momentary forgetfulness of the danger, but it does not follow by any means that under all circumstances does failure to remember a source of peril constitute negligence. Appellant's counsel admit the force of the general rule announced in such cases as Towne v. United Electric Co., 146 Cal. 770, 81 Pac. 124, 70 L. R. A. 214, Brett v. S. H. Frank & Co., 153 Cal. 271, 94 Pac. 1051, Davis v. California St. Cable R. R. Co., 105 Cal. 135, 38 Pac. 647, McGraw v. Friend & Terry Lumber Co., 120 Cal. 575, 52 Pac. 1004, and Ergo v. Merced Falls G. & E. Co., Sac. No. 1751, 119 Pac. 101 (opinion filed November 9, 1911), but they contend that the circumstances of every one of those cases are vastly different from the facts pleaded and for the purposes of demurrer admitted in the case at bar. Undoubtedly there was one element in all of those cases which is missing in this one, and that is the plaintiff's familiarity with the danger which he forgot. Plaintiff in this case had relied on his understanding with Monson that the guard would be replaced, and lulled by his confidence in the performance of a clear duty by his superior had forgotten its removal. The rule with reference to forgetfulness of a known danger has been declared by this court in Giraudi v. Electric Imp. Co., 107 Cal. 125, 40 Pac. 110, 28 L. R. A. 596, 48 Am. St. Rep. 114, as follows: "It is said that, if one was aware of a fact which should have put him upon his guard, he cannot rebut the presumption of contributory negligence by showing that he momentarily forgot it. This is true as a general proposition, but, like all other rules upon this subject, it must have a reasonable construction. To forget is not negligence, unless it shows the want of ordinary care, and it is a question for the jury. Illustrations of this proposition are found in the cases of brakemen who are injured by obstructions over or near the track of the road. They have been allowed to recover, although it is shown that they knew of the obstruction, on the ground that they cannot be expected to retain at all times, a complete outline of the track, and because, in the hurry of their work, they would not be likely to keep these things in mind. That is, to forget, under the circumstances, did not prove absence of ordinary care. See Dorsey v. Phillips, etc., Co., 42 Wis. 583." In other jurisdictions mere forgetfulness of even a well-known danger or object which may cause injury is held not necessarily to be negligence. In Dwyer v. Salt Lake City, 19 Utah, 525, 57 Pac. 536, this question is discussed, and some of the leading authorities are cited. In that case the proof showed that on a dark night, in passing from his house to his buggy on the street, plaintiff was injured by falling over an embankment, the existence of which was well known to him, but had been forgotten. The court said: "Although the respondent had previous knowledge of the condition of the sidewalk and embankment, and undertook to cross the embankment on a dark night, and momentarily forgot about it, yet such knowledge, undertaking, and forgetfulness were not conclusive evidence of such contributory negligence as would bar a recovery. He was not bound to absolutely refrain from using the sidewalk and street in front of his premises merely because of his knowledge of its dangerous condition. Such knowledge, and the manner and time of using the sidewalk, had a very important bearing in determining whether or not the respondent was in the exercise of proper care when the accident occurred, but did not as matter of law establish contributory negligence. He was bound to exercise such care as a man of ordinary prudence and caution would, under similar circumstances, have exercised, and, there being evidence tending to show that the injured, just before falling over the embankment, had proceeded cautiously, whether or not he exercised due care, was, under all the circumstances, a question of fact to be submitted to the jury, under proper instructions, and not one of law for the court." While the rule announced in the opinion last quoted is perhaps somewhat more liberal than the one followed in California (McGraw v. Friend & Terry Co., supra; Davis v. Railroad Co., supra), the quotation illustrates the unwillingness of courts to declare that forgetting a known danger always amounts to negligence.

[3] The complaint before us, measured by California precedent, states a cause of action.

[4] It is insisted that the complaint contains no statement of Monson's duty to replace the guard over the cogwheels. There is a pleading to the effect that Monson directed and controlled plaintiff's services, and averments, also, that he led plaintiff to believe the guard would be promptly replaced; that Monson knew of the danger from the unprotected wheels; and that Monson failed to tell plaintiff that the guard was not replaced according to promise, within an hour of its removal. While these statements do not amount to a declaration of Monson's obligation to replace the guard, they are equivalent to a pleading that he was deficient in his duty to plaintiff.

[5] Representing, as he did, plaintiff's principal, it was his duty either to restore the protecting agency over the dangerous cogs or to warn plaintiff of the peril involved in working near them. By failing to perform one of these duties he was guilty of negligence. Whether plaintiff knew the danger from the uncovered machinery or not (and the peril of such cogs is not necessarily obvious for it depends largely upon the direction in which the wheels revolve) Monson's failure to undeceive plaintiff with reference to the prompt restoration of the guard amounted, under the circumstances of this case, as pleaded, to a breach of duty in permitting Jacobson to work in a dim and dangerous place without warning of the risk incurred.

[6] And this becomes more emphatically apparent when we consider that, to charge plaintiff with such conduct as would bar recovery, it must appear that he knew not only the unsafe condition of the machine without the guard, but consented to work in the place of danger after full comprehension and appreciation of the risks which he thereby incurred. Section 1970, Civ. Code; Silveira v. Iversen, 128 Cal. 192, 60 Pac. 687; Morgan v. Robinson Co., 157 Cal. 354, 107 Pac. 695.

[8] Respondent argues that neither by contract nor by law was the corporation under any obligation to keep the cogwheels covered. On the contrary, it is the duty of one owning machinery to exercise reasonable care for the protection of employés who operate it. This complaint charges that there was no danger to the person oiling the machinery when the iron guard was in place, but that the risk incurred by him was very great when the wheels were exposed. Evidently there was a simple device for the complete protection of respondent's servants, and this it was the corporation's duty to adopt and keep in place. Larsen v. Bloemer, 156 Cal. 755, 106 Pac. 62; Quinn v. Electric L. Co., 155 Cal. 503, 101 Pac. 794; Skelton v. Pacific Lum. Co., 140 Cal. 511, 74 Pac. 13.

[9] We find no merit in respondent's special demurrer for uncertainty to that part of the complaint in which it is averred that appellant was "led by said Howard Monson to believe that said guard would be replaced immediately." This was an allegation of an ultimate fact quite sufficient to apprise defendant of the issue which it was called upon to meet. Greater particularity, which would probably involve the pleading of evidentiary matter, is not required. 2 Labatt on Master & Servant, § 863.

The complaint stated a case sufficient, if proven, to go to a jury, and in that pleading negligence on plaintiff's part sufficient to defeat recovery does not appear as matter of law from the facts alleged.

The judgment is reversed, with instructions to the court below to overrule the demurrer to the complaint.

GOSEWISCH v. DORAN et al. (L. A. 2,761.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 9, 1911.)

1. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 38*)—"PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION"—ALLEGATIONS IN PLEADINGS.

Civ. Code, § 45, defines libel as a false and unprivileged communication exposing a person to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy, or which causes him to be shunned and avoided, or which has a tendency to injure him in his occupation. Section 47 enumerates as a privileged publication one made in any legislative or judicial proceeding, or in any other official proceeding authorized by law. Held that, where minority stockholders in a corporation sued plaintiff as its president for alleged illegal management, an allegation in the complaint that plaintiff was guilty of misappropriation and embezzlement of the corporation's funds was relevant to the inquiry, and was therefore privileged, even if section 47 be construed as only making such allegations in a judicial proceeding privileged as are relevant to the inquiry.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5591–5598; vol. 8, p. 7764.]

2. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 51*)—PRIVILEGED PUBLICATION — JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS — MALICE.

Where an alleged libelous allegation in a complaint charging the president of a corporation with misappropriation and embezzlement of the corporation's funds was absolutely privileged, it could not be rendered actionable because malicious; malice being irrelevant under such circumstances.

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 320*)—ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL (§ 9*)—STOCKHOLDERS—RIGHT TO SUE—PERSONS IN CONTROL—ANOTHER ACTION PENDING.

A minority stockholder of a corporation may sue to enforce a claim of the corporation against one who is president of the corporation and who is in control of the board of directors, and can thus prevent an action in the name of the corporation itself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1429–1430; Dec. Dig. § 320;* Abatement and Revival, Cent. Dig. §§ 73–75; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

4. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 97*)—PRIVILEGE—PLEADING—COMPLAINT.

While ordinarily, privilege is a defense to an action for libel, which must be affirmatively pleaded, yet if the complaint shows on its face that the publication was privileged, the point may be raised by demurrer.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by W. R. Gosewisch against J. J. Doran and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Munson & Barclay and A. J. Mitchell, for appellant. William Fleet Palmer, Valentine & Newby, Frank James, Smith & Smith, and Williams, Goudge & Chandler, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff instituted this action to recover damages for libel. The defendants demurred to an amended complaint, and the court below sustained their demurrers and gave judgment in their favor. The plaintiff appeals.

The amended complaint charges that in January, 1909, the defendants, as plaintiffs, commenced an action in the superior court of Los Angeles county, against the plaintiff herein and others as defendants. In said action they "maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause" filed a complaint in which they charged plaintiff with the misappropriation and embezzlement of the funds of a corporation of which they were stockholders and the plaintiff was a director and president. A copy of the complaint in said action is annexed to and made a part of the amended complaint herein. The plaintiff alleges that the charges against him were published in a daily newspaper in the city of Los Angeles, but inasmuch as there is no suggestion that the defendants were in any way responsible for, or connected with, such newspaper publication, this averment has no relevancy to the cause of action attempted to be stated. It is alleged that "all of said publications were and are false, malicious, and defamatory, and wholly without justification or excuse, and were not pertinent or material or at all necessary to the proceedings instituted by the filing of said complaint."

[1] The claim of the respondents is that the publication of the charges against plaintiff by means of a pleading in an action was privileged. Section 45 of the Civil Code defines libel as "a false and unprivileged publication by writing, printing, picture, effigy, or other fixed representation to the eye, which exposes any person to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy, or which causes him to be shunned or avoided, or which has a tendency to injure him in his occupation." Section 47 of the same Code enumerates five classes of privileged publication. One of these is a publication made "(2) In any legislative or judicial proceeding, or in any other official proceeding authorized by law." This subdivision, in its present form, was added to the section by an amendment adopted in 1874.

The prevailing rule in England and in some of the American states has been that the privilege attaching to defamatory statements made in the course of judicial proceedings is absolute. Townshend, in his work on Slander and Libel, states, at section 221, that he believes the "better and prevailing rule to be that for any defamatory matter contained in a pleading in a court of civil jurisdiction no action for libel can be maintained." Cutler v. Dixon, 4 Coke, 12; Wilkins v. Hyde, 142 Ind. 260, 41 N. E. 536; Runge v. Franklin, 72 Tex. 585, 10 S. W. 721, 3 L. R. A. 417, 13 Am. St. Rep. 833; 25 Cyc. 376. On the other hand, many courts in this country have limited the privilege to declarations pertinent and material to the matter in controversy. Hoar v. Wood, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 193; McLaughlin v. Cowley, 127 Mass. 316; Moore v. M'f'rs. Nat. Bank, 123 N. Y. 420, 25 N. E. 1048, 11 L. R. A. 753; Wilson v. Sullivan, 81 Ga. 238, 7 S. E. 274; Ash v. Zwietusch, 159 Ill. 455, 42 N. E. 854; 25 Cyc. 377. And this limitation of the rule was applied in a case arising in this state prior to the amendment of 1874 to section 47 of the Civil Code. Wyatt v. Buell, 47 Cal. 624. The language of subdivision 2 of the amended section is, however, broad and unrestricted in its terms, and this court, in Hollis v. Meux, 69 Cal. 625, 11 Pac. 248, 58 Am. Rep. 574, suggested a doubt as to whether the Legislature, by enacting that subdivision, intended to change the rule announced in Wyatt v. Buell, so as to render communications made in a judicial proceeding absolutely privileged. The court concluded, in the Hollis Case, that the charges there made were relevant and material to the proceeding in which they were published, and therefore found it unnecessary to resolve this doubt. It may, however, be remarked that in Ball v. Rawles, 93 Cal. 222, 236, 28 Pac. 937, 27 Am. St. Rep. 174, the privilege is declared to be absolute, and Hollis v. Meux is cited as authority for the declaration. See, also, Duncan v. A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 72 Fed. 808, 19 C. C. A. 202. But if, notwithstanding the provision of our Code, and these utterances of the court, we take the view that the privilege is not absolute, the only limitation upon it is that the defamatory matter must be pertinent and material to the cause or subject of inquiry before the court.

[2] If it be pertinent, the defendant's malice or bad faith does not affect the privileged character of the publication. "Malice," says the court in Hollis v. Meux, "cannot be predicated of it. No one is permitted to allege that what was rightly done in a judicial proceeding was done with malice." That malice is not a subject of inquiry where a defamatory statement, relevant to the inquiry, is made in the course of a judicial proceediing, is not only established by the decided cases (Moore v. M. N. Bank, supra; Wilson v. Sullivan, supra; Hartung v. Shaw, 130 Mich. 177, 89 N. W. 701; Bartlett v. Christhilf, 69 Md. 219, 14 Atl. 518), but it is plainly shown by the terms of section 47 of the Civil Code. Subdivisions 3, 4, and 5 of that section, dealing, respectively, with communications to a person interested therein, with reports in public journals of judicial, legislative or other public proceedings, and with reports of the proceedings of public meetings, make the privilege, in each case, dependent upon the want of malice. But subdivision 2 is not so qualified. All of the cases cited by appellant come within the terms of one or another of subdivisions 3, 4, and 5. What is said in these cases with reference to malice has no application to a case depending on the terms of subdivision 2. Subject to the possible limitation of relevancy and materiality, the privilege attaching to statements made in the course of judicial proceedings is absolute.

We are satisfied that the charges made against plaintiff in the complaint filed by the defendants were pertinent and material to the subject of the action in which such complaint was filed, and hence could not be the foundation of an action for libel, even if the more limited rule of privilege be applied. The complaint in question undertook to set forth a cause of action by minority stockholders of a corporation, on behalf of themselves and such other stockholders as might come in, against the corporation and its directors, of whom the plaintiff herein was one, to compel the said plaintiff, who, as was alleged, held the majority of the stock and controlled the board of directors, to account to the corporation for moneys collected under invalid assessments and appropriated by him to his own use, and for other moneys of the corporation so appropriated. An injunction and other relief was also asked.

[3] That any stockholder may bring an action to enforce a claim of the corporation against one who is in control of the board of directors and can thus prevent an action in the name of the corporation itself is well settled. 2 Cook, Corp. § 645; Dodge v. Woolsey, 18 How. 331, 15 L. Ed. 401. And it is equally clear that the alleged misappropriations of corporate funds by one occupying a fiduciary relation to the corporation were the very gist of the cause of action asserted, and that the averments of which the plaintiff here complains were relevant and material to that cause of action. As against the showing of the exact contents of the pleading which was thus filed against the plaintiff, his allegation in his complaint for libel that the publications charging him with misconduct were not pertinent or material is a mere conclusion of law, which is not admitted by the demurrer (Glide v. Dwyer, 83 Cal. 477, 23 Pac. 706; Burling v. Newlands, 112 Cal. 476, 44 Pac. 810), and must be disregarded as contrary to the facts alleged.

[4] While it is ordinarily true that privilege is to be pleaded as affirmative matter of defense to an action for libel (Gilman v. McClatchy, 111 Cal. 606, 44 Pac. 241), yet where the complaint shows on its face that the publication was privileged, the point may be raised on general demurrer. In each of the cases of Hollis v. Meux, supra, and Ball v. Rawles, supra, a demurrer to the complaint had been sustained, and the action of the court below was upheld on appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

CORDLER v. KEFFEL. (L. A. 2,752.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 5, 1911.)

1. Master and Servant (§ 289*)—Actions for Injuries—Question for Jury.

In an action by plaintiff, who was employed as a gardener about defendant's premises, for personal injuries resulting from falling into a well, alleged to have been negligently covered by the defendant, held, that the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence in walking across the cover was for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 1106; Dec. Dig. § 289.*]

2. Appeal and Error (§ 999*) — Review — Verdict—Conclusiveness.

On appeal to the Supreme Court, the decision of the jury on a question of fact is conclusive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3912–3924; Dec. Dig. § 999.*]

3. Master and Servant (§ 89*)—Master's Liability—Scope of Employment.

Plaintiff, who was employed by defendant to work as a gardener, had walked to his place of work, obtained a rake from the toolhouse, and then went to hang his coat on a standpipe near a covered well, and to get a drink of water therefrom, during which he crossed the covering of an old well which lay in his way, and by reason of the decayed condition of the covering fell into the well, and was injured. Held that, in crossing the covered well, he was acting within the scope of his employment.

4. Master and Servant (§ 124*) — Safe Place to Work—Inspection.

Where the covering to an old well located on defendant's premises became dangerous through gradual decay, the defendant, on employing one to work about the premises, was not bound to make reasonable inspection of the premises at the time he set the employé to work, nor to continuously fulfill the duty of inspection.

5. Master and Servant (§ 124*) — Safe Place to Work—Failure of Master to Inspect.

Where an owner of premises on which an old well 125 feet deep, covered with boards, was located did not examine the covering, which had been on the well for 11 years, but once, 4 years before the time an employé on the premises fell through the covering, and was injured, his failure to inspect the covering would, under the circumstances, be negligence.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1064*) — HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for personal injuries resulting from falling through a board covering of a well located on premises where plaintiff was employed, error in an instruction as to defendant's duty of inspection is harmless, where his failure to inspect was shown to be negligent.

7. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 124*) — SAFE PLACE TO WORK — INSPECTION — HIDDEN DANGERS.

The duty of a master to his servant requires him to make a reasonably careful inspection to enable him to learn of dangers, not apparent to the eye, to which the servant may be exposed while engaged at the place where he is directed to work; and this duty applies where the master sets a servant to work on premises in which a deep well is located, covered only with boards, damp and subject to decay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 235–242; Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

8. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 219*)—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—NATURE AND EXTENT.

Where an employé, acting in the scope of his employment, voluntarily takes a place which he is not required to take, he assumes the risk which may attach to such place, which is obvious to him by the use of ordinary care, and which is greater than the risk which he may have taken by reason of his employment.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1058*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for personal injuries resulting to plaintiff from falling through a covering of a deep well located on premises where he was employed, a witness, who had at least glanced at the under surface of the cover, was asked whether he noticed anything decayed about the covering at that time, and subsequently testified that he saw nothing peculiar about the covering, and in effect answered the question. Held, that the exclusion of the question was harmless error.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. R. Hervey, Judge.

Action by Fred Cordler against Max E. H. Keffel. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

H. T. Morrow, for appellant. Gray, Barker, Bowen, Allen, Van Dyke & Jutten, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Appeals are here presented from the judgment and from an order refusing a new trial.

Plaintiff sued for damages alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant. The verdict was in favor of the plaintiff, and judgment followed. The points presented upon this appeal arise upon the ruling upon the motion for a new trial, consisting entirely of alleged insufficiency of the evidence and errors of law occurring at the trial.

1. It is first contended that the evidence shows that the plaintiff's injury was in part caused by his own negligence. He was employed by the defendant to work as a gardener in a nursery belonging to the defendant. In the nursery grounds was a well 125 feet deep, 30 feet of which was filled with water. It was dug many years before, and was not in use. It was covered with boards lying flat a little above the natural surface of the earth. By reason of age and decay, they had become weak and insufficient to support the plaintiff's weight. Plaintiff did not know of the existence of the well, defendant did not inform him thereof, and the appearance of the boards did not indicate to him that there was a well or excavation beneath them. He had been working about the premises for some time. The ground around and near the well had been spaded the day before the accident. The plaintiff had been directed to rake and pulverize the soil turned up by the spading. On the morning of the injury, he walked 2½ miles to the nursery, and got his rake out of the toolhouse in the nursery to go to work. He had been in the habit, while at work, of taking off his coat and hanging it upon a standpipe near this well, and also in the habit of obtaining water to drink from said standpipe. Feeling thirsty from his walk, he went to the standpipe to get a drink and hang his coat thereon. In doing so, the covering of this well lay directly in his way, and he walked over it, whereupon it broke with his weight, and he fell into the well. It is alleged that the defendant was negligent in permitting the boards to remain upon the well until they had become weak from decay, and in failing to inform the plaintiff of the existence of the well and the condition of the boards.

The plaintiff's testimony is to the effect that he did not know of the existence of the well until he fell into it, that the defendant did not tell him of it, and that there was nothing in the appearance of the boards to indicate that there was a well under them; that it was about five or six inches above the level of the ground and all level; and that the boards looked all right when he stepped upon them. He had seen them the day before, but had paid no particular attention to them. There was other testimony to the effect that the boards were supported by stringers or crosspieces, which were in a condition of dry rot on the underside, and that from an inspection of the upper surface they did not look decayed. There was a trapdoor, about two feet square, framed in the middle of the covering and flush with the other boards, fastened with hinges and latch, but the plaintiff did not observe it. There was some other evidence contrary to some of these facts, and tending to show that the platform was raised somewhat higher than the plaintiff's testimony indicated.

[1, 2] We see nothing here to compel the conclusion that the plaintiff failed to use due care in walking across the covering. It was obviously laid so that persons walking across it would not fall into the well. Under the circumstances, it was for the jury to determine whether or not a reasonably prudent man would walk across it or around it. The decision of the jury in such a case can be vacated only by the trial court on motion for a new trial. On appeal, it is conclusive.

[3] 2. There is no just basis for the claim that the plaintiff was not engaged in the service for which he was employed while walking over the boards. He had reached the place of work and the time was at hand; he had obtained the rake from the toolhouse, and was proceeding to hang his coat at the usual place, when the accident occurred. He was clearly within the general scope of his employment, was going where he had a right to go, and where he might reasonably be expected to go, if occasion arose. He was, therefore, not a mere licensee or trespasser, and he did not assume the risk of injury from the rotten condition of the boards, of which he was unaware.

[4-6] 3. The court instructed the jury that the duty of the employer to furnish the employé a safe place in which to work, and see to it that there are no concealed dangers to the employé, requires the employer to "make reasonable inspection of the premises at the time he sets the servant to work"; that "the duty of inspection must be continuously fulfilled and positively performed." This is assigned as error. We do not agree to the proposition that in a case such as this, where the defect arises from the gradual processes of decay, the employer is required to examine the condition of the boards and the supporting timbers every day. Reasonable care would scarcely demand such diligence. If the question of the exact time of inspection was at all important, or could have had any effect upon the verdict, and the instruction is to be so understood, a reversal would be necessary. But the defendant's testimony was that the covering had been on the well 11 years, and that he had examined it but once, about 4 years before the accident. He did not say or claim that the examination then was for the purpose of discovering decay. The failure to examine such a covering over a well of that depth for that length of time, if the well were situated where persons might be expected to go upon it, would be unreasonable and negligent, under the circumstances of this case. The instruction could not have prejudiced the defendant.

[7] 4. There was no error in the instruction that if the defect in the platform was secret and unknown, and was incident to ordinary wear and tear, and could not have been discovered by reasonable inspection, the jury should find for the defendant. The supposed error was in the insertion of the phrase "and could not have been discovered by a reasonably careful inspection." The duty of a master to his servant requires him to make a reasonably careful inspection at reasonable intervals to learn of dangers, not apparent to the eye, to which the servant may be exposed while engaged at the place where he is directed to work. Each case of this sort depends largely upon its own peculiar circumstances. This well was very deep. A fall into it would be attended with great danger and probably cause death. The water below would tend to keep the undersurface of the boards damp, and this would cause decay. They had been in place 11 years without any careful inspection. Under these circumstances, a reasonably careful man would not have been content to allow them to remain without some inspection, or something more than a passing glance at the upper surface. It being defendant's duty, therefore, to make a reasonably careful inspection and discover the defects reasonably to be apprehended after such a lapse of time, but not obvious without inspection, the qualification was a proper one. The decision in Baddeley v. Shea, 114 Cal. 1, 45 Pac. 990, 33 L. R. A. 747, 55 Am. St. Rep. 56, is not in conflict with this conclusion. The circumstances were different. The front steps there involved had not been in place so long; they were in daily use, and the danger to be apprehended from their breaking down would not be so great.

[8] 5. Another instruction excepted to is as follows: "The court instructs you that, if an employé in the discharge of his duties voluntarily takes a place which he is not required to take, he assumes the risk which may attach to such place which is obvious to him by the use of ordinary care, and which is greater than the risk attached to the place he may have taken by reason of his employment." This instruction was asked by the defendant, except the phrase "which is obvious to him by the use of ordinary care," the insertion of which clause is claimed to be error. If the plaintiff had been going beyond the scope of his duty, the insertion of this clause may have been unwarranted by the law. As to this, we need not decide. As we have seen, he was engaged in the work at which he was set, and in that case he would only be required to use ordinary care to avoid danger. The instruction, as applied to this case, was correct.

[9] 6. A witness who had looked into the well two weeks before the accident was asked the question: "Did you notice anything rotten about the wood or covering at that time?" An objection that this was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial was sustained. Counsel are frequently too much given to such objections, and the trial courts are too ready to sustain them. They interrupt the orderly introduction of the evidence and produce no benefit. The question was proper, though unimportant. The witness had at least glanced at the covering on its undersurface at that time. If that glance, although he was not looking for decay, had not caused him to notice such decay, the fact would have been evidence in favor of the defendant that no decay was obvious. But in his subseqent testimony he said that he saw nothing peculiar about these boards. In substance, therefore, he did answer the question, and the ruling caused no injury.

These appear to be all the points urged in favor of reversal. We find no prejudicial error in the record.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

FLORA v. BIMINI WATER CO.

(L. A. 2,748.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 7, 1911.)

1. THEATERS AND SHOWS (§ 6*)—INJURIES—FINDINGS—CONSTRUCTION.

In an action for the alleged drowning of plaintiff's intestate in defendant's natatorium, the court found for defendant on the averment of negligence. Two other findings as to contributory negligence, however, recited that "if plaintiff sustained the injuries set forth in the complaint the same were not caused wholly and entirely by his fault and negligence, and without any fault, carelessness or negligence on defendant's part," and that the injuries were not caused without any fault, carelessness, or negligence on the part of defendant. Held that, though as a mere matter of grammatical construction such findings indicated that the injuries were caused by defendant's negligence, the findings were not to be so construed under the rule that all the findings are to be read as a whole and so interpreted as to uphold the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Theaters and Shows, Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

2. THEATERS AND SHOWS (§ 6*)—DANGEROUS PREMISES—NATATORIUM—GUARDS.

In an action for the drowning of plaintiff's intestate in defendant's natatorium, evidence held to sustain a finding that defendant was not negligent in failing to provide sufficient life guards, experienced in life saving to rescue persons exposed to drowning.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. R. Hervey, Judge.

Action by Mary Flora against the Bimini Water Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. B. Drake, for appellant. John Murray Marshall and Wilbur Bassett, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. This action was brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's 12 year old son, Veach Criswell. The defendant is the proprietor of a bathing establishment in the city of Los Angeles. On February 26, 1909, young Criswell visited said establishment, and, entering a swimming tank or plunge therein, was drowned. The complaint alleges that his death was due to the negligent failure of defendant "to provide a person or persons experienced in life-saving to be then and there present for the purpose of rescuing the deceased, or anyone else, who was liable then and there to drown." It further alleged that defendant had knowledge of the dangerous character of the plunge when used without a proper life guard stationed at or near the place where the boy was drowned, but that, notwithstanding such knowledge it negligently failed to provide any such life guard. The answer denied the allegations of negligence, and set up, as an affirmative defense, that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, and that if he sustained any of the injuries set forth in said complaint, "the same were caused wholly and entirely by the fault, carelessness, and negligence of plaintiff, and without any fault, carelessness or negligence upon the part of this defendant." The contributory negligence of the infant himself is alleged in similar terms.

The cause was tried by the court without a jury. The findings were against the plaintiff on her averments of negligence, and judgment went in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment, bringing up the evidence by means of a bill of exceptions.

[1] The principal contention on this appeal is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the findings negativing negligence on the part of the defendant. Before considering this question, we may, however, briefly notice the claim of appellant that the findings themselves do not support the judgment. This claim is based upon the language used by the court in making its findings in response to the issue of contributory negligence. It found, in finding No. 10, that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence, and that "if the plaintiff sustained the injuries set forth in said complaint, the same were not caused wholly and entirely by the fault, carelessness, and negligence of plaintiff and without any fault, carelessness, and negligence on the part of the defendant." A similar finding (No. 11) was made with respect to the plea of contributory negligence on the part of Veach Criswell himself. It is said that these findings declare that the injuries were not caused "without any fault, carelessness, or negligence on the part of the defendant"; that they therefore find, in effect, that the injuries were caused by the defendant's negligence, and that they are so directly in conflict with the findings in favor of defendant on the issue of its negligence that the judgment cannot be supported. But it seems clear that findings 10 and 11 were not intended to declare, as a fact found, that the defendant had been guilty of negligence. As a mere matter of grammatical construction they may bear such meaning. But the findings of the court are to be read as a whole, and are, if possible, to be so interpreted as to uphold the judgment entered upon them. Krasky v. Wollpert, 134 Cal. 338, 66 Pac. 309; Paine v. San B. V. T. Co., 143 Cal. 654, 77 Pac. 659. Findings 10 and 11 were evidently intended to meet the issue of contributory negligence, and that alone. They follow the exact form of the defenses averring such contributory negligence, and traverse every element of that defense. The court might have stopped with a finding that the injuries were not caused by the negligence of the plaintiff or of Veach Criswell. In going on and finding, further, that such injuries were not caused "without the fault, carelessness, or negligence of the defendant," it sought to find on everything stated in the attempted defense, and it inadvertently used language which was not entirely appropriate to convey the idea in its mind. But it certainly cannot have intended, in finding against the plea of contributory negligence, to make a finding which should be directly contradictory to what it had already found on the main issue of defendant's negligence. Reading the findings as thus suggested, they may readily be harmonized, and in such manner as to give effect to the apparent intention of the court making them.

[2] On the question of the sufficiency of the evidence, the only question is whether there was enough to justify the finding that the defendant provided and caused to be present persons experienced in life-saving for the purpose of rescuing any person who was liable to drown; and did provide proper life guards at said time and place. We need not enter into any discussion concerning the rules of law governing the duty of one maintaining a swimming or bathing establishment frequented by the public. Since the court found in this case that the defendant did have present persons experienced in life-saving and did provide proper life guards, it is immaterial whether it be said that the duty of furnishing such protection arises, as matter of law, or that the necessity for such provision is, in each case, a question of fact for the trial court or jury. See Larkin v. Saltair Beach Co., 30 Utah, 86, 83 Pac. 686, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 982, 116 Am. St. Rep. 818; Brotherton v. Manhattan Beach Imp. Co., 48 Neb. 563, 67 N. W. 479, 33 L. R. A. 598, 58 Am. St. Rep. 709, s. c. 50 Neb. 214, 69 N. W. 757.

The defendant's establishment was in a building containing three pools or tanks. Two of these were situated side by side, running for a distance of 92 feet along the longer axis of the building. They were separated by a tile wall 21 inches in width. One of them, the one in which the plaintiff's son met his death, was 40 feet wide, the other 30. The first was graded in depth, beginning with 3 feet of water at one end, and increasing to 7 at the other. The third pool ran across the building, opposite the ends of the two first mentioned. It was 70 feet in length, and was separated from the others by a cement deck 8 feet wide. The deep water in the first pool was at the end farthest removed from this deck. The depth of the tank at various points was plainly indicated by signs painted on the sides.

The accident resulting in Criswell's death occurred at about 8 o'clock in the evening. There were some 25 or 30 bathers in the tank at the time. Criswell had gone to the baths with another boy, Harold Rampe. Both, it appears, were able to swim. Criswell jumped in at the deep end. He failed to rise above the surface. Rampe, observing this, dove in and attempted a rescue. Failing, he got out of the pool, and ran to the cement deck at the other end, where he found a life guard, upon whom he called for help. The guard at once ran (or "trotted") along the dividing wall of the two tanks toward the scene of the trouble. When he reached a point opposite the spot where the boy had sunk, having taken, as he said, about 15 seconds to get there, the body had already been taken out of the water by other bathers. Every possible effort to resuscitate the boy was made, but in vain. Rampe testified that he had repeatedly shouted for help while he was in the water with the drowning boy, but there was ample evidence to justify the court below in discrediting this statement. So, too, the testimony was such as to warrant the conclusion that any struggle on the part of either boy took place under the surface of the water.

The life guard who responded to the call for help was an expert swimmer and life-saver. He was employed at the baths as a teacher of swimming, and it was his duty to act as life guard. He was so acting on the evening in question, and had taken his station on the deck opposite the shallow end of the first pool, at a point from which he could watch the three pools, and he was watching them. At the moment of the drowning, he was facing in such manner that his side was turned toward the tank in which the boys were. He heard no cry for help, and observed no struggle in the water. He testified that, from the point at which he was standing, he could not have seen Criswell struggling below the surface. The first intimation of trouble came to him with the appeal of the other boy for help. There were other employés, stationed at various points about the tank. Three of them were women, who had various duties to perform, but each had instructions to watch the pool. One of them, who testified that she was about 30 feet from the place of drowning, had been trained in the use of the life buoys and life poles which were at hand for use near the deep water. A foreman was also on duty watching the pool. At the time of the occurrence in question he was with the swimming teacher.

On this state of facts there is no foundation for the claim that the finding that the defendant had not been guilty of negligence was unsustained by the evidence. The showing was that a rather elaborate and complete system for the vigilant supervision of the pools had been established, and there was nothing to compel the inference that the persons charged with the duty of watching the pools were not giving proper attention to this duty. The mere fact that a drowning occurred, regrettable though it be, is not, of course, conclusive proof of negligence. Nor can it be said that the defendant was, as matter of law, bound to have a guard stationed in immediate proximity to the deep water end of the pool. It was possible that bathers at other points might get into positions of danger, and it was for the court below to determine, under all the facts, whether the arrangements made were reasonably adapted to the end of protecting the defendant's patrons, and were such as an ordinarily prudent person, situated as defendant was, would have made.

The judgment is affirmed.

STEIN v. LEEMAN. (Sac. 1,863.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 8, 1911.)

1. INTEREST (§ 50*)—EFFECT OF TENDER.

On specific performance of a contract to convey, the purchaser should not be required to pay interest from the date of a refused tender of payment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Interest, Cent. Dig. § 114; Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1177*)—REVERSAL—EFFECT.

Reversal of a judgment for plaintiff and an order refusing a new trial, remanded the cause to the lower court for new trial on all the issues made by the pleadings, judgment for defendant without trial on going down of remittitur being improper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4597–4620; Dec. Dig. § 1177.*]

3. ESTOPPEL (§ 68*)—CLAIM IN JUDICIAL PROCEEDING.

One holding an option to purchase an undivided half interest in land at $4 an acre, by claiming on a former trial of a suit for specific performance, that the option was an offer to sell the vendor's interest at $2 an acre and that a tender made in the language of the option was a tender of that amount, was not estopped to claim on a subsequent trial, and after the Supreme Court decided on appeal that the price was $4 an acre and not $2 as found by the trial court, to present his offer as a sufficient tender at $4 an acre and as an acceptance of the option; he not having been put in default by any demand by the vendor for payment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. §§ 165–169; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

4. ESTOPPEL (§ 68*)—EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL—ESSENTIALS.

An equitable estoppel is not raised by conduct of one party to a suit unless, by reason thereof, the other party has been so placed as to make it unjust to him to allow the first party to change position.

5. ESTOPPEL (§ 68*)—CLAIM IN JUDICIAL PROCEEDING.

One suing on a contract can claim a construction unjustly favorable to him and ask for a larger judgment than he is entitled to without being estopped to claim his lawful right before the cause is determined, if the other party will not be prejudiced by the change of claim.

6. ESTOPPEL (§§ 54, 58*)—ESSENTIALS—PREJUDICE.

To constitute estoppel, the condition caused by the conduct of him to be estopped, must be such that the other party will be prejudiced, if the first party is permitted to pursue another course, and claimant of the estoppel must himself have been ignorant of the truth of the matter or of the extent of his rights concerning the same.

7. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 170*)—TENDER OF PRICE—SUFFICIENCY.

Under Civ. Code, § 1489, permitting a tender to be made at a creditor's residence if he evades the debtor, where a vendor evades the purchaser to prevent a tender of performance, the tender may be made at the vendor's residence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 344; Dec. Dig. § 170.*]

8. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 170*)—TENDER—EVASION—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to show evasion by the vendor under a contract to convey, of a tender of performance by the purchaser, permitting a tender at the vendor's residence under Civ. Code, § 1489.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Dec. Dig. § 170.*]

9. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 18*)—OPTION—CONSIDERATION—SUFFICIENCY.

An agreement by the grantee of an option to purchase land to bear a share of the expense of farming the land during the term of the option is sufficient consideration to support the option.

10. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 18*)—OPTION — EXTENSION — CONSIDERATION — SUFFICIENCY.

Under Civ. Code, § 1605, making any benefit to which one is not lawfully entitled, sufficient consideration for a promise, an agreement to extend an option to purchase land, is sustained by the grantee extending the time for settlement by the grantor of an account arising under the original contract.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Madero County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by M. P. Stein against Letitia A. Leeman, administratrix of the estate of J. F. Archibald. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed in department, and, on rehearing, affirmed by the Supreme Court.

Robert L. Hargrove and Frank H. Farrar, for appellant. Nicol & Orr and Francis A. Fee (Bert Schlesinger, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM. A re-examination of the questions involved in this case convinces the court of the soundness of the opinion and judgment rendered in department.

[1] To the contention, for the first time advanced in the petition for a rehearing, that Stein should be compelled to pay interest from the date of his tender, a complete answer is found in Ferrea v. Tubbs, 125 Cal. 687, 58 Pac. 308, and Wadleigh v. Phelps, 149 Cal. 642, 87 Pac. 93. For the reasons given in the department opinion, hereto appended, the judgment and order are affirmed.

"Shaw, J.: This is an appeal from the judgment, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

[2] "The cause was heretofore considered by this court upon an appeal by the defendant from a judgment given upon a previous trial and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. The judgment and order then appealed from were reversed. Stein v. Archibald, 151 Cal. 220, 90 Pac. 536. After the first trial J. F. Archibald, the original defendant, died, and the present defendant, as administratrix of his estate, was substituted. The effect of the reversal was that the cause was remanded to the lower court for a new trial of all the issues made by the pleadings. There is no force in the defendant's contention that the decision of that appeal by this court required the lower court, upon the going down of the remittitur, to enter judgment for the defendant without trial, and no merit in the motion of defendant to enter such judgment. Davis v. Le Mesnager, 155 Cal. 520, 101 Pac. 910. Upon the new trial which took place judgment was again given for plaintiff.

[3] "The action was to compel specific performance of an alleged agreement to sell and convey real estate, and for an accounting of the income therefrom. The agreement is set forth in the opinion upon the former appeal and it is not necessary to repeat it in full. It covered 9,680 acres of land. Its date was October 9, 1897. By its terms Archibald agreed to sell to Stein, 'an undivided one-half interest' in the tract, at any time within three years from its date, if, within that time, Stein should pay him '$4 per acre for the undivided one-half of all of said described land.' The time was afterwards extended to October 9, 1902. Upon the first trial the lower court construed the above quoted language to mean that Stein was to pay only at the rate of $2 for the entire area of land, which it then found to be only 9,640 acres. It adjudged performance by Archibald upon payment to him of $19,280. The only point decided by this court, upon the appeal from that judgment, was that this interpretation was erroneous, and that Stein was bound to pay, in performance of the contract, at the rate of $4 per acre for the entire area, for an undivided one-half interest therein.

"Before beginning the action Stein made a written offer of performance, following therein the exact language of the agreement with respect to the price, but not stating the sum total. It stated, 'You will please take notice that I am now able, ready, and willing and hereby offer to pay you the sum of $4 per acre for an undivided one-half of all those certain lands,' describing them, upon the execution of a deed thereof, and it demanded a conveyance of said interest in said lands. The complaint, in substantially the same language, averred the making of the offer and the ability and readiness of plaintiff to pay upon the making of the proper deed. It did not allege the total sum or otherwise state the price of the land. The answer denied that the plaintiff had at any time offered to pay $4 per acre, or any other sum, for a conveyance of the land, or that plaintiff was able or ready to pay said sum, or any sum for such conveyance. Upon the first trial, the amount of money called for by the contract and covered by the offer was not mentioned or discussed. The written offer was produced as evidence and the plaintiff then in open court declared that he offered to 'pay to the defendant the sum of $4 per acre for an undivided one-half of the land,' and to bring the money into court; but no computation of the amount was made or demanded, nor was anything said to indicate whether plaintiff thereby intended to offer to pay $4 per acre for half the area, or $4 per acre for the entire area. The only place in the record of that trial in which the total price of the land appears to have been mentioned or considered was in the conclusions of law and judgment filed and rendered on February 8, 1905, each of which declared that the plaintiff was entitled to a deed upon payment of $19,280.

"Thereafter the plaintiff insisted that this sum was the price fixed by the contract, and in opposing the appeal he claimed the full benefit of the judgment upon that construction until it was finally reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial. Upon the last trial plaintiff again relied upon the original written offer, presenting it at that time as a sufficient tender of the entire sum of $38,720, and he then formally offered to bring that sum of money, naming it, into court. The court, upon the last trial, found that the area was 9,680 acres. The appellant claims that the plaintiff, by his conduct, while obtaining the first judgment and upon the appeal therefrom, in claiming that the agreement was an offer to sell the undivided one-half of the land for $19,360 and that the written offer was a tender of that amount, only, was estopped, on the second trial, to present the offer as a tender of $38,720, or to assert that it was sufficient as an offer of performance, or as an acceptance of the option.

"In the opinion upon the former appeal it was said that the language of the option referred to the area and not to the interest, and that it called for the payment of $38,720 as the price of the undivided one-half interest to be sold. If the option had this legal effect, it necessarily follows that the several offers to perform made in the written tender, repeated in the complaint, and again stated in court, being couched in the same language, would have the same legal effect. Therefore the tender was sufficient to convert the option into an enforceable agreement to buy and sell, and the complaint stated a good cause of action for specific performance. It does not appear that the defendant, at any time prior to the conclusion of the first trial and the filing of the findings and conclusions of law, made any objection to the language of the offer, or suggested that the sum offered was less than the price agreed to or that the offer did not specify the total amount of money offered, or that it was in any wise uncertain or ambiguous. Upon the written offer, according to its true meaning, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree of specific performance, at the time the cause was submitted upon the first trial, upon payment by him of $38,720. No demand of that sum, or offer to accept it, had been made by the defendant to put the plaintiff in default, and the plaintiff's offer, by its legal effect, was a good offer of performance for that amount. The plaintiff did not succeed in maintaining the judgment declaring him entitled to receive a conveyance upon the payment of half that sum. He failed in that contention and he gained nothing thereby. Neither did the defendant lose anything by reason thereof. His position was not changed for the worse by the erroneous judgment or by the unsuccessful effort of plaintiff to maintain the same upon the appeal. It is true that he incurred costs in prosecuting that appeal, but that outlay was recovered by the judgment. Defendant had the right, at any time before or after that decision, to offer a deed and demand the full sum of $38,720 as a condition of its delivery, and if, upon such demand, the plaintiff had failed to pay, he would have been in default, and the contract would have been at an end thenceforth. Defendant did not see fit to make any such offer or demand. His situation is substantially the same now as it was prior to the first judgment.

[4] "The case lacks some of the essential elements of an estoppel. An equitable estoppel is not raised by the conduct of one party in the course of a lawsuit, unless, by reason thereof, the other party has done some act or has been placed in a position that would render it unjust to him to allow the first party to change his own position in regard to the matter. Speaking of estoppels in the course of proceedings in court, Mr. Bigelow says: 'Where, then, no wrong would be done to the court or to the other parties to a cause by permitting a change of position, a change should in principle and will in fact be allowed.' Bigelow on Estoppel, 723.

[5] "A party suing upon a contract has a right to claim a construction thereof more favorable to him than it will bear and ask for a larger judgment than he is entitled to, and if he is refused such relief before the cause is determined, and the other party will not be prejudiced by a change of plaintiff's claim, plaintiff will still be at liberty to contend for that which is his lawful right.

[6] "In order to constitute an estoppel, the condition brought about by the conduct of the party to be estopped must be such that the other party will be injured or placed in a worse position if the first party is allowed to pursue another course or assert the fact to be contrary to his first statement, and the party claiming the estoppel must himself have been ignorant of the truth of the matter, or of the extent of his rights concerning the same. Boggs v. Merced M. Co., 14 Cal. 368; Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 40, 85 Am. Dec. 157; Dean v. Parker, 88 Cal. 287, 26 Pac. 91. These elements of estoppel, as we have seen, did not exist. The defendant may still preserve the rights he has under the contract, notwithstanding the unfounded claim of the plaintiff as to the price. The defendant was not at any time during the litigation ignorant of the terms of the contract, or of his rights under it. He was, in fact, insisting that the option had expired, and was unwilling to sell at the price he agreed to take by the terms of the option, namely, $38,720. We hold that the plaintiff is not estopped to insist now that his offer of performance was an offer to pay the true amount fixed by the contract as construed upon the former appeal.

[7, 8] "The appellant further contends that the written offer was insufficient because it was not made to Archibald in person. Stein resided at Stockton; Archibald resided near Madera on the land. On September 20, 1902, Stein sent a letter by registered mail addressed to Archibald at Madera, which was his post office address, stating therein his intention to settle with Archibald, and close the deal. Archibald was in Madera on that day, and again on September 25th. The letter was delivered to his sister, on September 24th, and Archibald did not receive it until October 13th. About the 1st of October,

Archibald left his house in a wagon and traveled to Alameda county, and from thence to Santa Cruz and Watsonville, staying but a short time in one place, and remained away from Madera until October 13th. This and other evidence, which we need not state in detail, shows clearly that he was endeavoring to evade the making of any offer by Stein. On the 6th of October, 1902, Stein went to Madera and made fruitless inquiries there for Archibald. From thence he went to Archibald's residence and inquired of his sister as to his whereabouts, and was informed that he was away from his home and that she did not know where he was. Thereupon, at Archibald's said residence, Stein delivered to her for Archibald the written tender in question. He also deposited a copy thereof in the post office at Madera, addressed to Archibald. The action was begun on October 8, 1902. These facts we think are sufficient to show that the tender was properly made. 'An offer of performance must be made to the creditor, * * * if such creditor is present at the place where the offer may be made; and if not, wherever the creditor may be found.' Civ. Code, § 1488. If this were the only provision of law upon the subject, the tender might be insufficient, but section 1489 of the Civil Code is as follows:

" 'In the absence of an express provision to the contrary an offer of performance may be made, at the option of the debtor:

" '(1) At any place appointed by the creditor; or,

" '(2) Wherever the person to whom the offer ought to be made can be found; or,

" '(3) If such person cannot, with reasonable diligence, be found within this state, and within a reasonable distance from his residence or place of business, or if he evades the debtor, then at his residence or place of business, if the same can, with reasonable diligence, be found within the state; or,

" '(4) If this cannot be done, then at any place within this state.'

"It appears from this provision that where the seller of land evades the buyer for the purpose of preventing a due offer of performance, the offer may be made at his place of residence. As we have said, the evidence shows that Archibald absented himself in order to evade the making of such offer. In that event it could have been made at his residence, and as it was made at that place on the 6th of October, 1902, two days before the suit was begun, the tender was complete.

[9, 10] "Appellant also claims that the agreement is merely an option and that it was without any consideration. This contention cannot be maintained. It is true that the agreement was a mere option, but a sufficient consideration therefor appears from the terms of the instrument itself. It recites that 'such party of the first part, in consideration of the agreements hereinafter expressed, to be performed by the party of the second part' (Stein), agrees to sell and convey the land, within three years. Another clause in the agreement provides that, during the terms of years therein specified, Stein would bear equally with Archibald all the expenses incurred in farming the land, and that Stein was to have one-half of the gross income arising therefrom. This agreement of Stein to assist in the farming operation was a sufficient consideration for the option. It was further contended that the two years' extension of the term of the agreement was without consideration. This claim also is without foundation. There is evidence to show that Stein and Archibald had farmed the land together for the first two years of the term of the contract, that Stein had paid out about $5,000 to assist therein, that Archibald had received and retained all the income therefrom, and that the account of these transactions required a settlement before it could be ascertained how much Stein should pay if he desired to purchase the land. The original contract expired on October 9, 1900. On that day Stein told Archibald that he was ready to settle the account and find out what was owing, and wanted to pay him whatever was due and receive a deed for half the land. Archibald then said he was not ready to make a settlement, but would try to get up the account as soon as possible, and upon Stein's objection that the contract was about to expire, Archibald said that he would renew it, and thereupon he executed a written contract extending the time for two years. Any benefit received by the maker of a promise to which he is not lawfully entitled is a sufficient consideration for its execution. Civ. Code, § 1605. Archibald by this promise obtained an extension of the time within which to get his account ready. The benefit may have been trifling, but he was not otherwise lawfully entitled to it, and it was sufficient to sustain the contract, as a matter of law. Smith v. Bangham, 156 Cal. 364, 104 Pac. 689, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 522.

"These comprise all the points which we deem it necessary to discuss."

KRISTE et al. v. INTERNATIONAL SAVINGS & EXCHANGE BANK.

(Civ. 967.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Oct. 24, 1911.)

1. Evidence (§ 340*)—Evidence of Judgment as Defense—Parol Evidence.

Code Civ. Proc. § 911, prescribes the entries to be made in a justice's docket, including the statement of the title of the action, the amount of the claim, a minute of the pleadings, and the judgment of the court, and section 912 makes such entries or a certified transcript thereof prima facie evidence of the facts stated. Held, that defendant, a banking corporation, in an action to recover a deposit, was entitled to introduce in evidence the docket record of a justice of the peace showing a judgment against plaintiff, and an execution against defendant, as garnishee; defendant claiming that the amount due plaintiff was paid to the constable in satisfaction of such execution.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 340.*]

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 58*)—JURISDICTION.

Until proof of service of summons, the record of a justice's docket not showing summons does not furnish complete proof in support of the judgment rendered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 178*)—BEST EVIDENCE—LOSS OF RECORD.

Where it was shown, in an action where defendant had set up a payment of a former judgment against plaintiffs as a defense, that the summons in the justice court had been lost, it was competent to prove by the justice's clerk that summons was issued and served.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 580–594; Dec. Dig. § 178.*]

4. NAMES (§ 16*)—IDEM SONANS.

The surnames "Christe" and "Prkachin" as defendants against whom judgment was entered in a justice's court are idem sonans with the surnames "Kriste" and "Perkacin" in an action in which the justice's judgment is pleaded as a defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Names, Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

5. NAMES (§ 18*)—IDENTITY OF PARTIES.

Where a justice's judgment against "Christe" and "Prkachin" has been set up as a defense to an action by "Kriste" and "Perkacin," the record of the justice's court becomes prima facie evidence under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 25, which presumes identity of persons from identity of names, and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, a finding that the parties were not identical was unsupported.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Names, Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

6. JUDGMENT (§ 949*)—PLEADING JUDGMENT AS DEFENSE—ALLEGATIONS.

The allegations in an answer, attempting to set up a judgment against plaintiffs as a defense, "that such proceedings were had thereafter as provided by law, that on the 14th day of March, 1910, judgment was rendered by said justice's court," do not comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 456, which permits a judgment of an inferior court to be pleaded merely as having been "duly given or made."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1795–1803; Dec. Dig. § 949.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 192*)—NECESSITY OF OBJECTIONS—DEFECT IN PLEADING.

A defect in a pleading, setting up a judgment of an inferior court as a defense, cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1221–1225; Dec. Dig. § 192.*]

8. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 171*)—FAILURE TO COLLECT—NOTICE OF NONPAYMENT—LIABILITY.

Plaintiffs had deposited with defendant bank for collection certain time checks, due thereafter on March 5, 1910, and defendant failed to collect the notes, and gave no notice of nonpayment to plaintiffs until more than a month after the bills were payable, and plaintiffs lost their right to proceed against their indorser and were damaged. Civ. Code, § 3149, provides that, where the holder of a negotiable instrument at the time of its dishonor is a mere agent for the owner, it is sufficient for him to give notice to his principal in the same way as to an indorser. Held, in an action for damages for defendant's failure to give seasonable notice of nonpayment, that defendant was liable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Dec. Dig. § 171.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by Geo. Kriste and G. Perkacin, copartners, doing business under the firm name of Geo. Kriste & Company, against the International Savings & Exchange Bank. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Robert A. Todd, for appellant. Leonard B. Slosson, for respondents.

JAMES, J. This action was brought by plaintiffs upon two alleged demands against defendant; the first being to recover the sum of $306.50, money alleged to have been deposited with defendant bank and which the latter had refused to repay the plaintiffs; the second being for the sum of $126 as damages alleged to have been suffered by plaintiffs because of the failure of defendant to give seasonable notice to the plaintiffs of the dishonor of certain negotiable instruments in the form of time checks, which had been indorsed to defendant for the purpose of collection. The judgment was in favor of the plaintiffs on both counts of their complaint, and this appeal is taken from that judgment, and also from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

In answering the first cause of action alleged by the plaintiffs, defendant admitted that the sum of money first claimed had been deposited with it in the usual course of its banking business and placed to the credit of plaintiffs. It was then set out by way of special defense that this credit had been levied upon under writ of execution issued on a judgment of the justice's court of Los Angeles township in an action brought by one Brodzevich against the plaintiffs, and that the full amount deposited had been paid to the constable holding such writ, upon his demand. At the trial, for the purpose of establishing this defense, the defendant called the clerk of the justice's court as a witness, who produced the docket of the justice and the files in the justice court action. The docket record was then offered in evidence; but upon a general objection being made by plaintiffs that this offered record was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, the court refused to allow the evidence to be received. The bill of exceptions shows that, after the offer had been made, the trial judge examined the record. The bill of exceptions then proceeds: "The Court: I find no summons here. Defendant's Attorney: The summons is not there, Judge; it's gone. The Court: There is a complaint and execution. Thereupon the court sustained the plaintiffs' objection to the question aforesaid propounded to the witness and as corrected by the court, to wit: 'Q. Now, you have the docket. Will you please read the court the docket in the case?' And refused to permit the justice's docket to be introduced and read in evidence." The witness was allowed to testify that he knew that a summons in the justice court case had been returned, and that since its return it had been lost; that he had made a diligent search, but could not find it. This witness was asked several questions to which objections were made and sustained by the court. Among these questions was the following: "Now, Mr. Clerk, what day was that summons issued?" The court, after sustaining an objection to this question, remarked: "If you are going to prove a lost summons, you will have to prove its contents by somebody who saw it and remembers its contents." Counsel for defendant then proceeded with the following questions: "Well, do you know whether on the 7th day of March of this year, in the case of Mike Brodzevich against George Christe and Prkachin, a summons was issued?" "Do you know what the contents of that summons was, if one was issued?" To each question objection made by the plaintiffs was sustained. The writ of execution as issued on the justice court judgment was allowed in evidence by the trial judge, and, so far as the bill of exceptions shows, this writ was the only document of the files of the justice's court which was permitted to be introduced in evidence, and there was no testimony, other than that stated, which referred to that action. Such was the state of the evidence with reference to the first cause of action when defendant rested, and the plaintiffs offered no testimony of any sort in rebuttal.

[1] If it appeared from the docket record of the justice referred to that the action in which judgment was rendered and the execution mentioned had issued was an action in which the plaintiffs here were defendants, then such record was admissible in evidence. Section 911 of the Code of Civil Procedure prescribes what entries shall be made in a justice's docket, and section 912 of the same Code provides that such entries, or a transcript thereof, certified by the justice, are prima facie evidence of the facts stated. In the entries required to be made in a justice's court docket is a statement of the title of the action, the amount of the claim, a minute of the pleadings, and the judgment of the court. As a part of its preliminary proof, defendant was entitled to have the docket record received in evidence.

[2] Of course, this record would not furnish complete proof in support of the judgment rendered by the justice until proof had been made of service of summons. Rowley v. Howard, 23 Cal. 401; Fisk v. Mitchell, 124 Cal. 359, 57 Pac. 149; Kane v. Desmond, 63 Cal. 464, and cases therein cited.

[3] It having appeared that the summons in the justice court action had been lost, the justice's clerk was a competent witness by whom to prove the issuance and service thereof. The questions asked of this witness, to which objection was sustained by the court, tended to that end. The witness was asked to state whether he knew that a summons was issued, also what the contents of the summons was; but these questions he was not permitted to answer. In the findings of the court, however, it is determined that an action was brought in the justice's court against Geo. Christe and Geo. Perkochin; that judgment was rendered therein and execution issued; and that the defendant paid to the constable holding the execution, upon his demand, the amount of plaintiffs' deposit. It is further found that the defendants in that action were not the plaintiffs in this suit.

Appellant argues, and very properly, we think, that it having been found by the court in accordance with the allegations of the answer that a judgment was rendered in the justice's court upon which the execution was issued, the further finding of the court that the plaintiffs in this action are not the same as the defendants in the justice court action is not sustained by the evidence.

[4] In the justice's court action the names of the defendants there were spelled "Christe" and "Prkachin," while the true names of plaintiffs were spelled "Kriste" and "Perkacin." These names as so differently spelled were of such similar sound as to make the rule of idem sonans clearly applicable. Donohoe-Kelly Banking Co. v. S. P. Co., 138 Cal. 183, 71 Pac. 93, 94 Am. St. Rep. 28.

[5] Identity of persons is presumed from identity of names. Section 1963, Code Civ. Proc. subd. 25. Therefore, the record of the justice's court would have furnished prima facie evidence of the identity of the defendants in that action with the plaintiffs here. As before noted, the plaintiffs did not, on their own behalf, attempt to show that in fact they were not the persons designated as defendants in the action brought in the justice's court. There was, therefore, no sufficient evidence upon which to base the finding made by the trial judge that the identity of the parties was not the same. Counsel for respondents, however, argues that the finding of the court, wherein it is determined that there was an action and judgment in the justice's court against Christe and Prkachin, is not a sufficient finding that there was a valid judgment there rendered. This argument does not come with much force; but, even though we concede that the finding is not as complete as it might have been upon that subject, the same result must follow when we refer to the rulings of the court made upon the admission of testimony. The defendant did attempt to prove the fact that an action had been brought, resulting in a judgment against the plaintiffs in the justice's court; but all of its offered testimony, both as to the record of the justice showing the proceedings had in the justice's court, and as to the issuance of a summons, was excluded. In our opinion, by these rulings the trial court erred.

[6,7] So far as the record on appeal discloses, no objection was raised in the superior court as to the sufficiency of the answer of the defendant, wherein the judgment of the justice's court upon which the execution hereinbefore referred to was issued, was attempted to be pleaded. It seems to have been treated by all parties and the court as a sufficient statement of the facts therein purporting to be set out. Respondents now for the first time make the objection that this plea was insufficiently alleged; but it is too late for such an objection to be presented. While the allegation appearing in the answer, "that such proceedings were had thereafter as provided by law, that on the 14th day of March, 1910, judgment was rendered by said justice's court," cannot be said to be a compliance with the provisions of section 456 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which permit a judgment of an inferior court to be pleaded merely as having been "duly given or made," still there was not a total absence of averment, and the pleading, as we have stated, was treated by the parties at the trial as being sufficient. That under such conditions advantage cannot be taken of a defect by objection made for the first time in an appellate court is held in the cases of White v. S. R. & S. Q. R. R. Co., 50 Cal. 417; Alhambra Addition Water Co. v. Richardson, 72 Cal. 599, 14 Pac. 379; Ortega v. Cordero, 88 Cal. 221, 26 Pac. 80; Sauer v. Eagle Brewing Co., 3 Cal. App. 127, 84 Pac. 425.

[8] While it necessarily follows from the conclusions expressed in the foregoing that the judgment must be reversed and a new trial had of the action, brief consideration may be given the questions argued affecting the correctness of the conclusions of the trial court made as to the cause of action which related to the negotiable instruments called time checks which were transferred to defendant for the purpose of collection. On this branch of the case we agree with the determination as made by the trial judge. It appears that the Patillo Contracting Company drew certain orders, 11 in number, against itself, payable to the persons whose names appeared therein as payees, or their order, and that several of the payees indorsed these time checks over to the plaintiffs, who in turn deposited them with defendant for collection. These time checks were payable at the office of the contracting company on March 5, 1910, and were deposited with the defendant bank prior to that date. Defendant bank failed to secure payment of these orders and gave no notice of nonpayment to plaintiffs until April 6, 1910, more than one month after the several bills became payable. No excuse for the delay in giving notice of dishonor of these negotiable instruments was offered by defendant, except the plea was made that the bank had handled the time checks in the manner it was accustomed to handle such matters; and further it was pleaded in defense that the Patillo Contracting Company had on the 5th day of March, 1910, become insolvent. It was not shown in evidence that plaintiffs had notice of the custom of the bank as to the time of giving notice of nonpayment, or that, by any condition of agreement made with the bank at the time the checks were deposited for collection, plaintiffs excused defendant from the duty of giving prompt notice of nonpayment of such checks. Section 3149, Civil Code, provides that "when the holder of a negotiable instrument, at the time of its dishonor, is a mere agent for the owner, it is sufficient for him to give notice to his principal in the same manner as to an indorser, and his principal may give notice to any other party to be charged, as if he were himself an indorser." Plaintiffs, in order to protect themselves in their right of recourse against their immediate indorser, were required to give notice to the latter promptly upon payment of the checks being refused by the maker, failing in which the indorser would be discharged from liability. Under the facts shown in this case, because of the delay of defendant bank in giving such a notice to the plaintiffs, they lost their right to proceed against their indorser, and were for that reason damaged because of defendant's negligence. We quote from Bolles' Modern Law of Banking, p. 573: "In an action on an indorsed note, check, or other instrument whereby, through the bank's negligence, the indorser is discharged, prima facie the owner of the paper has been injured to the amount of the face of it. This rule is founded on the presumption that the indorser was solvent. If the fact is otherwise, this may be shown in reducing the damages." In our opinion, the liability of defendant for the amount claimed in the last cause of action alleged in plaintiffs' complaint was clearly made out by the evidence.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

JONES v. DENROCHE. (Civ. 1,030.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct. 30, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court, Dec. 28, 1911.)

1. RECORDS (§ 17*)—RESTORATION.

A court has the right of its own motion to restore its own records.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Records, Cent. Dig. § 28; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

2. RECORDS (§ 17*)—RESTORING DESTROYED RECORDS—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

The sole object of St. 1906, p. 73, providing for the restoration of court records which have been destroyed by conflagration, is to restore the record as it existed, regardless of its regularity or legal effect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Records, Cent. Dig. § 35; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

3. RECORDS (§ 17*)—RESTORING DESTROYED RECORDS—PARTIES ENTITLED TO REMEDY.

A final decree was made following the terms of a will and distributing certain real property to the testator's son as sole heir for the period of his natural life with a disposition on his death, "provided, however, that in case of the death of the son before his wife she should have during her natural life and while she remained his widow, the sum of $300 per month and one-half of the income given to her children under the will." Thereafter the wife obtained a divorce from the son, and was awarded permanent alimony, and the son thereafter married again, and at his death left a will providing that the divorced wife should receive alimony as agreed. Held, that the wife was a party entitled to have the probate records restored under St. 1906, p. 73.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Simon L. Jones, deceased. Petition by Eugenia J. Jones for the restoration of destroyed records, opposed by Elsie P. Denroche. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Powell & Dow, for appellant. Charles L. James, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order made after final judgment, restoring certain lost and destroyed records.

In 1890 Simon L. Jones died, leaving a will. About a year later, the estate having been duly administered, a final decree of distribution was made therein which, following the terms of the will, distributed certain real property to the son and sole heir of the deceased, Everitt D. Jones, for the period of his natural life, and decreed that upon his death said real property should vest in equal shares in Elsie P. Denroche, the appellant, and Sidney Lloyd Jones, children of Everitt D. Jones, "provided, however, that in case of the death of said Everitt before his wife Eugenia, she should have during her natural life and while she remained his widow, the sum of three hundred ($300) dollars per month and one-half of the income given to the children of Everitt under this will." Thereafter, in 1899, in an action which had been instituted by Eugenia, she was granted a final decree of divorce from Everitt, and was awarded $160 per month permanent alimony. In March, 1907, Everitt, on his deathbed, married Bertha Grace Turner, and a few hours later died, leaving a will, which, among other things, provided that his former wife, Eugenia, should receive during the term of her natural life the sum of $160 per month as provided in the decree of divorce. In the conflagration of April, 1906, in San Francisco, all the papers and records in the estate of Simon L. Jones were destroyed. Two years later Eugenia Jones filed for the restoration of that record, which petition was opposed by Elsie P. Denroche, principally upon the ground that Eugenia was not a party or person interested in the record sought to be restored within the terms of the statute relating to the restoration of lost or destroyed records. Stat. 1906, p. 73. After full hearing the trial court held with petitioner, and accordingly ordered the records and papers restored.

The appellant argues that the petitioner, having divorced her husband, has no interest in the record, and consequently it should not have been restored at her instance.

We cannot agree with this position. The obvious purpose of the proceeding permitted by the statute in question is to have conclusive evidence of the contents of the record, and thus to dispense with the necessity of resorting to secondary evidence in any litigation that may arise to enforce rights or obligations established by such record, or in other cases where resort to it is usual or necessary. It is perfectly clear, we think, from the provisions of the decree of distribution in the record sought to be restored above recited that the petitioner has such an interest in said record as to entitle her to have it restored. She is directly mentioned in said decree of distribution, and substantial rights given to her under certain contingencies. The evidence introduced by the appellant upon the hearing of the petition in the court below certainly fails to show that the petitioner is a mere interloper, with no possible or debatable interest in the record, in which event only should she be denied the restoration of the record sought. Even if an examination of the authorities would show, as claimed by appellant, that the petitioner having divorced Everitt D. Jones prior to his death, she is not entitled to the provision made for her under the will of Simon L. Jones (upon which question we express no opinion); still that is not a question to be determined in a proceeding to restore a record, especially where upon the face of the record itself her interest is undisputed. We think it entirely proper that in such a case the record should be restored, and the parties be put into a position to litigate their differences precisely as if the record had not been destroyed. In the language of the court in the case of Vail v. Iglehart, 69 Ill. 332: "The sole object of this proceeding is to restore a record; and we do not conceive that the ends of justice would be promoted by complicating it with other issues."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

There is nothing in the case of Garwood v. Garwood, 29 Cal. 514, in conflict with this view. In that case in a certain estate a petition for letters of administration by Henrietta M. Garwood was resisted by Joseph Garwood, and, after a hearing it was ordered that the objections to her appointment be held for naught. Thereupon, when the first annual account of the administratrix came up for settlement, Joseph Garwood applied to the court for permission to contest the same, but the court found that he had no interest in the estate, and denied his petition. There the question of interest did not arise, as here, in an independent proceeding; but even in that case, notwithstanding that the superior court had just previously gone fully into the subject of Garwood's interest in the estate, the Supreme Court plainly intimated that it would have been a proper exercise of discretion to have allowed Garwood to contest the account. In that case the views of the court are stated in the syllabus as follows: "However remote or contingent the interest of a person may be who asks to be allowed to contest an administrator's account, his right to contest should not be denied."

[1] Under the circumstances of this case, and in view of the fact that the court had the power of its own motion to restore its own records (34 Cyc. 606), we are at a loss to understand upon what reasonable theory it can be said that the trial court in restoring the record abused its discretion.

[2] The authorities are numerous to the effect that the sole object of statutes like the one here under consideration is to restore the record as it existed, and that as a rule the regularity or legal effect of the record will not be considered. Kanke v. Herrum, 48 Iowa, 276; Whitney v. Jasper Land Co., 119 Ala. 497, 500, 24 South. 259; 19 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 558; 34 Cyc. 610. This principle was applied in Vail v. Iglehart, 69 Ill. 332, 336, where it was held improper to allow a person opposing a motion to restore a lost record to show that the attorney who confessed the judgment had no power to do so, the court observing that questions affecting the judgment, other than those which appear on the face of the record sought to be substituted, should not be investigated in such a proceeding. Continuing the court said that the record should be restored substantially as it was, even if voidable, and the other party left to make whatever defenses not appearing from the face of the record that might exist, precisely as he could had the record not been destroyed.

[3] So, in the present case, it appears from the face of the record that the petitioner is a beneficiary under the terms of the will of Simon L. Jones; and under the doctrine of the cases just referred to the record should be restored, and the appellant left to such defenses as she may have just as though the record had not been lost or destroyed.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

VALENTINE v. GRAND LODGE, A. O. U. W., OF CALIFORNIA.

(Civ. 868.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct. 27, 1911.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 756*)—FRATERNAL INSURANCE—FORFEITURE OF CERTIFICATE.

Where a member of a fraternal benefit society, operated under the lodge system, applied for an indorsement of his certificate as a paid-up certificate pursuant to the laws of the society, and agreed in his application that the failure to pay any amount required by the laws of the society should forfeit all claims under the certificate as provided by the laws of the society, declaring that where a member fails to pay dues within the time specified he shall stand suspended and no action on the part of the lodge or any officer thereof shall be essential to effect his suspension, his failure to pay dues called for by the laws of the society operated as a forfeiture of the certificate without action by the society or subordinate lodge.

2. INSURANCE (§ 756*)—FRATERNAL INSURANCE — SUSPENSION FROM ORDER—FORFEITURE OF CERTIFICATE.

A member of a fraternal benefit society may forfeit his rights under a certificate without being suspended from the society, and the laws of the society for suspension for nonpayment of dues do not control special provisions of the contract for forfeiture of the certificate for nonpayment of dues.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff and against defendant for the sum of $1,247.20, being the amount of the principal and interest of a beneficiary certificate issued by defendant to Jacob Valentine in his lifetime, and payable on his death to plaintiff. The appeal comes to this court upon the judgment roll, and the appellant contends that on the facts found the judgment should have been for defendant.

From the facts found it appears, among other things, that defendant is, and for more than 30 years last past has been, a fraternal, charitable, beneficial, and benevolent society, having for its objects, among other things, to pledge the members to the payment of a stipulated sum to such beneficiary as a deceased member may have designated, while living, under such restrictions and upon such conditions as the laws of the order may prescribe. The defendant is a corporation organized as such under the laws of the state of California, and ever since the incorporation of defendant San Francisco Lodge No. 4 has been a subordinate lodge thereof under and within its jurisdiction. Jacob Valentine became a member of the said lodge and the order in 1876, and the usual beneficiary certificate was issued to him, in the sum of $2,000, payable to L. Meyerstein. In his application for membership in said lodge said Jacob Valentine agreed "that compliance on my part with all the laws, regulations and requirements which are or may be enacted by said order is the express condition upon which I am to be entitled to participate in the beneficiary fund, and to have and enjoy all the other rights, benefits and privileges of said order." Subsequently said Jacob Valentine surrendered this certificate and took out another, in which he designated the plaintiff, Mathilde Valentine, as the person to whom the $2,000 should be paid at his death. Subsequently, in 1903, defendant adopted certain amendments to its constitution, whereby the assessments to be paid to the beneficiary fund, by members holding beneficiary certificates, were increased, and in and by said amendments members 55 years of age and over were given the option or surrendering their certificates and taking out one of several different sorts of beneficiary certificates. Among these was one designated as option No. 2, under which such members had the right: "To surrender their certificate to be indorsed 'Paid up' for the amount of the reserve, if any (including the deficiency specified in these laws, if any), payable to the designated beneficiaries upon the death of the member, provided he remains in good standing to the time of his death, by the payment of such special assessments, lodge dues (monthly), per capita taxes and extension funds of the order as may be levied." Jacob Valentine, being about 73 years of age, on the 1st of January, 1904, made written application for the indorsement of his certificate in accordance with option No. 2.

This application contained the following provision: "And the failure by me to pay interest on any loans heretofore made, or any amounts required of me either by this option or by the laws of the order shall in such case forfeit all of my claims or those of my beneficiary on account of said certificate, the same as is provided by the laws of the said Grand Lodge for failure to pay any assessment for the beneficiary fund." His certificate was thereupon indorsed by the proper officers of defendant as follows: "The amount payable at death as stated in this certificate is hereby reduced to $1,044.00 and indorsed for such amount (to be paid from the guarantee fund) in accordance with the provisions of indorsed certificate option as defined in option No. 2, and the application therefor of the member herein dated January 1, 1904"—and duly returned to said Valentine.

The laws of the Grand Lodge (section 63) provided that: "The beneficiary certificate of each member who has not paid his assessment to the financier of his lodge, the only authorized officer to receive and receipt for all assessments and dues, on or before the 28th day of each month, shall by the fact of such nonpayment to said financier stand suspended, and no action upon the part of the lodge or any officer thereof shall be required as essential to such suspension." The said Jacob Valentine, under his reduced and indorsed certificate, was not required to pay any assessments until the 1st of October, 1906. In August, 1906, defendant, by certain amendments to its constitution, in terms provided that each holder of a certificate such as was then held by said Jacob Valentine should pay to the financier of the lodge, on or before the 28th day of each month, a special assessment at the rate fixed for the holders of the ordinary certificates, based upon his attained age January 1, 1906, for a $1,000 beneficiary certificate, increased or diminished in the ratio that the indorsed value of his beneficiary certificate shall bear to the sum of $1,000. The laws of the order and of the lodge to which said Jacob Valentine belonged required each member to pay into the funds of the lodge the sum of $1 per month. The constitution of the defendant in this connection provided that: "Any member who neglects or refuses to pay the dues as fixed by the by-laws of the lodge for the period of three months shall not be entitled to vote, nor to the S. A. Password, and shall be disqualified from holding office. Any member neglecting or refusing to pay for the period of six months shall be reported to the lodge by the financier, and the master workman shall, unless otherwise directed by the lodge, thereupon declare such member suspended from the order." The said Jacob Valentine paid none of the so-called special assessments required by the amendments to the constitution of defendant adopted August, 1906, and paid no lodge dues for any month subsequent to March, 1906. He died November 5, 1906.

The contention of appellant is that all rights under the beneficiary certificate held by Jacob Valentine were lost: (1) By his failure to pay the special assessment required by the amendments to the constitution of August, 1906, to be paid monthly by him; and (2) by his failure to pay the dues for each month subsequent to March, 1906, up to the time of his death.

In answer to the first contention respondent contends that the so-called special assessment was not in fact a special assessment; that, as it was required to be paid monthly, it was in fact and in law a regular assessment, and as such was not such an assessment as could be exacted of said Jacob Valentine under the terms of his contract with defendant, which it is claimed subjected him only to the payment of such "special assessments * * * as may be levied."

[1] We do not think it necessary to determine this point, for we are of the opinion that all rights under the certificate held by Jacob Valentine were forfeited by his failure to pay lodge dues. Section 63 of the constitution of defendant provided that: "The beneficiary certificate of each member who has not paid his assessment to the financier of his lodge, the only authorized officer to receive and receipt for all assessments and dues, on or before the 28th day of each month, shall by the fact of such nonpayment to said financier stand suspended, and no action upon the part of the lodge or any officer thereof shall be required as essential to such suspension." Under this law of the defendant the failure to pay assessments on or before the designated day ipso facto forfeited all rights under the beneficiary certificate. Butler v. Grand Lodge of Ancient Order of United Workmen of California, 146 Cal. 172, 79 Pac. 861; Marshall v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W., 133 Cal. 686, 66 Pac. 25; Carlson v. Supreme Council, etc., 115 Cal. 468, 47 Pac. 375, 35 L. R. A. 643. The written application for the reduced certificate made by said Jacob Valentine, and dated January 1, 1905, provided that "the failure by me to pay interest on any loans heretofore made, or any of the amounts required of me either by this option or by the laws of the order, shall in such case forfeit all of my claims or those of my beneficiary on account of said certificate the same as is provided by the laws of the said Grand Lodge for failure to pay any assessment for the beneficiary fund." The certificate was thereupon indorsed and the amount reduced to $1,044 "in accordance with the provisions of indorsed certificate option as defined in option No. 2, and the application therefor of the member herein named, dated January 1, 1904." The application for the indorsed certificate was a part of the contract. Both option No. 2 and the laws of the order required the member to pay monthly lodge dues. His contract with the defendant provided that his failure to pay any of the amounts required of him either by option No. 2, or by the laws of the order, should in such case forfeit all his claims or those of his beneficiary on account of his certificate, the same as is provided by the laws of the said Grand Lodge for failure to pay any assessment for the beneficiary fund. In other words, the forfeiture occurred upon the failure to make the payments when due, and no action upon the part of the lodge, or of any officer thereof, was required as essential to such suspension. In any aspect of this case the monthly dues for the months of April, May, June, July, August, September, and October had become due and payable before the death of the member, and he had failed and neglected to pay the same or any part thereof, though all were delinquent before he died.

[2] On October 3, 1906, the financier of the lodge reported to the lodge that said Jacob Valentine had neglected to pay dues for the period of six months, and the master workman thereupon declared said Jacob Valentine suspended from the order. The validity of this order of suspension from the order is attacked by respondent for various reasons which we do not deem necessary to discuss, for, as we view the contract involved in this case, the forfeiture of rights under the certificate is quite a different matter from suspension from the order. A member may forfeit his rights under his beneficiary certificate without being suspended from the order. The provisions for suspension from the order for nonpayment of dues do not control the special provisions of the contract hereinbefore adverted to relating to the forfeiture of rights under the beneficiary certificate involved in this case.

The facts of this case differ materially from the facts in the case of Scheufler v. Grand Lodge, etc., 45 Minn. 256, 47 N. W. 799, cited by respondent. In that case there was no provision of the contract making the provisions for forfeiture of rights under the beneficiary certificate applicable to the case of failure to pay dues. The case is not in point.

Under the contract invoked in this case the failure to pay lodge dues operated a forfeiture of rights under the certificate the same as would a failure to pay assessments without any action upon the part of the lodge or any officer thereof.

On the facts found the plaintiff was not entitled to recover.

The judgment is reversed, and the court directed to enter judgment on the findings for defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Alphonse Merle was convicted of murder in the second degree, and appeals. Affirmed.

Nathan C. Coghlan, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, for the People.

LENNON, P. J. The defendant was charged with the crime of murder, and found guilty of murder in the second degree. He was sentenced to serve 30 years in the state prison at San Quentin. An appeal was taken from the judgment and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

The appeal came on regularly to be heard by this court on the 22d day of August, 1911, whereupon counsel for defendant requested and was granted 15 days within which to prepare and present his points and authorities in support of the appeal. No further extension of time for this purpose has been granted or even requested, and the case now stands before us upon the bare record of the proceedings and testimony had in the trial court.

No oral argument having been made when the case was regularly called upon the calendar, and no briefs having been filed within the time allowed by the court, or at all, it is ordered that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

Incidentally we will state that, although not required to do so, we have made an examination of the record, and find that the defendant was fairly tried and properly convicted.

17 Cal. App. 309

In re BURT. (Civ. 1,071.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Oct. 25, 1911.)

1. PROHIBITION (§ 3*)—JURISDICTION—ORIGINAL JURISDICTION.

A District Court of Appeal, though having original as well as appellate jurisdiction in prohibition, will not exercise original jurisdiction where the petitioner has the right of appeal from a judgment in the court where the original proceeding was commenced.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. §§ 4–19; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

2. PROHIBITION (§ 3*)—ORIGINAL JURISDICTION.

Under Supreme Court rule 26 (78 Pac. xi), requiring an applicant for prohibition to show facts rendering it proper that the writ should issue originally from the court of appeal, where a party filed in the superior court a petition for prohibition, and the court after hearing denied the writ, and the judgment has not become final because the time for appeal has not elapsed, a District Court of Appeal will not, on the party's petition, exercise its original jurisdiction to issue the writ.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

Application of W. J. Burt for a writ of prohibition. Denied.

R. J. Adcock and Kendrick & Ardie, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. It affirmatively appears from the petition filed that a proceeding in prohibition involving the same matter was instituted in the superior court of Los Angeles county, a hearing had therein, and writ denied, which judgment has not yet become final; the time for appeal not having elapsed.

[1] Under the Constitution of this state, this court has appellate jurisdiction in prohibition, and, while it also has original jurisdiction in such proceedings, it will not exercise the same where the petitioner possesses the right of appeal from a judgment had in the court where the original proceeding was commenced.

[2] Under rule 26 of the Supreme Court (78 Pac. xi), this court will not issue writs of the character herein prayed for, in the absence of some showing rendering it proper that the writ should issue from this court. Here petitioner elected to proceed in the superior court, and the action of this court can only be had by a review on appeal from the judgment there rendered. It is apparent, therefore, considering the Constitution and the rule above referred to, that this court should, under the circumstances of this case, exercise its authority in refusing to issue the original writ.

Writ denied.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; John E. Richards, Judge.

Mandamus, on the relation of John N. Black, against the Board of Police and Fire Commissioners of the City of San Jose and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

H. L. Partridge, for appellants. J. C. Black, for respondent.

HALL, J. Plaintiff brought a proceeding against the board of police and fire commissioners of the city of San Jose for a writ of mandate to compel said board to audit and allow his claim, in the sum of $724.50, as captain of police of said city, from the 23d day of July, 1908, to the 1st of February, 1909. The trial court gave judgment for plaintiff against said board as prayed for, and denied the motion of said board for a new trial. The board in due time appealed both from the judgment and the order.

Plaintiff was appointed a member of the police force of said city in the year 1904, and in December, 1906, he was appointed a captain of police of said city. On July 22, 1908, certain charges of violating certain provisions of the charter of said city made by the chief of police of said city against plaintiff were filed with the said board (appellant). The board thereupon, on said day, made an order suspending plaintiff from his position, and appointed one Elton R. Bailey thereto, who at once entered into the occupation of the office, and has ever since occupied said office and discharged the duties thereof, and claimed and been paid by the city of San Jose the salary thereof, as successor of plaintiff, who at no time since said 22d day of July, 1908, has rendered any service to the city of San Jose, or discharged any duty of said office, though he has each month made a demand for the salary attached to said office. On the 26th day of August, 1908, the board made another order, reorganizing the police force of said city, and reducing the number thereof from 25 to 19. This order named and designated all the members of said police force, and did not contain the name of plaintiff, but did contain the name of Elton R. Bailey, as captain of police, in his place. Ever since said date, as well as since the 22d day of July, 1908, said Elton R. Bailey has occupied and discharged the duties of the office formerly held and still claimed by plaintiff, and has claimed and been paid the salary thereof, while plaintiff, as before stated, has discharged no duty thereof, but upon his suspension turned over to the proper authorities all property in his possession as said captain of police. Bailey is not a party to this proceeding. Appellant, as a defense to this proceeding in mandamus, pleaded the facts as to the occupancy by Bailey under claim of right of the office for which plaintiff seeks in this proceeding to compel payment to him of the salary attached thereto. Although the evidence clearly and without dispute proved the facts thus pleaded, the court made no finding thereon, and this was and is assigned as an error requiring a new trial.

[1] The contention of appellant in this regard is that mandamus will not lie to compel the payment to a plaintiff of the salary attached to an office in the actual occupation and possession of another person, under color of right, until by appropriate proceedings the title to the office has been first determined. And this we think to be the correct rule, amply supported in reason and by authority. The rule is thus stated in High's Extraordinary Legal Remedies (3d Ed.) § 103: "When there is an actual incumbent of an office, holding his position and exercising its functions under color of right, mandamus will not lie to a State Auditor to compel him to audit the claim of another person for the salary of the office. In such case it is sufficient objection to relief by mandamus that a conflict of title is presented, which can be determined only by proceedings in quo warranto, and the Auditor himself has no power to inquire into the regularity of the commission issued for the office, or to determine the disputed title. And the title to an office will not be determined in a proceeding by mandamus to compel payment of its salary to a claimant of the office."

The question was very carefully considered in Selby v. City of Portland, 14 Or. 243, 12 Pac. 377, 58 Am. Rep. 307, where, as the court indicated, certain police officers had probably been improperly removed, and successors appointed in their places. After reviewing many cases upon the subject the court said: "None of the cases referred to indicate that an action to recover the salary of an office could be maintained while occupied by a de facto officer, until the right to the office has been determined by proper adjudication. Such a determination could not properly be had in this case, as it would determine the rights of parties not before the court. It would be a determination that the incumbents who succeeded the appellant and his assignors were intruders and usurpers, when they were not before the court." The court directed the trial court to dismiss the proceeding.

The Court of Errors and Appeals of Delaware, in Lee v. Mayor, etc., 1 Marv. 65, 40 Atl. 663, lays down the same rule, and distinctly holds that a de jure officer out of possession cannot recover the salary of an office in the possession of a de facto officer until he has had his right to the office established in an appropriate action, in which the de facto officer is made a party. This case cites with approval the Oregon case above cited.

The case of Gorley v. City of Louisville, 104 Ky. 372, 47 S. W. 263, decided by the Court of Appeals of Kentucky, lays down the same rule, and quotes with approval from Selby v. City of Portland, supra. This was also the case of a removed police officer seeking to recover his salary.

Goodnow v. Police Commissioners, 80 Mo. App. 207, was, like the case at bar, a proceeding in mandamus by a discharged policeman to compel payment of his salary. The court said: "But if it should be granted that the discharge was not for the purpose of reducing the force, and that the place was filled by another appointee, there would still be a barrier to the relief claimed by the relator. He is asking for the payment of salary for a period when he was not in possession of the office occupied by another, before his right to the office has been adjudicated by a judgment of reinstatement. It has been and is an unsettled question whether an officer can recover unearned fees or salary. But it ought to be clear that an action for the salary cannot be maintained by the party out of possession of the office before his right to the office has been judicially ascertained, and that it cannot be ascertained by the mere action for the salary, where the occupant of the office cannot be a party. The question has recently undergone a thorough discussion in the Supreme Courts of Delaware, Kentucky, and Oregon, the two latter being cases of discharged policemen, and the first being the case of discharged register of births and secretary to the board of health. The cases are logically and ably reasoned and the conclusion reached that such action cannot be maintained."

[2] It was held in Meredith v. Board of Supervisors, 50 Cal. 433, that a writ of mandate does not lie to try the title to an office, and that in such an action the right to the fees cannot be determined until the title to the office, occupied by a de facto officer, has been determined.

None of the cases cited by respondent are in conflict with the rule as laid down in the cases above cited. In all of the cases cited by respondent, where a plaintiff was allowed to compel payment of salary in mandamus, he had either first established his title to the office in an appropriate proceeding, in which the occupant had been made a party, or was found to be both the de jure and de facto officer. In making this statement we have not overlooked McKannay v. Horton, 151 Cal. 711, 91 Pac. 598, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 661, 121 Am. St. Rep. 146. There two persons were claiming to be de jure and de facto secretaries of the mayor of San Francisco. McKannay claimed under an appointment from Dr. Taylor, who claimed to be both the de facto and de jure mayor; while the other, Boyle, claimed under appointment from Schmitz, who, though recently convicted of a felony, claimed to be both de facto and de jure mayor. The Supreme Court required the petition and the alternative writ to be served both upon Boyle and Schmitz. Both Schmitz and Dr. Taylor were exercising some of the functions of the office of mayor. Boyle was acting as secretary to Schmitz, and McKannay was acting as secretary to Dr. Taylor. The court said: "There cannot be two de facto incumbents of one office at the same time; and where two are acting simultaneously, each under claim of right, that one alone will be recognized who appears to have the better legal title." The court then proceeded to determine that Dr. Taylor was the de jure mayor, and therefore the de facto mayor. From this it necessarily followed that McKannay, his appointee, was both the de jure and de facto secretary. We cannot consider the McKannay Case as holding that one wholly out of possession of an office may compel payment of the salary without first establishing his title thereto by the usual and appropriate proceeding against the person in the actual and complete possession of the office under claim and color of office. This is what plaintiff in the case at bar has attempted to do, and which we are of the opinion may not be done.

[3] The court therefore erred in a most material matter in failing to find upon the issue presented as to the occupancy of the office.

Under the views we entertain upon the point discussed, it is not necessary to pass upon the other questions raised by counsel as to the legality of the action of the board in discharging plaintiff and appointing another to his position. Especially is this true in view of the fact that the actual occupant of the office, whose rights will be vitally affected by the determination of the other questions discussed, is not before the court.

The order denying the motion for a new trial is reversed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

On Rehearing.

HALL, J. This court on the 13th day of May last rendered a decision in this case, but afterwards granted a rehearing, principally that the court might give the matter further consideration in the light of what was said in the case of Bannerman v. Boyle, 116 Pac. 732, decided by the Supreme Court, June 8th last.

Upon further consideration we adhere to the views expressed in the opinion filed May 13th last, and readopt the same as the views of this court. Unlike the case at bar, in Bannerman v. Boyle, supra, the petitioner for the writ of mandate was in exclusive possession of the office as a de facto officer, and performed all the duties of the office during the time for which he claimed his salary. At the very outset of the opinion it is stated that this was conceded. The Supreme Court also determined that he was the de jure officer as well. Being both the de facto and the de jure officer, there is no doubt but that he could compel, by writ of mandate, the fiscal officer of the city to audit his salary demand. But in the case at bar petitioner was not in possession of the office, and performed no duties thereof during the time for which he claimed his salary, but another person was in possession of the office, under claim and color of right, and had performed and was still performing all the duties thereof under such claim and color of right, and had claimed and been paid the salary therefor. Under such circumstances the authorities cited in our former opinion expressly and pointedly hold that one out of possession of the office and performing no duties thereof cannot enforce the payment of his salary until he has had his right to the office adjudicated in an appropriate action to which the person in possession must be a party. See to the same effect Dillon on Municipal Corp. § 831.

The judgment and order are therefore reversed.

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 918*) — BONDS—AUTHORITY TO ISSUE.

Long Beach City Charter, § 3, subd. 8, authorizes the issue of bonds to acquire waterworks, etc., on a two-thirds vote of the electors voting on such question. Subdivision 11 authorizes the construction and repair of wharves and piers, but does not authorize bonds therefor. Section 21 of article 11 authorizes incurring debt for public improvements on proceedings conforming to the general laws of the state. St. 1901, p. 28, § 3, requires two-thirds of all the votes cast at the election to issue bonds. Held, that subdivision 8 is limited to the improvements authorized by it, and does not authorize bonds for a pier improvement under subdivision 11; such improvements being governed by section 21.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 935*) — BONDS—CURATIVE STATUTES—APPLICATION.

St. 1911, p. 421, legalizing municipal bonds authorized by a vote of not less than two-thirds of the qualified electors voting at an election, does not legalize bonds on an affirmative vote of two-thirds of the electors voting on the proposition, but less than two-thirds of those voting at the election.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 935.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 935*)—CURATIVE ACTS—VALIDITY — MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

A curative act, to be effective, must refer to proceedings which the Legislature might in the first instance regulate and control; and hence St. 1911, p. 421, legalizing municipal bonds, does not validate bonds insufficiently voted under a municipal charter, the issue of such bonds being a municipal affair over which the Legislature has no control.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 935.*]

4. WORDS AND PHRASES—"ORDINARY."

"Ordinary" means methodical, regular, according to established order, common, usual, often recurring.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, p. 5027.]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 911*) — BONDS—AUTHORITY TO ISSUE.

Long Beach City Charter, § 3, subd. 11, authorizes construction and repair of wharves and piers, but does not authorize bonds therefor. Section 21 of article 11 authorizes incurrence of debt for public improvements on proceedings conforming to general laws. Held, that there is authority to issue bonds to construct a pier, but not to repair one.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 911.*]

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 910*) — BONDS—AUTHORITY TO ISSUE.

Specific charter authority to issue municipal bonds excludes the right to issue for purposes not specified.

Application by the City of Long Beach for writ of mandate against C. O. Boynton, city clerk of the city of Long Beach. Writ denied.

Stephen G. Long and Percy Hight, for petitioner. H. J. Stevens and O'Melveney, Stevens & Millikin, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. It appears from the petition: That Long Beach is, and was at all times mentioned in the petition, a charter city. That in February of 1910 the council of such city duly adopted resolutions determining that the public interest and necessity demanded the acquisition, construction, and completion by the city of the following named public improvements: (1) The acquisition, construction, and completion of certain repairs upon a double-deck, cylinder pier belonging to the city; and (2) the acquisition, construction, and completion of a new pier one thousand feet in length at a point designated in said city. That at a subsequent meeting of the council an ordinance was duly adopted giving notice of a special election to be held in said city, submitting to the qualified voters the proposition of incurring an indebtedness in the amount of $75,000 for the first and $50,000 for the second improvement named, and further, that both of the issues did not exceed 15 per cent. of the assessed value of the real and personal property in said city, and that the cost of the acquisition, construction, and completion of said public improvements is and will be too great to be paid out of the ordinary annual income and revenue of said municipality. That by said ordinance it was further provided that bonds be issued for each of the said improvements, one-fortieth of the principal and the interest at the specified rate to be paid annually, and providing further for a tax levy to meet such payments, and further providing for all of the matters provided by the charter or by the general law for the holding of an election pursuant to such ordinance. It is further made to appear that, with reference to the first-mentioned improvement, more than two-thirds of the electors voting at said election voted "Yes"; that, as to the second proposition, less than two-thirds of those voting at such election, but more than two-thirds of those voting upon the proposition, voted, "Yes"; that the first levy necessary for the annual payment of the principal and interest upon the bonds has been made and collected without protest by the taxpayers; that, subsequent to the passage of the ordinance, another ordinance was passed providing for the issuance of city bonds to cover the amount so voted at such election: that the city clerk refuses to attest said bonds and declines so to do, and this writ is sought to compel the attestation thereof.

[1] Section 3 of the charter of the city of Long Beach, defining the general powers of the city, contains 28 subdivisions. In the eighth subdivision thereof, with reference to supplying the city and its inhabitants with water and gas, electricity, conduits, or railroads, or with either, it is provided that bonds may be issued for the acquisition of such public improvements, and that two-thirds of the votes cast on the question of such issue of bonds, if in the affirmative, shall be sufficient. Subsequently, in the eleventh subdivision, the power to construct and keep in repair wharves and piers is provided for, no reference being there made as to issue of bonds, or the number of votes requisite in the event of the issuance of bonds therefor. In section 21, art. 11, of the charter it is provided: "Whenever the council shall determine that the public necessity requires the construction, or acquisition, or completion of any permanent municipal building, * * * or other public improvement or utility, the cost of which, in addition to the other expenditures of the city, will exceed the income and revenue provided for in any one year, they may, by ordinance, submit a proposition to incur a debt for that purpose, and proceed therein as provided in section 18, article xi, of the Constitution of this state, and general law or laws thereof." The general law of the state (St. 1901, p. 27) in section 3 provides: "* * * It shall require the votes of two-thirds of all the voters voting at such special election to authorize the issuance of the bonds herein provided." This section has received a construction by the Supreme Court of this state in the case of Law v. San Francisco, 144 Cal. 384, 77 Pac. 1014, wherein it is determined that where two propositions were submitted that each, in order to carry, must receive two-thirds of all the votes cast at the election, and that the failure of one to carry does not affect the validity of the other which has received the requisite number of votes. We are of opinion that a fair construction of the charter of the city of Long Beach requires us to say that subdivision 8 of section 3 of the charter, wherein it specifies the number of affirmative votes requisite to carry an election, applies only to the matters referred to in said subdivision 8. To say that subdivision 8, with reference to the requisite number of votes, applies to the improvements specified in subdivision 11 and section 21, art. 11, would be to establish a conflict between sections 3 and 21 of the charter. This should not be done, if both sections can be given operative effect through a different construction. We hold, therefore, that as to the power to incur indebtedness and to issue bonds for the character of improvements under consideration, section 21 of the charter applies, and the proceedings in connection with such bond issue must be in pursuance to the general law.

[2] Nor do we regard the curative act of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 421) as applicable to the matter under consideration. That act provides that it shall not operate to legalize any bonds of any municipality that have not been at the time of the passage of that act authorized by a vote of not less than two-thirds of the qualified electors of such municipality voting at any such election. It being conceded that less than two-thirds of the voters voting at such special election voted in favor of the $50,000 bond issue, such defect was not cured by the legalizing act last above referred to. We are of opinion, therefore, that the clerk properly refused to attest the issue of bonds for the $50,000 so attempted to be authorized for the construction of the new pier.

[3] As to the first proposition involving the issuance of bonds in the amount of $75,000 for the completion and repairs of an existing wharf, it is urged by respondent that, such improvement being a municipal affair, the provisions of the charter with reference thereto are controlling, and that it is not within the province of the Legislature to legalize, through the curative act before mentioned, a bond issue not authorized by the charter. With this we agree. It is well-settled law that a curative act to be effective must be with reference to proceedings which the Legislature might in the first instance regulate and control. The charter in this instance has treated fully of the power of the corporation to issue bonds in connection with the wharves of the city, and of the conditions and emergencies controlling the issuance thereof. This being a municipal affair, the provisions of the charter must control, and, unless such charter provisions authorize the issuance of bonds for such purposes, the Legislature may not legalize bonds which are violative of the provisions of the charter. This leads us, then, to determine whether or not, under the charter, authority is given for the issuance of bonds to complete repairs upon wharves of the city. It is insisted by respondent that section 21 of the charter, authorizing the acquisition, construction, or completion of any permanent public building, or other public improvement, and the issuance of bonds therefor, does not comprehend repairs incident to such improvements, and, it affirmatively appearing that this bond issue of $75,000 was sought for the purpose of completing repairs only, no authority is conferred by section 21 to issue bonds therefor, but that the funds requisite for such repairs must be realized from a general tax levy. While the general power to repair muncipal public property is conferred by the charter, the power to issue bonds for the cost thereof is not so expressly conferred. "It is a general and undisputed proposition of law that a municipal corporation possesses and can exercise the following powers and no others: (1) Those granted in express words; (2) those necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the powers expressly granted; (3) those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation—not simply convenient, but indispensable. Any fair, reasonable doubt concerning the existence of the power is resolved by the courts against the corporation, and the power is denied." Hyatt v. Williams, 148 Cal. 587, 84 Pac. 42, and authorities cited. We are of opinion that it cannot be said from the language of the ordinances adopted relative to these bond issues that the issue of bonds for such repairs is indispensable; the language of the ordinance being, "the cost of the improvements will be too great to be paid out of the ordinary annual income and revenue of the city." This is far from a declaration of matters required in section 21 of the charter, which provides that bonds may be issued only in the event that the cost of the improvement contemplated, in addition to the other expenditures of the city will exceed the income and revenue provided for in any one year. The charter fixes the limit and extent of the income provided in any one year as being $1 upon each hundred of the valuation of assessed property. The language of the ordinances is open to the construction that the city council have declared that, in their opinion, the cost is too heavy to be borne out of the ordinary revenue; in other words, that it is inexpedient or inconvenient to so increase the tax levy as to cover the cost of these repairs.

[4] The word "ordinary" is defined by Webster as "methodical, regular, according to established order." "Ordinary" is defined as "common, usual, often recurring." Chicago & A. R. Co. v. House, 172 Ill. 601, 50 N. E. 151. For aught that appears, the ordinary, or, in other words, the usual, income of Long Beach may be far below the amount which could be realized under a general tax levy. We cannot, therefore, say that from the whole record it appears that a necessity did exist for the issuance of bonds to pay for such repairs. Assuming, without deciding, that the repairs necessarily entailed in caring for a public improvement may be said to be essential and incidental to the power of construction, acquisition, and completion, and that to deny the right to issue bonds for repairs in all instances might render nugatory the general power to keep such property in repair, nevertheless, we are satisfied that no power is vested by the charter in the city of Long Beach to issue bonds for repairs to public property, unless it is made to appear that the same is absolutely necessary for the preservation of such public property. Under this view, we are compelled to hold that the $75,000 bond issue here involved for repairs was not authorized by the charter, and that no duty devolved upon respondent to attest either series of bonds so presented and sought to be issued by petitioner.

Peremptory writ denied.

JAMES and SHAW, JJ. [5] We concur in the judgment and in all that is said by the presiding justice referring to the bonds proposed to be issued to secure money with which to build a new pier; i. e., the $50,000 issue. As to the bond issue proposed to be made for the purpose of securing $75,000 to cover cost of repairs on the pier already constructed by the city of Long Beach, we are of the opinion that the provisions of the charter do not expressly, or by any reasonable implication, authorize the municipality to issue bonds for such a purpose, and that any necessity which may render the making of such repairs imperative is immaterial, and cannot be considered.

[6] Where it is provided that a bonded indebtedness may be created for specified purposes, the permission and authority so given is exclusive of every purpose not expressly so named. The municipality of Long Beach may lawfully issue bonds to obtain funds with which to construct a wharf or pier, but, when such wharf or pier is once constructed, the cost of maintenance thereof and repairs thereon must be paid from the ordinary revenue of the city, which is the revenue obtained by the exercise of the power to raise funds for general municipal purposes by annual tax levy within the maximum rate fixed by law as the limit of such levy.

CALKINS et al. v. MONROE, Superior Judge. (Civ. 1,025.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Oct. 27, 1911.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 303*)—AMENDMENT AND CORRECTION — MATTERS AMENDABLE — "MATERIALLY."

A court may at any time correct a judgment as to immaterial matters occasioned by inadvertence; but this right does not exist where such amendment materially affects the rights of litigants objecting thereto, using the word "materially" to mean affecting the rights of objecting litigants.

2. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF (§ 53*) — PROCEEDINGS TO COMPEL SIGNATURE.

Applicants for mandamus to compel the judge of a trial court to sign a bill of exceptions averred that after judgment the court amended the judgment, and decreed certain rights to a party substituted at trial in lieu of one of the litigants; that the applicants applied in due time for settlement of a bill of exceptions involving the right to amend the judgment, and the return of the trial judge showed that he had refused to sign it; but neither the application nor return showed whether the amendment was material to the applicants' rights. Held, that the rights of all parties would be best subserved by a signature to the bill of exceptions, so that the whole matter might be submitted on appeal, and that a peremptory writ issue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Cent. Dig. §§ 80–88; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

Mandamus by C. C. Calkins and another against Charles Monroe, Judge of the Superior Court in and for the County of Los Angeles. Peremptory writ to issue.

Willis & Robinson and W. W. Kaye, for petitioners. Wm. Chambers, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. It is averred by petitioners that a certain judgment was rendered by the superior court, in an action and proceeding to which petitioners were parties, in August, 1910; that thereafter, in February, 1911, the court amended the judgment in certain respects, notably in that it decreed and adjudged certain rights to a party substituted in lieu of one of the litigants at the time of the trial, and within due time after the amendment petitioners, after notice of appeal, applied to the court to settle a bill of exceptions involving the right of the court, under the circumstances of the case, to amend the judgment. This bill of exceptions the court refused to sign, upon the theory, as appears from the return of the judge, that the amendment to the judgment was not such as in any wise affected the rights of petitioners, and that the effect of the decree was to cast upon petitioners, or their property, no burden, other than that imposed by the original decree, which, it is claimed, settled and determined petitioners' rights to the property.

[1] It may be assumed that the court may at any time correct a judgment as to immaterial matters occasioned by inadvertence, but that this right does not exist, should such amendment materially affect the rights of litigants objecting to such amendment. The question, therefore, for determination upon this application is as to the materiality of the matters involved in the amendment to the judgment; and when we say "materiality" we mean to say, as affecting the rights of objecting litgants. It is not made clear, either by the petition or by the return, whether or not this amendment was made on account of any inadvertence, and was immaterial, in so far as petitioners' rights were concerned. Nor can the same be determined without a careful examination of the pleadings, report of the referee, and the original judgment, in connection with the amendment. These matters are not presented to the court upon this application; nor has the respondent made it clear to us that in the ordering of the amendment he was within the rule permitting such an amendment as to immaterial matters.

[2] Our Supreme Court has said that when a trial court is in doubt as to the right of a party to have a bill of exceptions or statement of the case settled, because the same has not been presented within time, the better practice is for the trial court to sign the bill of exceptions or statement, subject to objections thereto, the evidence in support of which should be incorporated in a bill of exceptions, so that the appellate court upon appeal will be in a position to determine whether or not such statement or bill was presented for signature within time. Gay v. Torrance, 143 Cal. 17, 18, 76 Pac. 717. This rule is no doubt based upon the theory that it is the policy of the law to protect the right of appeal, which might in certain cases be materially affected or destroyed by a refusal of the court to sign bills or statements, and that if, upon the appeal, it is made to appear that the bill or statement was not within the time required it is within the province of the appellate court to dismiss the appeal, or to refuse to entertain questions involved in such bill or statement. For this reason, it appears to us that the rights of all parties are best subserved by the trial court signing the bill of exceptions presented, under the rule above stated, to the end that the whole matter may be submitted to this court upon the appeal, in which will be presented and before us all of the pleadings, reports, and judgment, an inspection of which will enable us the better to understand and determine correctly the questions involved.

It is therefore ordered that the peremptory writ issue as prayed for.

PRICE et al. v. DE REYES et al.

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 5, 1911.)

1. Boundaries (§ 48*)—Location by Parties—Effect.

Where adjoining owners, being uncertain as to the true line, agree by parol upon its true location, and fence along the line agreed, and build up to and occupy to the line as thus fixed, and acquiesce in such location for a period equal to the statute of limitations or under such circumstances that substantial loss would be caused by a change in its position, such line becomes the true line, regardless of the accuracy of the agreed location.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 232–242; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

2. Frauds, Statute of (§ 70*)—Conveyance of Land—Establishment of Boundary.

A parol agreement by the owners of adjoining lands, effective to establish the true boundary line between the lands, whether coinciding with the description of the parties' deeds or not, does not operate to convey title to the land which may lie between the agreed line and the true line, but fixes the line itself, and the description carries title up to the agreed line; and hence such agreement is not in violation of the statute of frauds as a parol conveyance of lands.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. § 112; Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

3. Boundaries (§ 48*)—Location by Parties—Building and Acquiescence.

Defendant in 1899 took land by deed describing it by metes and bounds and referring to a map, his grantor pointed out to him the four corners of the land so conveyed, and defendant thereupon placed an iron pipe to mark each of the corners, built a fence along the lines of the land as pointed out by the grantor, occupied and possessed the entire area inclosed, and erected a building along the line of the fence with the knowledge of and without objection by the grantor, and his grantees of the contiguous lot took with knowledge of the defendants' possession and acquiesced therein for more than five years. Held, in an action to establish the boundary line, that the line had been fixed by the agreement and acquiescence of parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 232–242; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

4. Boundaries (§ 48*)—Location by Parties—When Effective—Dispute.

The rule that a boundary line between adjoining lands may be fixed by agreement and acquiescence of the parties applies where the location of the line is merely uncertain, and it is not necessary that it be unascertainable, nor is it necessary that there should have been a dispute as to the boundary prior to the agreement as to its location.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 232–242; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

5. Adverse Possession (§ 90*)—Payment of Taxes—Property Assessed.

Where parties by agreement establish a boundary line between adjoining lands differing from the description found in their deeds, and thereafter pay taxes thereon according to the descriptions in their deeds, such payment is a payment on land in possession of parties, and, if continued for a sufficient time, establishes title by adverse possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 517–519; Dec. Dig. § 90.*]

6. Boundaries (§ 36*)—Admissibility of Evidence—Surveyor's Map.

In an action to quiet title to lands fronting upon certain streets, the county surveyor's map was admissible for the purpose of showing the difference, if any, between the location of one of the streets at the time of the trial and the location of the south line of one of the blocks as established by a previously recorded map.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 166, 167; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

7. Boundaries (§ 35*)—Admissibility of Evidence—Acquiescence and Knowledge.

In an action to quiet title, evidence on the part of the defendants to prove the acquiescence of the respective owners of the property adjoining in the location of the boundary line, and that, at the time plaintiff purchased the adjoining lot, it was pointed out as the lot lying north of defendants' property, was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 163–165; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon F. Moss, Judge.

Action to quiet title by T. W. Price and another against A. C. L. De Reyes and husband. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Geo. L. McKeeby, for appellants. M. W. Conkling and Cyril H. Bretherton, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an action to quiet title to a strip of land 18 inches in width lying within the inclosure of the defendants, extending along the north line thereof. The real object of the action is to ascertain and adjudge the location of the boundary line between the land of plaintiffs and that of the defendants. The judgment went for the plaintiffs, the defendants' motion for a new trial was denied, and from this ruling the defendants appeal.

The decision of the court below, upon the facts appearing in evidence, was contrary to a long line of decisions of the Supreme Court of this state establishing the rule applying to the location of boundary lines between coterminus landowners, beginning with Sneed v. Osborn, 25 Cal. 619, and ending with Dundas v. Lankershim S. Dist., 155 Cal. 692, 102 Pac. 925. The other cases are the following: Columbet v. Pacheco, 48 Cal. 397; Cooper v. Vierra, 59 Cal. 282; Biggins v. Champlin, 59 Cal. 116; Johnson v. Brown, 63 Cal. 393; Truett v. Adams, 66 Cal. 223, 5 Pac. 96; White v. Spreckels, 75 Cal. 616, 17 Pac. 715; Burris v. Fitch, 76 Cal. 398, 18 Pac. 864; Helm v. Wilson, 76 Cal. 485, 18 Pac. 604; Cavanaugh v. Jackson, 91 Cal. 583, 27 Pac. 931; Dierssen v. Nelson, 138 Cal.

398, 71 Pac. 456; Lewis v. Ogram, 149 Cal. 508, 87 Pac. 60, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 610, 117 Am. St. Rep. 151; Young v. Blakeman, 153 Cal. 481, 95 Pac. 888.

[1] The rule is thus stated in Young v. Blakeman, supra: "When such owners, being uncertain of the true position of the boundary so described, agree upon its true location, mark it upon the ground, or build up to it, occupy on each side up to the place thus fixed and acquiesce in such location for a period equal to the statute of limitations, or under such circumstances that substantial loss would be caused by a change of its position, such line becomes, in law, the true line called for by the respective descriptions, regardless of the accuracy of the agreed location, as it may appear by subsequent measurements."

[2] And, again, to this effect: "The line so agreed on becomes in legal effect the true line, the agreement as to the line may be in parol, and it does not operate to convey title to the land which may lie between the agreed line and the true line, but it fixes the line itself and the description carries title up to the agreed line regardless of its accuracy; the agreement as to the line is not in violation of the statute of frauds, because it does not transfer title; the parties hold up to the agreed line by virtue of their original deeds and not by virtue of the parol agreement; 'the division line when thus established attaches itself to the deeds of the respective parties and simply defines, not adds to, the lands described in the deeds,' and, if more is thus given to one than the calls of his deed actually require, he 'holds the excess by the same tenure that he holds the main body of his land.'"

[3] The facts, which appear from the evidence without substantial contradiction, may be briefly stated. In 1888 a map was filed in the office of the recorder of the county showing a subdivision of land into lots and blocks, known as the map of Hollywood. Upon this map was delineated a block numbered 4 consisting of several acres of land. On the westerly side of this block Cahuenga avenue was located, and upon its southerly side a street now known as Sunset boulevard, the intersection of the two streets forming the southwest corner of the block. In 1896 the street known as Sunset boulevard was widened and straightened so that the lines, as then established, included some of the property situated northerly thereof. The owners of the property, among them the owner of said block 4, executed a deed granting to the county the portions of their property lying within the lines of the street as thus widened. In the year 1899 Joseph R. Bennett had become the owner in fee of a portion of block 4 fronting upon Cahuenga avenue, including the lot of the plaintiffs and that of the defendants. On December 2, 1899, he conveyed to the defendant A. C. L. De Reyes, who is the wife of her codefendant, a part of this block fronting 103 feet on the easterly line of Cahuenga avenue. The description in the deed declared that the southwest corner of this lot was a point situated 207.5 feet north of the southwest corner of block 4, according to the map of Hollywood recorded in 1888 as aforesaid. The lot conveyed had a depth of 393 feet. Immediately after the deed was executed, Bennett pointed out to defendants the four corners of the lot so conveyed, and thereupon defendants placed on each corner an iron pipe to mark the corners. Immediately afterward the defendants built a fence along the lines of the lot as thus pointed out by Bennett, and they have ever since maintained the same, occupying and possessing the entire area inclosed therein. Shortly after the fence was built, they erected a building at the northwest corner, the north side of which was placed on the line previously occupied by the north fence. It extended some distance to the rear from Cahuenga avenue. This building has ever since been occupied by M. L. Reyes as an office. Bennett at that time, and for three years afterwards, lived on the opposite side of Cahuenga avenue and was fully aware of these improvements and of the possession and claim of the defendants. He made no objection whatever to the claim or possession of Reyes up to the line of the fence so established. On March 25, 1901, Bennett conveyed to Daniel F. Bacon a lot fronting 51.5 feet on the easterly line of Cahuenga avenue lying directly north of the premises of the defendants. This deed declared that the southwesterly corner of the tract conveyed was situated 310.5 feet north of the intersection of Cahuenga avenue and Sunset boulevard, and that the line ran thence north along Cahuenga avenue 51.5 feet. Thus, according to the respective descriptions, and assuming that the corner of block 4 by the map, recorded in 1888, was the same as the intersection of the avenue and the boulevard, as changed in 1896, this lot would be contiguous to and north of the defendants' lot. Bacon afterwards conveyed this tract to Johnson, Johnson conveyed it to Fry, and on October 15, 1902, Fry conveyed to the plaintiffs, each deed having the same description as that given in the conveyance by Bennett to Bacon. Plaintiffs had their lines surveyed, and in 1903 they put up a building the north line of which was 51.5 feet north of the Reyes fence leaving space for a driveway between the building and said fence. None of the parties ever disputed the right, title, or possession of the defendants to the property within their fences and occupied by the building thereon until more than five years after the defendants' fences and buildings were erected. The exact time of the beginning of this action does not appear. The amended complaint was filed in September, 1907. It is conceded, however, that it was begun shortly before that date. The dispute concerning the location of the boundary line arose a short time before the action was begun. Thereupon a new survey was made, and it appears to have been discovered, at least it was proven to the satisfaction of the lower court upon the trial, that the fence was situated 18 inches north of the true location of the boundary as fixed by the distances stated in the deed executed by Bennett to Reyes in 1899, and that the inclosure of the defendants included a strip of land 18 inches wide lying immediately north of the lot described in defendants' deed, said strip being also included in the conveyance by Bennett to Bacon aforesaid and to which by the succession of deeds above mentioned, the defendants had apparently acquired title. These facts bring the case directly within the rule above stated and the findings and judgment should have been in favor of the defendants.

[4] The plaintiffs claim that this rule does not apply where the location of the boundary is merely uncertain, but that it must have been absolutely unascertainable. We find no such qualification of the rule stated in any of the authorities. Obviously it could not be thus qualified. It is only where the true location is subsequently ascertained that actions of this kind arise. Consequently the rule could not apply if the location was unascertainable. But, according to all the authorities, it is sufficient if the true location is uncertain and the parties fix the boundary because of its uncertainty and afterwards occupy up to it and make improvements thereon. At the time this boundary was fixed Bennett and Reyes were the owners of the respective adjoining lots. The position of the division line had not been marked and was uncertain. Bennett, as the original owner of both tracts, would presumably have knowledge of the location of the lines superior to that of defendants. He pointed them out to Reyes, who desired at that time to know their position. Reyes accepted the location thus fixed. This constituted an agreement as to the location. Reyes acted upon it by building the fence and buildings with the full knowledge and under the observation of Bennett. The succeeding owners took with knowledge of the possession of Reyes up to the fence. Their acquiescence has the same effect as that of Bennett would have had if he had continued to own the lot. It is not necessary for the application of this rule that there should have been a dispute as to the boundary prior to the agreement as to the location. This was expressly decided in Helm v. Wilson, supra.

[5] Title was also established in the defendants by adverse possession. Plaintiffs claim that defendants paid no taxes on the strip in dispute. It is conceded that both parties paid taxes each year assessed according to the descriptions in the respective deeds. As we have seen, a division line thus established "attaches itself to the deeds of the respective parties," and defines the lands described in each deed, so that the one in the possession of the overlap holds the title thereto by the same tenure as he holds the lands technically embraced in the description. Sneed v. Osborn, supra; Young v. Blakeman, supra; White v. Spreckels, supra. The consequence is that under such circumstances the payment of taxes assessed in this manner is a payment on the land in the possession of the parties. Furthermore, the natural inference would be that the assessor put the value on the land and improvements of each party as disclosed by the visible possession, rather than that he ascertained the true line by a careful survey and assessed to one a part of the possessions of the other. We see no ground upon which the decision of the court below can be sustained.

In view of this conclusion as to the merits of the case, we do not find it necessary to discuss the various rulings of the court below upon the introduction of the evidence.

[6] We think it proper to state, however, that the county surveyor's map was properly admissible for the purpose of showing the difference, if any, between the location of the line of Sunset boulevard at the time of the trial and the location of the south line of block 4 as established by the recorded map of Hollywood.

[7] The defendants were entitled to introduce evidence to prove the acquiescence of the respective owners of the property adjoining in the location of the line to their fences. They were also entitled to prove that at the time the plaintiffs and each of their predecessors in interest purchased, the lot to be sold to them was pointed out to them as the lot lying to the north of defendants' property. The rulings of the court upon questions directed to this point seem to have been based chiefly upon the form of the question, which apparently called for the conclusion of the witnesses, and not for facts.

The order is reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

WILSON et al. v. WHITE. (L. A. 2,771.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 2, 1911. Rehearing Denied Dec. 30, 1911.)

1. BROKERS (§ 94*)—REAL ESTATE BROKERS —AUTHORITY.

Plaintiffs' rights under a contract to purchase land from defendant are unaffected by defendant's brokers' act in agreeing to sell to a third person, where they were not authorized to sell, defendant did not ratify their agreement, and was not estopped to deny their authority before plaintiffs communicated their acceptance of defendant's offer.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 194*)—GROWING CROPS—RIGHT TO.

As between vendor and purchaser, the growing crop constitutes a part of the realty, unless there has been a constructive severance, and passes under a voluntary conveyance unless specially reserved by the grantor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 403; Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 441*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—DEEDS—RESERVATIONS.

Where a writing is essential to the transfer of land, a reservation of crops cannot be established by parol to impair the effect of a deed conveying the land without reservation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2032; Dec. Dig. § 441.*]

4. BROKERS (§ 91*)—RECEIPT OF PROPOSALS—EFFECT.

Where real estate brokers conducted negotiations between plaintiffs and defendant for the sale of land, receipt by them of a proposal from defendant was in legal effect a receipt thereof by plaintiffs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 134; Dec. Dig. § 91.*]

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 17*)—CONTRACT TO CONVEY—EXISTENCE.

Real estate brokers sent defendant an offer of $14,000 cash for land. Defendant wired acceptance for conveyance "without crops." Next day plaintiffs tendered to brokers the $14,000 and demanded a conveyance, but the tender was rejected. Held, that there was a completed contract between the parties for the sale of the land without crops.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 21; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

6. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 49*)—RIGHT TO RELIEF—INADEQUATE CONSIDERATION.

Under the provision of Civ. Code, § 3391, that a contract cannot be specifically performed if the obligor has not received an adequate consideration or if the contract is not as to him just and reasonable, specific performance of a contract to convey land for $14,000 was properly denied, where the land was found to be worth $15,000 and where the vendor, who resided at a great distance from the property, had no personal knowledge as to the condition and value of the property, while the purchasers were well informed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 140–151; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

7. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 49*)—ADEQUACY OF CONSIDERATION—DETERMINATION.

In determining the adequacy of consideration under a contract sought to be specifically performed as affecting plaintiffs' right to such relief, the question is, not whether the price was the highest obtainable, but whether it was fair and adequate under the circumstances.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 140–151; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1009*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS.

In a suit to specifically perform a contract to convey, the trial court's finding that relief should be denied for inadequacy of the consideration should not be disturbed on appeal unless clearly unsupported by the evidence.

9. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 351*)—CONTRACT TO CONVEY—DAMAGES.

Under Civ. Code, § 3306, fixing the measure of damage for breach of a contract to convey, where no bad faith of the vendor is shown, at the price paid and expenses properly incurred in examining the title and preparing the necessary papers, with interest thereon, plaintiffs were not entitled to damages for defendant's breach of an agreement to convey, where there was no evidence to show any expenditure by them.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Benjamin F. Bledsoe, Judge.

Action by A. J. Wilson and another against J. L. Owell White. From a judgment for defendant and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Eugene C. Campbell, for appellants. Halsey W. Allen, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by plaintiffs from a judgment in favor of defendant and from an order denying their motion for a new trial in an action brought by them for the specific performance of an alleged contract for the sale to them by defendant, for $14,000 cash, of certain real property in San Bernardino county, Cal., described in the complaint as being subdivision lot 1 in block 35, East Redlands, according to the plat thereof on record in the office of the county recorder of said county, together with 10 shares of the capital stock of the East Redlands Water Company, a corporation; said property containing 10 acres more or less and being planted to orange trees.

Defendant, the owner of the property, was a resident of the state of Texas, and during the whole period of the negotiations for a sale of the property was in that state. The plaintiffs during all of said period, were in the city of Redlands, Cal., as were also John W. Gill and W. E. Rabbeth, the real estate brokers through whom the negotiations were had. Said Gill and Rabbeth had received a letter written by defendant to them on April 6, 1909, in reply to an inquiry on their part asking for a selling price on the property, in which he said he would sell this property for $15,000 without the crop. Plaintiffs' negotiations with defendant for the purchase were entirely by means of letters and telegrams which will hereinafter be set forth. To these letters and telegrams we are confined in determining whether there was any contract between plaintiffs and defendant for the sale and purchase of the property.

During the whole period of the negotiations there was on the orange trees on said property about one-third of the annual crop of oranges; the remainder having been harvested. This third of the crop was of the value, according to a finding of the trial court which is sufficiently sustained by the evidence of $1,200, and the same was not harvested until some time in May, 1909. The evidence was also sufficient to sustain the conclusion of the trial court that these oranges so remaining on the trees had not been theretofore sold by defendant, and that he was then the owner thereof.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

On April 13, 1909, at the request of plaintiffs, who within a day or two thereof had been shown the property by Gill and Rabbeth and solicited to make an offer for the same, the following telegram was sent to defendant: "4-13-09, Redlands, Cal. To J. Lowell White, Kingsville, Texas. Have offer 14,000 net to you half cash lower ten advise sale. Much scale in grove. Gill & Rabbeth."

On April 15, 1909, defendant answered this telegram by both telegram and letter. The telegram was as follows: "Kingsville, Tex. Apr. 15-09. Gill & Rabbeth, Redlands, Cal. On terms named will not sell for less than fifteen thousand. J. Lowell White."

The letter was simply a confirmation of the telegram. This telegram was shown to plaintiffs, and on the same day, at their request, another telegram was sent to defendant. It was as follows: "Redlands, Cal. Apr. 15 '09. J. Lowell White, Kingsville, Texas. Cannot get fifteen. Client offers fourteen cash. Gill & Rabbeth."

On April 16th defendant replied by telegram as follows: "Kingsville, Texas, Apr. 16. Gill & Rabbeth, I accept fourteen thousand net cash to me for lower ten without crop. J. Lowell White."

On the same day defendant mailed a letter to Gill & Rabbeth confirming the telegram, and saying he would be glad to hear further in regard to details of the sale, asking that they have their client deposit the money in First National Bank at Redlands for delivery on presentation of a satisfactory deed, and suggesting that the transfer be made on May 1st.

Before the receipt of the last-named telegram, and on April 16th, one W. D. Bethell offered Gill & Rabbeth for the defendant $15,000 net cash for the property, without the crop, he (Bethell) to pay Gill & Rabbeth the commission on the sale, and Gill & Rabbeth accepted such offer, and received from Bethell $3,000 on account of such purchase price. Thereafter, on the same day, the telegram last quoted was received, and they showed the same to plaintiffs, and at the same time informed them that prior to its receipt they had sold the property to Bethell, without the crop, for $15,000 net cash to defendant.

On April 17th plaintiffs tendered to Gill & Rabbeth $14,000 and demanded a conveyance of the property, and this tender was rejected by said brokers.

On the same day plaintiffs sent directly to defendant, this being the first time they had communicated directly with him and the first time that the names of the proposed purchasers were communicated to him, the following telegram, viz.: "Ar. 17. Mr. Joseph L. White, Kingsville, Texas. On April 15 last, we offered by telegram sent through Gill & Rabbeth to pay you fourteen thousand dollars cash for your sub. lot one, block thirty-five, East Redlands, San Bernardino county, California, and on April sixteenth last through Gill & Rabbeth received your acceptance. Will you carry out and perform said contract of sale? If so, wire instructions concerning delivery of deed and payment of money. Wire answer. A. J. Wilson. R. C. Willis."

On the same day Gill & Rabbeth telegraphed to defendant as follows: "Redlands, Cal. April 17, 1909. J. Lowell White, Kingsville, Texas. Before last telegram came we sold grove another party fifteen thousand. First party claims grove at fourteen. Full explanation by letter. Gill & Rabbeth"—and at the same time wrote to him an explanation of the situation.

On April 19th plaintiffs again telegraphed defendant as follows: "Redlands, Cal. April 19, 1909. J. Lowell White, Kingsville, Texas. Have deposited in your name $14,400, with Citizens National Bank of Redlands, California, and demand deed of sub. lot one, block 35, East Redlands. Letter follows. Wilson & Willis."

On the same day defendant telegraphed plaintiffs that, having had no negotiations with them, he regretted that he was unable to answer their message of the 17th, and on April 23d he telegraphed the Citizens' National Bank of Redlands not to accept for his account the money deposited by plaintiffs. This telegram of April 19th was apparently sent in reply to plaintiffs' telegram of April 17th, and, so far as appears, before plaintiffs sent their telegram of April 19th.

One of the questions presented is whether, in view of these facts, a contract in writing for the sale of the property by defendant to plaintiffs was created.

The trial court, among other things, found that there was no understanding or agreement between plaintiffs and defendant as to the sale of the orange crop on the trees by defendant, or as to any disposition of said crop; that plaintiffs never accepted the counter proposition of defendant as contained in his telegram of April 16th as to the sale of the property "without crop," or agreed with defendant for the purchase of the property for $14,000 net cash, without crop. It further found that plaintiffs never offered $14,000, or any sum, for the property here sought, and that defendant never accepted in writing any offer of plaintiffs, and that the tender and demand of plaintiffs was for a conveyance of the premises "including the crop of oranges then growing on said property."

In determining the question thus presented it is necessary to consider certain additional facts which must be taken as established on this appeal in view of the record before us.

The trial court found, in response to an allegation of the complaint to that effect, which was denied by the answer, "that said Gill & Rabbeth in sending and receiving the aforesaid telegrams and letters set out in paragraphs 6 and 7 of the amended complaint were acting as the agents of plaintiffs and were authorized by plaintiffs to despatch and receive said communications, by telegram and letter, from defendant for plaintiffs." The letters and telegrams referred to included all those of April 13th, 15th, and 16th hereinbefore set forth. We regard this finding as most vital to plaintiffs. If Gill & Rabbeth were lawfully acting as plaintiffs' agents in sending and receiving such letters and telegrams, it is obvious that the receipt by Gill & Rabbeth of any such letter or telegram from defendant was a receipt thereof by plaintiffs, their principals, which rendered it unnecessary, in order to make the same effective as a proposition or acceptance, that the same should be communicated to plaintiffs by Gill & Rabbeth. On the other hand, if Gill & Rabbeth were not the agents of plaintiffs in such matter, but were the agents of defendant, it is obvious that, as long as any such letter or telegram from defendant was not communicated to plaintiffs for the purpose of carrying on the negotiations, it was no more effective as a proposal or acceptance than if it had remained in defendant's pocket in Texas. Being in the possession of his agent, it would still have been in his possession, undelivered. There was sufficient evidence to support this finding, and it must here be assumed that Gill & Rabbeth were the agents of plaintiffs in such matter. There was also evidence to support a conclusion that defendant knew that Gill & Rabbeth were acting as the agents for a proposed purchaser in making the propositions for purchase, and not as his agent therein.

[1] The trial court found that Gill & Rabbeth on April 16, 1909, before the receipt of defendant's telegram of that date, acting as agents for defendant, sold the property to one Bethell for $15,000 net cash, Bethell to pay the sale commission; that at that time Bethell paid Gill & Rabbeth $3,000 cash on such purchase and took possession of the property and has ever since been in possession. This finding, except in so far as it states that Bethell paid Gill & Rabbeth $3,000 on account of an attempted purchase by him, is entirely without support in the evidence. There was absolutely nothing in the evidence to warrant the conclusion that Gill & Rabbeth had been authorized by defendant to make any contract on his behalf for the sale of any of his property, or that they were anything more than mere brokers with power merely to find a purchaser. See Lambert v. Gerner, 142 Cal. 399, 76 Pac. 53; Grant v. Ede, 85 Cal. 418, 24 Pac. 890, 20 Am. St. Rep. 237. And there is nothing in the record to support a conclusion that defendant in any way ratified the attempted action of Gill & Rabbeth in regard to a sale to Bethell prior to the sending or receipt by him of plaintiffs' telegram of April 19th, or did anything that would operate as an estoppel in Bethell's favor. So we must determine the question raised in regard to the matter of the orange crop without regard to the attempted action of Gill & Rabbeth in the matter of a sale to Bethell.

[2] While for some purposes growing crops are considered personal property, it is practically elementary law that, as between the vendor and vendee of real property having a growing crop thereon, such crop constitutes a part of the realty (unless there has been a constructive severance), and in the case of a voluntary conveyance of the land passes to the grantee unless specially reserved by the grantor.

[3] And while there are some authorities holding that an oral exception or reservation of the crop is effective in such a case, the weight of authority as well as the better reasoning are to the effect that, where a writing is essential to the transfer of real property, such a reservation cannot be established by parol to impair the effect of the writing purporting to convey the land without reservation. See 8 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) pp. 303, 306. And this court appears to have committed itself to this doctrine in Fisk v. Soule, 87 Cal. 313, 25 Pac. 430, where it was substantially said that a written contract for the sale of land which did not contain any reservation of the crops bound the grantor to include the crops in his conveyance, notwithstanding an oral understanding that the crops were not to be included, "unless corrected on the ground that by mistake it was not in accordance with the agreement actually made." As we have already seen, the evidence was sufficient to support the conclusion of the trial court that the crop remaining on the trees on this property had not been sold at the time of these negotiations, and that there had been no constructive severance thereof from the land.

[4, 5] The first offer of plaintiffs to purchase the property was that of April 13th. So far as the matter of the crop was concerned, it was clear and certain in its terms. It was an offer of $14,000 net, half cash, for everything that would then pass by a grant of the land. This, as we have seen, necessarily included the crop on the trees. This offer having been rejected by defendant's telegram of April 15th, plaintiffs on April 15th made a second offer "of fourteen cash"; the necessary implication of the language used being that it was an offer of $14,000 net cash for the same property referred to in the telegram of April 13th, viz., the realty as it stood, without reservation or exception of any kind. To this, on April 16th, defendant answered by telegram, "I accept fourteen thousand net cash to me for lower ten without crop." The italics are ours. His letter of the same day was simply a confirmation of this message, with expressions indicating that he was satisfied that the purchase would be proceeded with upon the terms stated by him.

It may be conceded that this telegram introduced a provision for a reservation in the proposed conveyance that was not contained in the written offer of plaintiffs, and that defendant's acceptance was therefore a qualified acceptance, which under our law constituted a new proposal. Section 1585, Civ. Code. When this new proposal was received by Gill & Rabbeth, it was, in legal effect, received by plaintiffs. There is nothing to indicate that it was revoked by defendant at any time before the receipt by him of plaintiffs' telegrams of April 17th and 19th. Section 1587, Civ. Code. Defendant's telegram of April 19th to plaintiffs was in no sense a revocation of his previous proposal. If either of these telegrams constituted an acceptance by plaintiffs of defendant's new proposal, the contract was complete so far as the matter of the reservation by the defendant was concerned. "A proposal may be revoked at any time before its acceptance is communicated to the proposer, but not afterwards." Section 1586, Civ. Code. We do not see how it can be held that plaintiffs' telegrams of April 17th and 19th can be considered otherwise than as an acceptance of defendant's proposition. Especially is this true of their telegram of April 19th, when read in connection with that of April 17th. It was an absolute compliance with the terms of the proposition made by defendant's telegram so far as the consideration named was concerned (the $400 additional being the amount of the agents' commission), and, although silent on the question of reservation of crop so far as express words were concerned, it necessarily implied acquiescence in the making of such a reservation. No other construction could reasonably be given to the telegram, in the light of the other telegrams and letters that had passed between the parties, than that the same was an absolute and unconditional assent to the terms proposed by defendant. The demand therein for a deed was clearly, in effect, one for a deed of the property without the crop. It is not to be doubted, in view of all the writings, that plaintiffs could have been compelled to accept in full satisfaction of the contract a deed containing such a reservation. No condition having been provided by the proposer concerning the communication of the acceptance, any reasonable and usual mode could be adopted, and the consent must be deemed to have been fully communicated between the parties as soon as plaintiffs put their acceptance in the course of transmission to defendant. Civ. Code, §§ 1582 and 1583.

It may be said, in passing, that nothing could be clearer, in view of the evidence, than that it was the understanding of all parties that the crop was not to go with the land; but, as we have said, the agreement to this effect must be shown by the writings.

There is no force in any of the other points made against the validity of the alleged contract. Some of these claims rest upon the assumption that there had been a sale to Bethell before the contract with plaintiffs was perfected—an assumption that we have seen is not warranted. The series of letters and telegrams passing between Gill & Rabbeth, acting for plaintiffs, and defendant, and between plaintiffs and defendant, contained all the essential elements expressed in such a way as to make a complete, certain, and definite contract between the parties. This is certainly true both as to the description of the property and the names of the purchasers, the matters as to which defendant makes his main contention. It cannot be disputed that the description of the property contained in the telegram of April 17th was certain and complete, and the court finds that it was understood by all the parties that the "lower ten" mentioned in the earlier telegrams "was the property described in paragraph 2 of the amended complaint," which included no other land than that described in the telegram of April 17th, as well as that of the 19th. It was shown that defendant owned no other 10-acre piece of land, and that he owned only one other parcel in San Bernardino county, one containing 14.7 acres. It cannot be disputed that plaintiffs themselves could effectually continue in their own names the negotiations theretofore carried on in the name of their agents.

Some claim is made, based on the allegations of paragraph 2 of the amended complaint, that the defendant is the owner of certain land (describing it), "together with 10 shares of the capital stock of the East Redlands Water Company, a corporation," and on the prayer of such complaint by which plaintiffs asked that the defendant be required to execute a conveyance to them of the property hereinbefore described. We do not see how this in any way affects the question of the validity of the contract. It is apparent, of course, from what we have said, that if the water stock referred to in this allegation was not appurtenant to the land, and consequently was personal property, the contract made did not include it. If, on the other hand, it was appurtenant to the land, as is claimed in plaintiffs' brief, and therefore legally part of the land, it was covered by the contract.

We conclude, therefore, that there was a good and sufficient contract in writing between these parties for the sale of the land described in paragraph 2 of the amended complaint, and that the findings of the trial court to the contrary are not sustained by the evidence.

[6] We are now brought to the remaining claims of defendant, which relate to the right of plaintiffs to have specific performance of the contract. It is unnecessary to consider his contention that the complaint fails to state facts showing that the contract should be specifically enforced, for we are satisfied that we cannot interfere with the action of the lower court denying such relief in view of its conclusion upon the question of the fairness, justness, reasonableness, and adequacy of the consideration. It is alleged in the amended complaint that at all the times mentioned $14,000 "net cash was and is now a fair, just, reasonable, and adequate price for the said property described in paragraph 2." This was denied by the answer, and it was alleged therein that said property was and is reasonably worth $18,000. As we read the findings, the trial court concluded that the value of the property as it stood at the time of the negotiations, including the crop then on the trees, was $16,000, and that the value without such crop was $15,000. The court further found "that the sum of $14,000, net cash, was and is not a fair or just or reasonable or adequate price for the property," without the crop. There was ample evidence to sustain the conclusion of the trial court as to the real value.

Our Civil Code (section 3391) provides that specific performance cannot be enforced against a party to a contract: "(1) If he has not received an adequate consideration for the contract; (2) if it is not, as to him, just and reasonable." The claim of plaintiffs is that, in view of the small difference between the true value and the consideration agreed on, it cannot be held that there was such an inadequacy in the price agreed on as to support the conclusion of the trial court, quoting Mr. Pomeroy to the effect that the rule is well settled that, where the parties were both in a situation to form an independent judgment concerning the transaction and acted knowingly and intentionally, "mere inadequacy in the price or in the subject-matter, unaccompanied by other inequitable incidents," is never of itself a sufficient ground for refusing the remedy of specific performance. It is clear, of course, that our statute has made inadequacy of consideration a separate ground for refusing specific performance. Morrill v. Everson, 77 Cal. 114, 19 Pac. 190; Cummings v. Roeth, 10 Cal. App. 144, 101 Pac. 434. See, also, White v. Sage, 149 Cal. 613, 87 Pac. 193. Clearly the difference between the true value and the agreed value may be such as, under our statute, to warrant the conclusion that specific performance should be refused on the ground alone of inadequacy of consideration.

[7] The question in such cases necessarily is, not whether the price agreed on was the highest price obtainable, but whether such price is a fair and adequate price "under all the circumstances." Morrill v. Everson, supra.

[8] It is peculiarly a question of fact for the trial court to determine in the light of all the circumstances, and the conclusion of that court upon the question should not be set aside unless it is clear that it has no sufficient support in the evidence. A conclusion that the agreed price was not adequate means that it was not such as to be, under all the circumstances, a "fair, or just or reasonable" price to be paid by the vendee to the vendor, terms expressly embodied by the trial court in the finding in this case. While a mere difference in value of $1,000 on property worth only $15,000 is perhaps not so large as to warrant a conclusion of inadequacy sufficient to justify a refusal of specific performance, something more was shown in this case. The vendor resided and was in the state of Texas, many hundreds of miles from the property, and was dependent upon those near the property for information as to its condition and value. On the other hand, the plaintiffs were on the ground and were well informed regarding the value of orange groves in that vicinity, and one of them had been engaged for eight years in buying and selling such orange groves. In their telegram of April 13th to defendant, Gill & Rabbeth advised a sale on the terms then offered, stating that there was much scale in the grove. We cannot say, in the light of these facts and the inferences that may be reasonably drawn therefrom, that the finding of the trial court that the consideration was not, under the circumstances, fair or just or reasonable or adequate as to defendant, is without sufficient support in the evidence. If the finding is sufficiently supported by evidence, it follows that the judgment denying specific performance was correct.

[9] Complaint is made that, in any event, plaintiffs should have been awarded damages. It was generally alleged that, by reason of the failure and neglect to convey on the part of defendant, plaintiffs had been damaged in the sum of $2,000. This was denied, and the court found that plaintiffs had suffered no damage whatever. The measure of damage for breach of an agreement to convey real estate, where no bad faith on the part of the vendor is alleged and shown, is prescribed by section 3306 of the Civil Code to be "the price paid, and expenses properly incurred in examining the title and preparing the necessary papers, with interest thereon." There was no evidence whatever to show any such expenditure by plaintiffs, no showing that would have sustained a conclusion of damage, in view of the provisions of section 3306 of the Civil Code.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 1, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 757*)—INSTRUCTIONS—TESTIMONY OF ACCOMPLICES.

If the evidence requires it, the court should charge the law as to accomplices, leaving, as a rule, the question of whether a witness is an accomplice for the jury.

At common law, an "accomplice" includes all participes criminis, whether they be principals in the first or second degree, or mere accessories before or after the fact.

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 507*)—"ACCOMPLICE"—STATUTES.

Since under the direct provisions of Pen. Code, § 31, all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether they directly commit the act or aid and abet therein, or being absent advise and encourage its commission, are principals, such persons are also accomplices within the rule as to accomplice's testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1082–1096; Dec. Dig. § 507.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 507*)—"ACCOMPLICE."

The fact that one cannot be convicted as a principal of the same offense of which accused is charged does not prevent him from being an accomplice within the rule as to accomplice's testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1082–1096; Dec. Dig. § 507.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 507*)—"ACCOMPLICE."

Pen. Code, § 31, provides that all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether they directly commit the act or aid and abet therein, or advise and encourage its commission, are principals. Section 654 provides that an act which is made punishable in different ways by different provisions of the Code may be punished under either of such provisions, but cannot be punished under more than one. Held, that the fact that an act of participation as an accessory or accomplice has been made a separate crime would not necessarily prevent such accomplice from being indicted so as to prevent him from being an accomplice within the rule as to corroborating an accomplice's testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1082–1096; Dec. Dig. § 507.*]

8. BRIBERY (§ 1*)—DEFINITION AT COMMON LAW.

At common law, "bribery" was the voluntary giving or receiving of anything of value in unlawful payment of an official act done or to be done.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 867, 868; vol. 8, p. 7593.]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 507*)—ACCOMPLICES—DEFINITION.

The test of whether one is an accomplice, within the rule as to accomplice's testimony, is whether his participation in the offense has been criminally corrupt.

10. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 507*)—ACCOMPLICES—CORROBORATION.

Pen. Code, § 165, punishes every person who gives or offers a bribe to any member of any board of supervisors of any county or city with intent to corruptly influence him in his action on any matter pending in the body, and every member of such bodies who receives or agrees to receive any bribe upon any understanding that his vote or judgment shall be influenced thereby. Held, that one who acted as intermediary for another in offering a bribe to a member of a board of supervisors prosecuted under section 165, for agreeing to receive and receiving a bribe, was an accomplice, requiring his evidence to be corroborated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1082–1096; Dec. Dig. § 507.*]

11. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 511*)—ACCOMPLICE'S TESTIMONY—CORROBORATION.

While the corroboration of an accomplice's testimony may be slight, it must of itself, independent of the accomplice's testimony, tend to show accused's guilt, so that the accomplice's own direct evidence is not available as corroborating evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1127–1137; Dec. Dig. § 511.*]

12. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 511*)—ACCOMPLICE'S TESTIMONY—"CORROBORATE."

In the prosecution of a member of a city and county board of supervisors for receiving a bribe for his vote, another supervisor testified that, acting for another, he approached the members of the board as to buying their votes, and that he offered accused a certain sum for his vote on a certain proposition, and that accused said it would be all right. Held, that such witness' evidence was not "corroborated," within the rule as to corroborating an accomplice's testimony, by evidence which merely showed how accused voted on such proposition, or that immunity was offered to accused for "any and all crimes" he committed as supervisor without specifying any particular crime, or of the receiving of sufficient money by the alleged briber to enable him to make the bribe without a showing that accused received anything, nor was the fact that after accused was indicted such witness tried to induce the district attorney to abandon the prosecution available to corroborate his evidence.

13. Bribery (§ 1*)—Offenses.

The acceptance by an officer of a gift after an official act is consummated without any prior corrupt understanding does not constitute bribery.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

M. W. Coffey was convicted of bribery, and, from the judgment of conviction and orders denying motions to set aside the judgment and for a new trial, he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Carroll Cook, Franklin P. Bull, and Robert Farral, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., W. H. Langdon, Dist. Atty., and Francis J. Heney, Asst. Dist. Atty. (Wm. Hoff Cook, of counsel), for the People.

HENSHAW, J. Defendant was indicted under section 165 of the Penal Code, and was charged as a supervisor with having "agreed to receive and receiving" a bribe of $4,000 from James L. Gallagher, Abraham Ruef, and Tirey L. Ford. It was alleged that the agreement to receive the bribe and the reception of the bribe were "with the willful, felonious, unlawful, and corrupt intent" upon the part of Coffey that his official vote, opinion, judgment, and action should be influenced thereby in the matter of granting to the United Railroads of San Francisco a franchise for an overhead trolley system. From the judgment of conviction and from his various motions to set aside the judgment, in arrest of judgment, and for a new trial, each of which was denied by the court, defendant appeals. His principal contentions are that the court erred in the instructions which it gave upon the law of accomplices, and that his conviction was had in violation of the law, upon the uncorroborated testimony of a self-confessed accomplice in his crime.

[1] When the question of an accomplice arises in the trial of a case, the general and accepted rule is for the court to instruct the jury touching the law of accomplices, and leave the question whether or not the witness be an accomplice for the decision of the jury as a matter of fact. People v. Kraker, 72 Cal. 459, 14 Pac. 196, 1 Am. St. Rep. 65.

[2] Whenever the facts themselves are in dispute, that is to say, wherever the question is whether the witness did or did not do certain things, which, admittedly, if he did do them, make him an accomplice, the jury's finding, upon familiar principles, is not disturbed. But where the facts are not in dispute, where the acts and conduct of the witness are admitted, it becomes a question of law for the court to say whether or not those acts and facts make the witness an accomplice. For the law declares in mandatory terms that "a conviction cannot be had on the testimony of an accomplice, unless he is corroborated by other evidence which in itself, and without the aid of the accomplice, tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof." Pen. Code, § 1111.

[3] Therefore whenever upon appeal it is argued that the conviction was had upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, it is equivalent to a declaration that the verdict is contrary to the law and the evidence, and this is always a legal question. Pen. Code, § 1181, subd. 6. Therefore, in every proper case, a Court of Appeals is called upon to consider whether or not the witness is an accomplice, and, if so, whether his evidence has received the corroboration demanded by the law before a defendant may be convicted upon it.

To the consideration of what constitutes a man an accomplice in a bribery case we are thus at once brought, and to an understanding of these matters a brief statement of the evidence becomes necessary. The principal witness for the prosecution was Gallagher, himself a supervisor. Gallagher, by his own statements, was testifying under a promise of immunity, agreed to by the prosecution, in consideration of his giving truthful evidence touching his own crimes, and the crimes of the board of which he was a member, including the crime under examination. He swore that he acted as the intermediary of Abraham Ruef and for Ruef, and approached and consulted with his fellow members on the board in relation to the corrupt bargains which were, and were to be, entered into, and the amounts of money which the members of the board were to receive for voting as Ruef desired. In this particular instance Gallagher spoke to Coffey, at the suggestion of Ruef (quoting from his testimony): "Mr. Ruef told me what he could or would give the board of supervisors in the matter, and asked me to present the proposition to them, and I did so, and I reported back to Mr. Ruef from them that it was all right; that the matter could go through. I said to Mr. Coffey, in the matter of the overhead trolley, that there would be $4,000 in that matter, and Mr. Coffey said that that would be all right—words to that effect. That is the substance of it." The trolley franchise was granted, and subsequent thereto, Gallagher testifies, he gave to Coffey $4,000 in two separate payments. This evidence, coming from the prosecution itself, is uncontroverted, and presents the legal question whether, by virtue of it, Galagher was an accomplice of Coffey in the corrupt agreement thus charged and proved.

The rules of law and principles of evidence controlling the testimony of accomplices are drawn from the common law. The difficulty which the common-law judges experienced was not in determining the weight to be given to the testimony of an accomplice. Under their rules of evidence, a convicted felon could not testify. Influenced in no small degree by the maxim of the Roman law that a man of self-confessed infamy should not be heard as a witness against another (nemo, allegans turpitudinem suam, est audiendus), their principal difficulty was in determining whether the oath and evidence of a self-confessed though unconvicted felon—an accomplice—should be received at all. When this question was resolved against the doctrine of the Roman law, it was, of course, recognized that evidence of an accomplice, coming from a tainted source, the witness being, first, an infamous man, from his own confession of guilt, and, second, a man usually testifying in the hope of favor or the expectation of immunity, was not entitled to the same consideration as the evidence of a clean man, free from infamy. Hence it soon became the practice of the common-law judges, in the wide latitude allowed to them in the instruction of their juries, to advise the latter that the testimony of an accomplice, for the reasons indicated, was to be viewed with care, caution, and suspicion (see Code Civ. Proc. § 2061), that the accomplice stood before them as a witness entitled to little credit, and that the surest way of establishing his credit in their eyes was for them to note whether his testimony was corroborated in any material matter by independent evidence, and that if it were so corroborated they might put faith in all that the accomplice had said. Instructions to this effect did not, of course, embody any rule of positive law. They were but the expression of considerations naturally arising from a contemplation of the weight and value to be given to such evidence. Subsequently they were cast into the form of positive law by varying enactments in the Codes and statutes of the states. In this state, the rule of positive law since the year 1851 is as has been declared in section 1111 of the Penal Code. Time has not changed the value of such evidence, and succeeding Legislatures have retained the rule; the amendment to the section in 1911 not materially affecting it.

[4] But while the Legislature was thus at pains to declare that a conviction could not be had on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, it omitted to define this word. At common law no difficulty was experienced, for the word was interpreted broadly to include principals in every degree and accessories before and after the fact. Those who "receive, relieve, comfort, or assist" the felon, were regarded as having participated in his crime, and as meriting the same punishment that he had earned. And so it will be found that at common law, and in the jurisdiction of the federal courts, an accepted definition of an accomplice includes "all participes criminis, whether they are considered, in strict legal propriety, as principals in the first or second degree, or merely as accessories before or after the fact." In re Rowe, 77 Fed. 161, 23 C. C. A. 103.

Although the Legislature did not in terms define an accomplice, it did lay down certain rules from which an acceptable definition of an accomplice may readily be derived. Thus it obliterated the common-law distinctions between principals in their different degrees and accessories before the fact, and declared that "all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether it be a felony or misdemeanor, and whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, or not being present, have advised and encouraged its commission, * * * are principals in any crime so committed." Pen. Code, § 31. The object of this was both to simplify criminal procedure and to do away with the technicalities of the common law, which made the aider or abettor a principal in the second degree, and which forbade the accessory to be brought to trial until the principal had been convicted or outlawed, a rule that lived in modern times and did much mischief. 2 Stephen, History Criminal Law, 232.

[5] Rejecting from the category of accomplices the accessory after the fact (People v. Collum, 122 Cal. 186, 54 Pac. 589), we may derive a satisfactory definition of an accomplice from the language of section 31 of the Penal Code above quoted. Accomplices, then, are "all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, or, not being present, have advised and encouraged its commission." Certainly, since the law has said that all such persons are so tainted with guilt that they may be indicted as principals, it cannot be denied that they are also accomplices. This definition, moreover, runs counter to no authority, since, by all, every person of legal responsibility, who knowingly and voluntarily co-operates with or aids or assists or advises or encourages another in the commission of a crime is an accomplice, without regard to the degree of his guilt. 1 Russell's Crimes, 49; Wharton, Crim. Ev. 440; Rice, Crim. Ev. § 319; Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 1159.

Having reached the point of defining an accomplice, it becomes proper to consider what acts or facts fix this relationship or characteristic upon a witness. Manifestly, the single, sole determinative consideration is the part which the witness has borne in the crime perpetrated. If the witness has committed the crime, if he has aided and abetted in its commission, if he has advised and encouraged its commission, the existence of any one of these facts admitted or established stamps his status as that of an accomplice. This is the precise language of the law, and this, and this alone, is the governing principle of the law. Yet, in view of the cases hereinafter to be considered, it will be found that occasionally, a court losing sight of this paramount and all-controlling consideration, namely, the conduct of the witness in relation to the crime, has wandered widely from the true test, and, in accordance with faulty definitions of its own making, has determined upon entirely false premises whether a witness is or is not an accomplice.

[6] The commonest of these errors may thus be expressed: The law declares that all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether they directly commit it, or aid and abet in its commission, or advise and encourage its commission, are principals. They are, of course, accomplices. Therefore an accomplice is one who may be indicted for the same crime as that charged against the person on trial, and therefore, if he cannot be charged with the same crime, he is not an accomplice. Here is epitomized the reasoning of such cases as State v. Durnam, 73 Minn. 150, 75 N. W. 1127, and the fallacy of the reasoning must be obvious. One is an accomplice in a crime because of the part that he has taken in it, not because he may be indicted as a principal. The latter is a mere accidental circumstance, depending upon the language of the statute, and in no way affecting the true touchstone, namely, the part which the accomplice has taken in the offense. The judicial declaration that, under a statute such as our section 31 of the Penal Code, all accomplices may be indicted as principals, is perfectly sound. But the attempted reasoning from this that if a person cannot be indicted as a principal, he is, therefore, not an accomplice, is absolutely fallacious. To illustrate: In the present condition of our law, no one would question but that the man who instigated and incited a murder and the man who actually committed the murder were both accomplices in the crime of murder. No one would question, moreover, but that both could be indicted as principals in the crime of murder. But suppose that to-morrow the Legislature, as it would be quite competent for it to do, should declare that where a man had incited murder he should be indicted only for subornation of murder, and upon conviction be punished by death, but that the man who committed the murder under such incitement should be charged with murder, and upon conviction should be punished by life imprisonment, there would be presented a case where the law denounced as different crimes the different acts of the parties. Would it for a moment be said that they ceased therefore and thereby to be accomplices in the crime of murder? Or, again, the law to-day declares that the giver of a bribe may be punished for the giving; that the officer who receives a bribe may be punished for the receiving. A. offers B. a bribe, and by this means advises and encourages the commission of a crime. B., in turn, consults his friend C., who "advises and encourages" B. to accept the bribe. B. returns to A. and agrees to A.'s corrupt proposition, and A. pays the bribe money. C. is admittedly an accomplice. He has advised and encouraged B. in the commission of a crime, but A. has done precisely the same thing, and has gone even further than B., in that he has not only advised and encouraged, but has become a party to the criminal agreement. By what logic or reasoning may it be said that C. is an accomplice and A. is not? Not because of the accidental circumstance, if such circumstance exist, that A. can be charged with another crime growing out of the same acts, not because of the accidental circumstance, if it exist, that A. cannot be charged with the same crime, as B., for these are purely accidental circumstances and are not of the essence of the consideration. At common law the accomplice could not be indicted for the same crime, yet he was none the less an accomplice. The declaration that one is an accomplice if he can be indicted for the same crime charged against the defendant on trial is perfectly sound; but the converse of the declaration, namely, that, if he cannot be indicted for the same crime, he is not an accomplice, is the merest sophistry, which, ignoring the true test and meaning of the word, seeks to turn shadow into substance. That test and meaning, as we have said, are expressed in section 31 of the Penal Code. If a man has committed a crime, if he has aided and abetted in its commission, if he has advised or encouraged its commission, he is an accomplice with all other participes criminis.

It is, of course, no argument to say that, where the law has denounced as separate crimes the separate acts of the parties as bribe giving and bribe taking, to hold the parties to be accomplices would make them principals in one crime and accomplices in another "at the same time and through the same overt act." This is a frequent occurrence in and condition of the law. The law may and oft does go further and make different offenses with different punishments of the same act. The prosecution may be had for any of the crimes embraced within the acts committed. But the law exacts only a single punishment, and upon conviction or acquittal for the given acts the defendant may successfully plead autrefois convict or autrefois acquit against another prosecution for the same acts under a different section of the Code. Indeed, this condition of the law is expressly recognized in section 654 of the Penal Code, which declares that "an act or omission which is made punishable in different ways by different provisions of this Code may be punished under either of such provisions, but in no case can it be punished under more than one; an acquittal or conviction and sentence under either one bars a prosecution for the same act or omission under any other." And as specific illustrations, subornation of perjury is declared a crime punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for not less than one nor more than fourteen years. Pen. Code, §§ 126, 127. A futile effort to induce a witness to commit perjury may be punished as an attempt under section 664 of the Penal Code, when upon conviction the defendant could be sentenced to state prison for a term not exceeding seven years. Yet by section 137 of the Penal Code the same attempt is declared to be a felony, and by section 18 of the Code that felony could be punished only by a term of imprisonment not exceeding five years. Again, extortion under color of office contains all the elements of bribe taking, and the guilty official may be indicted and prosecuted indifferently for either offense, notwithstanding that their punishments may be different. Com. v. Wilson, 30 Pa. Super. Ct. 26.

While our law generally does not seek to admeasure the degrees of guilt between principals, accessories, and accomplices, it is quite competent for it to do so, and in the past it has been quite common for it to do so. If A. instigates B., C., D., and E. to join in the commission of a murder, B. furnishing the weapon, C. transporting D. and E. to the scene of the crime, D. holding the victim while E. inflicts the fatal blow, the law might admeasure their degrees of criminality, define their offenses separately, and punish them accordingly. If it did not do so, all, under our Code, would be accomplices and principals alike in the crime of murder. Would they be any the less accomplices, would they any the less have instigated, aided, abetted, and committed the crime because the law should happen to mete out different punishments for their separate acts of participation, as it actually did at common law?

[7] Nor yet does it follow, because the particular act of participation of an accessory or accomplice in a crime has been denounced by our law as a separate crime, that he cannot therefore be indicted as a principal. If the law made manifest its intent that he should not be so indicted as a principal, it would be but an exception to the general provision of section 31. If it did not make manifest this intent, then the situation presented is that contemplated by section 654 of the Penal Code, where the act is made punishable in different ways by different provisions of the Code. But in either case the accidental circumstances clearly do not affect the definition of an accomplice. One is an accomplice, we repeat, because of what he has done, and not because of the form of punishment which the law may mete out for his acts. Wherever the law has denounced as a separate crime the particular act of participation by an accessory or accomplice, the sole logical and legal effect is not to destroy the relationship of accomplice, but merely to effect a modification of section 31 of the Penal Code, as though by an express proviso it should read, "All persons concerned in the commission of a crime," etc., "are principals in any crime so committed, provided that they shall not be indicted as principals in any case where the law has denounced their participation as a separate crime and declared that they shall be prosecuted exclusively for such separate crime." But this, as we have said, does not and cannot, by any species of legal hermeneutics or legerdemain, relieve an accomplice of his character of accomplice. It is merely prescribing a separate punishment for the particular act of one who is still an accomplice.

By a few courts which have regarded the effort to induce a witness to commit perjury as the essence of the crime of subornation, disregarding as negligible the success of the effort resulting in a corrupt agreement and in the commission of the perjury itself, it is held that in a charge of subornation the perjurer is not an accomplice with the suborner. The case most often cited and here relied upon by respondent is that of Stone v. State, 118 Ga. 717, 45 S. E. 630, 98 Am. St. Rep. 145. That was a charge of subornation of perjury; the perjury having been committed. The testimony of the perjurer was received. It was contended that the perjurer was an accomplice. The Supreme Court of Georgia reasoned that while "in perjury and subornation of perjury the act of the two offenders is concurrent, parallel, and closely related in point of time and conduct," still there was "sufficient inherent difference between the two to warrant the lawmaking power in separating the act into its component parts and making that of the suborner a new and independent offense, punishable with greater or less severity than that inflicted on the perjurer." From this the court reasoned that "the suborner is not, under our law, treated as the accessory of the perjurer." This is "further evident from the fact that they are punished differently, while under the Code accessories before the fact are punishable in the same way as principals." The next step in the reasoning is sound. It is that "if not accessories the suborner and the perjurer are not accomplices." And having determined to its satisfaction that the suborner and the perjurer were not accessories, the conclusion that they were not accomplices followed irresistibly. The court would have made a more plausible presentation if it had reasoned solely from the proposition that the sole substantive element of subornation is the effort and attempt to procure perjury, and that the success or nonsuccess of the effort is a negligible quantity, and that it was thus like the crime of soliciting a bribe or the crime of offering a bribe. But to place its reasoning upon the ground that the suborner is not an accessory of the perjurer, so that if the trial were for perjury the suborner would not be considered as an accomplice, does violence to the common law and to the decision of every state which has made the common law the basis of its jurisprudence. The accomplice at common law—the accomplice in this state—is one who advises and encourages the commission of a crime. How can it be said that the very instigator of the crime—the suborner—has not advised or encouraged it? But faulty as we believe even this reasoning would have been, because we conceive the corrupt agreement to be of the essence of the crime of subornation, though not of attempt to suborn, it would still have been at variance with the common-law rule and the rule of such well-considered cases as People v. Evans, 40 N. Y. 5, and Commonwealth v. Smith, 11 Allen (Mass.) 243. The latter case merits quotation at length: "The crime of subornation of perjury is clearly in its nature that of an accessory before the fact to the perjury. Both perjury and subornation are felonies under our statute, being punishable by imprisonment in the state prison. Gen. Stats. c. 163, §§ 1, 2, 3; Id., c. 168, § 1. Whoever procures a felony to be committed, though it be by the intervention of a third person, is an accessory before the fact, for it is not necessary that there should be any direct communication between the accessory and the principal. Rex v. Cooper, 5 C. & P. 535; Foster's Crown Law, 125; 2 Hawk. c. 29, §§ 1, 10; Earl of Somerset's Case, cited in 19 Howell's State Trials, 804. And the accessory is a felon, though his felony is different in kind from that of the principal. Foster's Crown Law, 343. So it is said to be a principle in law, which can never be controverted, that he who procures a felony to be done is a felon. 1 Russ. on Crimes, 32. We cannot see that the application of these principles is changed, when the crime of the accessory before the fact is made by statute a substantive felony. The object of making it a substantive felony may be either to provide a distinct or milder punishment upon conviction, or to authorize the indictment and conviction of the accessory where the principal has not been convicted. But whether the crime is made the subject of separate prosecution and punishment or is to be included in an indictment with the principal offense will not, in the opinion of the court, change the definition of it, or alter the facts or circumstances in which the commission of it consists. The same facts to be averred and proved in the same way will substantiate the crime in one case as in the other. * * * The crime of subornation of perjury would consist in procuring perjury to be committed, directly or indirectly, as much after subornation was made a felony as before."

To the same effect is the case of State v. Fahey, 3 Pennewill (Del.) 594, 54 Atl. 690, and in State v. Renswick, 85 Minn. 19, 88 N. W. 22, the Supreme Court of Minnesota, which, as we shall see, is the only court that announces the extreme view that the briber and bribed are not accomplices, declares that in a trial for subornation of perjury the mere attempt to suborn testified to by the witness does not make him an accomplice; but, if the subornation itself is sought to be established by the testimony of the perjurer, the latter is an accomplice, and his evidence must be corroborated.

Wherever the commission of a crime involves the co-operation of two or more people, the guilt of each will be determined by the nature of that co-operation. Whenever the co-operation of the parties is a corrupt co-operation, then always those agents are accomplices, even as at common law they were principals. To the crime of seduction two parties are necessary, but the co-operation of the seduced is not criminal. She is a victim, and she is not therefore an accomplice of the seducer. In such lesser offenses as laws denouncing the sale of lottery tickets or the sale of liquor, while two are necessary to the transaction and to the commission of the crime, the law reasons that the purchaser's act is entirely innocent, and he will not be regarded as an accomplice. In cases of abortion, where the law denounces the commission of an abortion, some cases hold that the consenting pregnant woman is not an accomplice. These decisions doubtless arise in part out of a tenderness for the sex and a consideration of the extreme temptations by which a woman so situated may be beset. Under our law a woman may or may not be an accomplice, depending upon her part in the transaction. Thus she may consent to the taking of the drugs, or the performance of the operation in ignorance of the intended purpose. She may, indeed, be coerced into submission, in neither of which cases would she be an accomplice. But if a woman voluntarily solicits the performance of such an operation upon herself, and to that extent induces it, it is impossible to see how she can fail to have been an instigator and encourager of the crime, and so an accomplice. Such is the ruling of the Ohio Supreme Court in State v. McCoy, 52 Ohio St. 157, 39 N. E. 316, and such is the decision of this state in People v. Josselyn, 39 Cal. 393, and the recognition of the relationship of an accomplice is evidenced by the provisions of the Penal Code, which in section 1108 declares that upon a trial "for procuring or attempting to procure an abortion, or aiding or assisting therein, the defendant cannot be convicted upon the testimony of the woman upon or with whom the offense was committed, unless she is corroborated by other evidence."

In adultery and fornication, where the willing consent of the woman is proven or assumed, the courts have found no difficulty in declaring her to be an accomplice with the man. For there, differing from abortion, no considerations of the temptation of the woman's hard lot operate to soften the court's views. They are accomplices the one with the other because their conduct is corrupt and each has mutually aided the other in the commission of a crime to which the corrupt participation of the two is necessary. State v. Scott, 28 Or. 331, 42 Pac. 1; Merritt v. State, 12 Tex. App. 203; Townser v. State, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 453, 126 S. W. 572, 137 Am. St. Rep. 976.

[8] "Bribery" at common law, as defined by Bishop (1 Bishop, New Crim. Law, 85), was "the voluntary giving or receiving of anything of value in corrupt payment for an official act done or to be done." It is the uniform rule of decision, not only of the common law but of every state of the United States, with one exception hereinafter to be considered, that the giver and the receiver of the bribe are principals in the crime, and so necessarily accomplices of each other. The giving and the receiving are reciprocal. Rex v. Vaughan, 4 Burr, 2494; Regina v. Boyes, 1 Best & Smith, 311. In the Vaughan Case, supra, says Lord Mansfield: "Wherever it is a crime to take it is a crime to give." Various states have in various ways denounced as crimes certain phases, elements, and transactions going to the crime of bribery, but stopping short of its completion. Thus, in some states the soliciting of a bribe without its payment is a crime. Pen. Code, § 93. In others it is not. In some states the offer to pay a bribe without regard to its acceptance is a crime. Pen. Code, § 93. In others it is not. Manifestly in the crimes last mentioned, since the denounced act in no wise depends upon a plurality of agents, in no wise rests upon the corrupt assent, agreement, or procurement of another, the person approached is not an accomplice of the approacher. But whenever a crime embraces the corrupt, guilty, criminal co-operation of two or more persons, those persons always have been and must be accomplices.

[9] This, then, is the true test and rule: If in any crime the participation of an individual has been criminally corrupt, he is an accomplice. If it has not been criminally corrupt, he is not an accomplice. In those cases where the concurrent act or co-operation of two people is necessary, as in seduction, sometimes in abortion, and in the minor offenses of selling liquor, lottery tickets or harmful drugs, the relationship of accomplice does not exist because the co-operation of the other party is not denounced by the law as criminally corrupt, and, as matter of fact, need not be criminally corrupt. Upon the other hand, where the act requires the co-operation of two persons, and their co-operation is criminally corrupt, the relationship of accomplice is at once established, as in adultery and fornication, in duelling, in agreeing to fight a duel, in illegal rebating (U. S. v. N. Y. C. R. R. Co. [C. C.] 146 Fed. 298), in bribery, and in all forms of criminal agreement, where the agreement itself constitutes the crime. Conspiracies are typical instances of agreements in and of themselves constituting crimes. All the conspirators are principals and, of course, accomplices.

In the charge against this defendant of "agreeing to receive a bribe" and "receiving a bribe," each element, the agreeing and the receiving, necessarily contemplates the criminally corrupt co-operation of another (eliminating from consideration, of course, the feigned accomplice). To this proposition the authorities are so numerous and so uniform that one is rather embarrassed by the wealth than by the dearth of them. But on the question of accomplices in bribery alone, as sustaining this principle, either tacitly or with discussion, may be cited Newman v. People, 23 Colo. 300, 47 Pac. 278; People v. Bissert, 71 App. Div. 118, 75 N. Y. Supp. 630, affirmed 172 N. Y. 643, 65 N. E. 1120; People v. Winant, 24 Misc. Rep. 361, 53 N. Y. Supp. 695; People v. Acritelli, 57 Misc. Rep. 574, 110 N. Y. Supp. 440; State v. Callahan, 47 La. Ann. 444, 17 South. 50; State v. Smalls, 11 S. C. 262; State v. Horner, 1 Marv. (Del.) 504, 41 Atl. 139; Murphy v. State, 124 Wis. 635, 102 N. W. 1087; People v. McGarry, 136 Mich. 316, 99 N. W. 147; People v. Fielding, 36 App. Div. 401, 55 N. Y. Supp. 530; Ruffin v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 565, 38 S. W. 169; O'Brien v. State, 6 Tex. App. 665; Birch v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 106 S. W. 344; State v. Carr, 28 Or. 389, 42 Pac. 215; Butt v. State, 81 Ark. 173, 98 S. W. 723, 118 Am. St. Rep. 42; and State v. Duff, 138 Am. St. Rep. 269, note, where it is said: "It may be stated as a general rule that a person offering, giving, or paying a bribe is an accomplice of the person who receives it, particularly wherever the statutes make it a crime for a person to offer, give, or pay, and a crime for a person to receive, a bribe."

There is but one court, as has been intimated, which has advanced a view on this subject contrary to all other authorities and decisions. That is the Supreme Court of Minnesota, in the case of State v. Durnam, 73 Minn. 150, 75 N. W. 1127. In that case the defendant was indicted and convicted of the crime of "asking" for a bribe, the crime contemplated in our state by such sections as Penal Code, 93 and 94. He had solicited the bribe from Richards and Halvorson, witnesses in the case. The defendant's demands were not acceded to; the bribe money was not paid. Upon appeal it was contended that Richards and Halvorson were accomplices. The Attorney General in his brief made the argument that follows: "As to defendant's contention that Richards was an accomplice, it seems to us that, if a person from whom a bribe is asked is an accomplice when he refuses to give it, then a person who is held up on the street at night by a highwayman is an accomplice. In both cases the person robbed and the person solicited furnish subjects upon which the crime could be committed; but that does not make them accomplices. In order to be an accomplice, a person must be a criminal. He must do a criminal act with a criminal intent, and the person who is merely asked for a bribe may refuse it and be perfectly innocent of any offense." The position of the Attorney General was perfectly sound. It could have been adopted by the court with absolute security. But the court went still further and, under the fallacious formula above adverted to, worked out the proposition that if the witness could not have been indicted for the offense he was not an accomplice; and that, consequently, if the law has denounced the acts of participation of the two as separate offenses, "the one is not the accomplice of the other." How utterly mistaken this line of argument is, we think has been abundantly shown. We have already pointed out how this same court, in the case of perjury and subornation, crimes made separate and distinct by the Minnesota law, has held, notwithstanding, that the testimony of the perjurer must be corroborated in a charge against the suborner. We are not called upon to reconcile the inconsistency of these decisions, and it is sufficient to point out that State v. Durnam is unique in the history of the law.

[10] The charge against this defendant, as we have seen, is under section 165 of the Penal Code. It is not for asking or soliciting a bribe. It is for "agreeing" to receive and "receiving" a bribe. The agreement necessarily carries with it the essential concept of a criminal and corrupt bargain. There can be no agreement without a meeting of minds, and a meeting of minds for this base bargain is declared to be a crime. There is nothing in the law to suggest even that in such a crime the two parties stand in any different position from that occupied by two who agree to fight a duel. In such an agreement the act of the person who contracts to pay the consideration is admittedly base, corrupt, and criminal. Moreover, his conduct is essential to the very existence of the crime of agreeing. How then shall it be said that he is not, within the narrowest or the fullest meaning of the law, an accomplice of the man agreeing to take the bribe? He is an actual participant in the crime, as well as an aider, abettor, adviser, and encourager in its commission, for it is to be remembered that in the case at bar the crime itself is the agreement. An officer may solicit bribes, may ask for bribes, may advertise his willingness to accept bribes. Each one of these acts is a separate, distinct, and recognized crime; but no one of them is the crime of agreeing to take a bribe, which ex vi termini requires the guilty co-operation of another. U. S. v. Deitrich (C. C.) 126 Fed. 664. Moreover, if, as we have seen, by all of the authorities, saving one, when the bribery is completed the payer of the bribe and the recipient of the bribe are reciprocally accomplices in the bribing, it cannot successfully be argued that in the perfected agreement for the accomplishment of this crime the same two persons are not accomplices.

With the law thus before us we are in a position to consider the rulings of the trial court.

The court gave the following instruction: "Where two or more persons are concerned in the commission of a crime, whether they or either of them directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in the commission, or, not being present, have advised and encouraged in its commission, each one of them is an accomplice with the other in any crime so committed, and the final test of the question, as applied to a witness in any case, is: Could such witness lawfully be indicted with the defendant for the offense on trial? If so, he is an accomplice within the meaning of the law. If not, he is not, and the man who gives or offers a bribe is not for that reason an accomplice of the one who receives or agrees to receive a bribe." The opening sentence of this instruction defines an accomplice in just terms. But when it proceeds to say that the final test as applied to a witness in any case is: "Could such witness lawfully be indicted with the defendant for the offense on trial?" the court adopted the fallacious reasoning of the Durnam Case, supra, and fell into error—an error which was repeated in the closing sentence with, "the man who gives or offers a bribe is not, for that reason, an accomplice of the one who receives or agrees to receive a bribe." For, as Lord Mansfield said, "Wherever it is a crime to take it is a crime to give." These crimes are reciprocal and mutually interdependent. The same is true of an agreement to receive a bribe.

It thus being established that Gallagher was clearly an accomplice, the equally important question remains whether or not his testimony was corroborated. If it be corroborated, up to the requirements of the law, it might be argued that, notwithstanding the erroneous instruction above quoted, the jury determined that he was an accomplice, but rendered its verdict because of the corroborating evidence. Upon this it is declared by respondent that, treating Gallagher as an accomplice, his evidence was sufficiently corroborated.

[11] The corroboration of an accomplice's

testimony, as has been said, may be slight. People v. Melvane, 39 Cal. 616; People v. Clough, 73 Cal. 351. But it must in and of itself, and independent of the testimony of the accomplice, tend to inculpate the defendant on trial with the commission of the crime.

[12] But no part of the testimony which the respondent declares effects such corroboration is of any legal effect for this purpose. Thus it is said that the defendant's act "established primarily by Gallagher's direct testimony" tends to corroborate Gallagher. But this, in legal effect, is but the untenable declaration that one part of the evidence of an accomplice may corroborate another part. "The testimony of independent witnesses as to the defendant's votes in the board of supervisors on the bills and ordinances in relation to the overhead trolley system" does no more than to show how he voted, and affords not the slightest independent evidence that he so voted under a corrupt agreement to accept a bribe for so doing. The immunity contract offered in evidence did no more than to declare that immunity would be granted for any and all crimes which Coffey as a supervisor might have committed, but contained no reference whatsoever to this or any particular crime. The tracing of a fund from the United Railways into the hands of Ruef was likewise insufficient. This was but a showing of the possession of sufficient money by the alleged briber. It did not tend to show that the defendant actually received any of it. See People v. Bissert, 71 App. Div. 118, 75 N. Y. Supp. 630; Id., 172 N. Y. 643, 65 N. E. 1120.

The other matters of evidence alleged as establishing sufficient corroboration are equally without substance. It is unnecessary to discuss them all. But in exemplification, after Coffey was indicted for the present crime, Gallagher interceded on his behalf with the district attorney, and sought to have the latter abandon the prosecution. This is urged as corroboration. So far as appears, it was an unsolicited act, and could not have the slightest effect as showing, from an independent source, that Coffey either corruptly agreed to take a bribe, or corruptly received a bribe. The latter fact, the reception of the bribe, stands equally upon the uncorroborated testimony of Gallagher.

[13] Moreover, the money was received after the franchises were granted, and it is well established that, however atrocious in good morals the reception of a present after the act may be, the acceptance of a gift without corrupt prior understanding is not bribery. 2 Wharton's Crim. Law (10th Ed.) § 1858; State v. Ellis, 33 N. J. Law, 102, 97 Am. Dec. 707; Walsh v. People, 65 Ill. 58, 16 Am. Rep. 569.

It follows herefrom that the testimony of Gallagher is corroborated in no respect required by the law, and for the reasons given the judgment and orders appealed from are reversed, and the cause is remanded.

MARTZ v. AMERICAN BRAN GOLD CO.

(Sac. 1,902.)

1. Judgment (§ 155*)—Vacating—Grounds—Mistake and Inadvertence.

The notice of a motion to set aside a default judgment for plaintiff stated specifically that it was "upon the ground that said judgment was entered by mistake and inadvertence," and stated immediately thereafter that "no service has ever been made upon the defendant corporation herein." A sufficient affidavit of merits accompanied the notice. Held, that the motion was one for relief from the judgment, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, upon the ground of inadvertence and mistake, and not one to vacate for want of jurisdiction of the person.

2. Judgment (§ 159*)—Default Judgment—Vacating—Inadvertence and Mistake.

An affidavit, served with notice of motion to vacate a default judgment for plaintiff against defendant corporation, showing that none of the officers of the corporation knew of the institution of the suit until after the default judgment was entered, and that the person served was not an agent of the corporation, authorized the vacation of the judgment upon the ground of inadvertence and mistake, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 312, 313; Dec. Dig. § 159.*]

3. Judgment (§ 147*)—Default Judgment—Vacating—Inadvertence and Mistake.

Defendant may waive an objection to a default judgment that he was not personally served, and yet have it vacated on the ground of mistake and inadvertence.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Placer County; J. E. Prewett, Judge.

Action by C. E. Martz, administrator of Elmer W. Martz, deceased, against the American Bran Gold Company. From an order setting aside a default judgment for plaintiff, he appeals. Affirmed.

A. K. Robinson, James D. Meredith, and J. B. Landis, for appellant. Ben P. Tabor and C. H. Wilson, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order setting aside and vacating the default of the defendant and the judgment in plaintiff's favor entered thereon.

The action was one for damages in the sum of $25,000 for the death of plaintiff's intestate, alleged to have been caused by the wrongful neglect of the defendant. The only attempted service of summons in said action was on August 23, 1909, and consisted of the delivery of a copy of the complaint and summons to one W. S. Fletcher, in Placer county; said delivery being made to him as "the managing agent of said corporation." On May 3, 1910, the default of the defendant was entered, and on May 9, 1910, judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff for the relief demanded in the complaint—$25,000 and costs of suit. Execution was thereupon issued and levied upon property of defendant. The principal place of business of defendant corporation was at Long Beach, Los Angeles county, where both the president and secretary resided. Such corporation had been engaged in the business of mining in Placer county, and it was the theory of plaintiff that it was so engaged at the time of the attempted service of summons, and that said W. S. Fletcher was then its managing agent in that county.

On May 28, 1910, defendant served upon plaintiff's attorneys and filed a notice of motion to set aside the default and judgment, "upon the ground that said judgment was entered by mistake and by inadvertence; that no service has ever been made upon the defendant corporation herein." The notice stated that the motion would be based upon the affidavits of J. F. Thompson and J. W. Delker, copies of which were served therewith, and upon the records and files in the case. The affidavit of Mr. Thompson contained the matters essential to an affidavit of merits. In such affidavit he further declared that W. S. Fletcher, upon whom the summons was served, was not at any time since April 5, 1909, connected with defendant corporation, either as agent, officer, employé, or stockholder; and, further, that Fletcher did not report to the officers of defendant that he had been served with summons. He further declared that no process had ever been served on any officer or agent of the company, and "that affiant did not know, and that none of the officers of said defendant corporation knew, of the institution of this suit until long after judgment was rendered therein and an execution issued and levied founded upon said judgment." The affidavit of J. W. Delker, the secretary of defendant, contained similar allegations as to Fletcher, and lack of knowledge, prior to May 18, 1910, of the institution or pendency of the action. There was never any denial, either in any affidavit presented by plaintiff or otherwise, of any of the statements contained in these affidavits, except those in regard to the status of Fletcher as managing agent of the company. On May 30, 1910, another notice of motion to vacate the default and judgment, to be based on the same affidavits, records, etc., was served; the exclusive ground stated therein being want of jurisdiction of defendant, for the reason that there had been no service of process therein.

The motions so noticed were heard together; the affidavits hereinbefore referred to and numerous other affidavits, together with the files and records of the cause, being received in evidence on such hearing. The question of fact as to which the principal controversy existed on such hearing was whether Fletcher was, at the time of the attempted service of summons, the "managing agent of defendant," within the meaning of those words as used in subdivision 1, § 411, of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing that service of summons on a corporation formed under the laws of this state must be had by delivering a copy thereof "to the president or other head of the corporation, secretary, cashier, or managing agent thereof." Upon this issue there was a substantial conflict in the evidence, and the trial court expressly found in its order vacating the judgment and default that Fletcher, at the time of such service, "was not, nor had he been for more than three months, the agent, managing agent, employé, servant, officer, or stockholder of the defendant corporation." It was, however, contended by plaintiff, upon the authority of Security, etc., Co. v. Boston, etc., Co., 126 Cal. 418, 58 Pac. 941, 59 Pac. 296, that defendant had waived the want of service of summons by uniting with its motion for the vacating of the default and judgment on the ground of want of service, an application for relief on the ground of mistake and inadvertence, under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was further claimed that it had waived such want of service by applying to and obtaining from the court two orders shortening the time that must elapse between the service of the notices of motion to vacate and the hearing thereon. The trial court, while apparently treating the motion as one based solely on the ground of want of service of process, expressly found in its order "that said corporation defendant had no knowledge of the pending of said action, nor of the entry of said default, nor of any of the proceedings in said action, until after the issuance of execution herein"—a conclusion absolutely required by the undisputed evidence if Fletcher was not the "managing agent" of the defendant; and it must be assumed, in view of the conflict of evidence on the latter point, and the express finding of the trial court thereon, that he was not such managing agent. The court, concluding "that the defendant corporation was never served with summons herein, and is entitled to have the default set aside and the said judgment vacated," decreed "that the default entered herein be and is hereby set aside, and that the judgment entered herein on the 9th day of May, 1910, be and the same is hereby vacated, annulled and set aside," with leave to defendant to plead to the complaint within 30 days.

[1] We do not deem it necessary to consider the question whether defendant, by the language of its first notice of motion, and its application for and taking of two orders shortening the time that must elapse between the service of its notices of motion and the hearing thereon, waived the objection of want of jurisdiction of its person. Regardless of that matter, we are satisfied that the first motion should be considered as one by defendant for relief, under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, from a judgment taken against it through its mistake and inadvertence, even if it could be considered as also being a motion to set aside the judgment for want of jurisdiction of the person. It is to be observed that the notice of this motion does not in terms specify want of such jurisdiction as a ground of the motion. It does in terms specify that the motion will be "upon the ground that said judgment was entered by mistake and by inadvertence," following this immediately with the statement "that no service has ever been made upon the defendant corporation herein." A sufficient affidavit of merits accompanied the notice, a thing not essential to an attack for want of jurisdiction.

[2, 3] The affidavits served, by copy, with the notice, stated facts sufficient to warrant the granting of the relief asked because of the excusable mistake and inadvertence of the defendant, for surely, even if the objection of want of jurisdiction by reason of want of legal service of the summons was waived by a voluntary appearance after judgment, the fact that none of the officers of the corporation had any knowledge of the institution of the action until after the judgment had been entered is a sufficient basis for a conclusion that the judgment was taken against the defendant through its excusable mistake and inadvertence. But it is needless to discuss this particular question further, for plaintiff's contention that defendant waived the objection of want of service is based principally upon its further contention that defendant's motion was, in part, one for relief, under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, on the ground of mistake and inadvertence. It is not to be doubted, of course, that a defendant may waive such an objection and still have relief under the section last referred to.

So considering the motion, it is obvious that the order vacating the judgment and default was correct. Assuming that there was a waiver of the want of jurisdiction of the person of defendant by reason of its voluntary appearance after judgment, there was, according to findings of the trial court, sufficiently sustained by the evidence, no actual service of summons upon any officer or agent of defendant, and, according to another finding of the trial court, sustained by undisputed evidence, if Fletcher was not the managing agent of defendant (as is established by the former findings), no actual knowledge on the part of said defendant of the pendency of the action. Such a state of facts manifestly required that the motion for relief under section 473 should be granted, in order that defendant might have an opportunity to be heard upon the merits. So that, whatever may have been the exact reason for the action of the trial court, its order that the judgment and default be vacated was one that it was bound to make, in view of the facts found.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

1. RECORDS (§ 18*) — DESTROYED RECORD — PROCEEDINGS — PETITION — SUFFICIENCY — "CHARACTER."

Under the McEnerney act (St. 1906 [Ex. Sess.] p. 76), providing for an action to establish title in case of loss of records, and providing, in section 5, that an affidavit of plaintiff, fully and explicitly setting forth the character of his estate, right, title, and interest or claim in and possession of the property, shall be filed with the complaint, an affidavit, alleging simple possession without describing its character, was sufficient to give the court jurisdiction to decide the action; the word "character" having no reference to possession.

2. RECORDS (§ 18*) — DESTROYED RECORD — PROCEEDINGS—PETITION—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action to establish title under the McEnerney act (St. 1906 [Ex. Sess.] p. 78), an affidavit, alleging complainant's interest and possession, and showing who were her grantors and under what decree she became entitled to possession, is sufficient under section 5, providing for the filing of an affidavit fully setting forth the character of the claimant's estate and possession of the property, during what period the same has existed, and from whom obtained.

In Bank. Petition by Adele Paturel Soher for writ of mandate against George H. Cabaniss, as Judge of the Superior Court, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer, petitioner appeals. Demurrer overruled, and writ issued.

J. L. Kennedy, for petitioner. Robert H. Borland and Harding & Monroe, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Petitioner seeks a writ of mandate to compel respondent, who is a judge of the superior court, to proceed with the trial of an action to quiet title brought under the so-called "McEnerney Act." Respondent demurred to the petition, and as the question involved is purely one of law we may dispose of the whole matter by the ruling on this demurrer.

[1] Petitioner commenced, in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, an action in rem to establish her title to certain parcels of land. All the necessary steps were taken, summons was published pursuant to order of court, and the cause was set for trial. Respondent refused to proceed with the hearing of the cause, on the ground that the affidavit accompanying the complaint was insufficient to give the superior court jurisdiction of the action. In our examination of the questions arising out of the court's action in this regard, it will be necessary to scrutinize some of the provisions of the McEnerney act. Stats. 1906 (Extra Session) p. 78. Section 1 of that act provides that in case of the loss or destruction of public records by flood, fire, or earthquake, an action, such as petitioner sought to inaugurate, may be maintained by "any person who claims an estate of inheritance or for life in, and who is by himself or his tenant, or other person, holding under him, in the actual and peaceable possession of any real property." Section 2 prescribes the manner of commencing the action, which must be by filing a "verified complaint," containing, among other things, "a statement of the facts enumerated in section one" of the act, "a particular description of such real property and a specification of the estate, title or interest of the plaintiff therein." Section 5 provides for filing with the complaint an affidavit of the plaintiff, fully and explicitly "setting forth and showing" certain things; among them being "the character of his estate, right, title, interest or claim in, and possession of the property, during what period the same has existed and from whom obtained." Section 15 of said act is as follows: "An executor, administrator or guardian, or other person holding the possession of property in the right of another, may maintain, as plaintiff, and may appear and defend in the action herein provided for."

In her verified complaint, plaintiff mentioned and described, by metes and bounds, five parcels of land in the city and county of San Francisco. Respecting three of these parcels, she alleged that she was "by herself in the actual and peaceable possession of" them, and "claimed an estate of inheritance in" them. She alleged similar estate of inheritance in the other lots, and averred that she was "by her tenants holding under her in the actual and peaceable possession of" them. Her affidavit contained the following statement: "That the character of her estate, right, title, interest, and claim in and possession of all those portions of the real property described in the complaint herein, and therein designated 'Parcel One,' 'Parcel Two,' and 'Parcel Three,' is a fee simple absolute." Respecting the first parcel the affidavit sets forth the fact that it was obtained by grant, bargain, and sale deed to herself and husband of equal undivided shares, on April 9, 1900, followed by her husband's gift deed to her, July 29, 1900. Then occurs the statement that "said estates, rights, titles, interests, and claims in and possession of said property * * * has existed since the dates of said two deeds." As to parcel 2, it is averred "that said estate," etc., "and possession of said property * * * has existed since the 21st day of April, A. D. 1903." This is followed by a recital that said interests and possession were obtained by a grant, bargain, and sale deed of that date from a certain named grantor, followed, July 7, 1903, by deed of gift from her husband. There is a later allegation that her possession had existed since the dates of the two deeds aforesaid. Of parcel 3, the affidavit alleges the distribution to plaintiff of a one-fourth interest from her mother's estate on a specified date, and the obtaining of the remaining interests in fee simple by certain deeds, giving the dates thereof, and contains the statement that "said estates, rights, titles, interests, and claims in and possession of said real property, designated 'Parcel Three,' have existed since the delivery of said deed from Gustave Paturel, the dates of said two deeds from Alexis Paturel and Emile Paturel, and of said decree of distribution." Of parcels 4 and 5, the affidavit contains the statement that plaintiff obtained an undivided one-fourth interest in each from the estate of her mother by a certain decree of distribution, giving the date, and regarding each parcel she alleges that "said estate, right, title, interest, and claim in and possession of said real property * * * has existed since the said date of said decree of distribution."

Respondent contends that the affidavit in a case of this kind must contain all the facts required by section 5 of the McEnerney act, and that plaintiff's affidavit does not comply with the statute, in that it does not set forth the character of Mrs. Soher's possession of the property. We do not think section 5 of the act requires the affidavit to show the "character" of the possession of the plaintiff. The requirement is that there shall be an affidavit filed, "setting forth and showing" certain things, among which is "the character of his estate, right, title, interest, or claim in, and possession of the property." The reasonable construction of this appears to us to be that the word "character" has no reference to the word "possession," and that the only requirement as to possession is that the affidavit shall show possession. This, we think, is sufficiently done by the affidavit before us to answer all objections on the ground of want of jurisdiction.

[2] It is asserted that plaintiff did not allege from whom she obtained possession. Her affidavit showed her interest in parcels 1, 2, and 3, to be fee simple absolute. Of parcels 4 and 5, she showed by her affidavit an undivided one-fourth interest in each of them, derived from her mother's estate, and alleged possession from the date of the decree of distribution of March 20, 1905. Here was certainly no ambiguity. In setting forth her interest in the two first-named parcels, she described in each instance her deeds, with their dates and the places, books, and pages of their recordation, and alleged that her possession had existed since their dates; and with reference to parcel 3 she followed the same plan, except the decree of distribution was included with the deeds in the averment of the date of her possession. At most, her failure to name the one of her grantors who actually placed her in possession and the exact date of such possession is an ambiguity which cannot be reached in this proceeding. At any rate, regarding these three parcels, she stated a title in fee which gave her the right to possession following the deed of latest date, and she averred possession from a time not later than the completion of her title in fee simple absolute. This was a sufficient compliance with the statute, which is "designed for the benefit of the defendants in enabling them, by verifying plaintiff's claim, to prevent fraud and safeguard their rights." Potrero Nuevo Land Co. v. All Persons, etc., 158 Cal. 735, 112 Pac. 303.

It follows that the demurrer of respondent to the petition herein should be overruled and a writ of mandate issue as prayed for, and it is so ordered.

ARNOLD v. CALIFORNIA STANDARD PORTLAND CEMENT CO.

(L. A. 2,773.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 472*)—OPINION EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action for injuries to an employé by an explosion of dynamite, the employer relied on contributory negligence, questions asked the employé as to whether, when he applied the battery for the discharge of several blasts of dynamite, he exercised the ordinary precaution were objectionable as calling for the opinion of the employé on the merits of the defense, which the jury must determine.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2189; Dec. Dig. § 472.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 481*)—OPINION EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action for injuries to an employé by the explosion of dynamite, the evidence showed that the employé, after attempting to explode several blasts of powder, cleaned out two holes in safety, and was injured by an explosion of dynamite while attempting to clean out the third hole, a witness could not properly give his opinion as to whether the employé acted in a reasonable way, in view of his understanding of the business.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—ERRONEOUS ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

Where, in an action for injuries to an employé, there was but slight evidence that the employé used due care, the error in admitting evidence of the opinion of the employé that he exercised the ordinary precautions, and in permitting a witness to state his conclusion that the employé acted in a reasonable way, was prejudicial to the employer, necessitating a new trial.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by Frank M. Arnold against the California Standard Portland Cement Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Horace S. Wilson and Le Roy M. Edwards, for appellant. F. B. Daley, Frank T. Bates, and Bates & Hodge, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Plaintiff sued to recover damages for personal injuries, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant.

The complaint alleges that defendant negligently furnished for plaintiff's use an unsafe, defective, and insufficient electric battery, in the use of which plaintiff was injured. He was engaged in exploding blasts of dynamite and powder for the defendant. At the time of the injury, it appears, they were blasting in beds of clay. Small holes would be drilled several feet into the clay, at the bottom of which heavy charges of black powder would be exploded to break up the clay, so that it could be shoveled up and carried away. As a part of the process, it was necessary first to enlarge these holes at the bottom, so that they would hold enough of the black powder to lift the dirt. This process of enlargement was called "springing the holes." It was done by putting a small charge of dynamite at the bottom of the hole, connecting it by an "exploder" and wires with an electric battery a safe distance away, tamping about eight inches of dirt in around the wires immediately above the exploder, and then exploding the dynamite by means of an electric charge through the wires from the battery to the exploder. The result would be that the dirt tamped in would resist the upward force of the explosion, which would exhaust itself in making the hole larger at the bottom, ready for the black powder. Nine holes had been drilled, and plaintiff was engaged in "springing" them. After the small dynamite charge was exploded, it was his duty to remove the earth that had been tamped in, thus clearing the hole, so that the black powder could be let down to the enlarged space at the bottom. While he was removing this earth from one of these holes, the charge exploded, inflicting the injuries complained of.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The plaintiff first connected the entire nine holes in series, and attempted to explode all of them at once by a single electric shock from the battery. He found that the first hole had blown out—that is, the blast had escaped from the top—because of defective tamping. It could not be ascertained from the surface appearances of the holes which had not thus blown out whether the blast had been set off or not; for, if the tamping had been properly done, the force of the explosion would be spent below the tamping, in springing out the sides of the hole, producing no effect at the surface. Fearing that some of the other blasts had not exploded, he then connected each separately with the battery, and tried them singly with the electricity. None of them upon this trial gave any indication of an explosion. Assuming from this that the first shock from the battery had set off all the charges, he proceeded to clean the holes to receive the black powder. In the third hole the dynamite had not been set off by the battery, and in cleaning it out he exploded the charge, inflicting the injuries alleged. There is evidence that this battery had been in use for several months, and that it sometimes failed to discharge a blast, even when connected with a single hole. Plaintiff had been at work there for a considerable time before the injury, and had often seen this battery. Its defects were well known to the other men in the same service, but there is no conclusive evidence that they were known to the plaintiff. The circumstances also tend to show that the plaintiff knew that a battery would sometimes fail to set off a blast, but the evidence is conflicting on that point. He testified that he proceeded to clean the hole precisely as if there were no dynamite in it, taking no care to avoid an explosion in case there was. The questions whether he used due care in failing to take such precautions as were possible to that end, and in assuming that the blasts were exploded, and whether the failure to explode was due to the weakness of the battery or to his own neglect in failing to make proper connections between the dynamite and the battery, are very close ones, in view of all the evidence in the case. We are not satisfied that it is insufficient to sustain the verdict. But, considering its weakness, it is obvious that the admission of any incompetent evidence on the subject must be deemed to have been prejudicial to the defendant. Evidence of that character was admitted, over the defendant's objection, and for that reason we think the order denying a new trial was erroneous.

[1] The plaintiff testified that he had been engaged in the business of exploding blasts of powder and dynamite by means of batteries for 3½ years before his injury. He was asked by his own counsel the following question: "At the time you sprung those holes—that is, applied the battery the second time to the four or five holes which you tested—did you use, from your experience in the use of the battery and springing of those holes, the usual, ordinary, and customary precaution?" "At the time, considering your long experience in dealing with a battery, did you use all customary and necessary and usual precaution to see that those wires were connected?" Objections that these questions were incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial and called for the conclusions of the witness were overruled, and he answered both questions in the affirmative. These rulings were erroneous. One of the defenses was contributory negligence. The question whether or not the plaintiff had used proper care and caution in doing his preparatory work was one for the determination of the jury from all the evidence. It was not a question upon which the opinions of expert witnesses are allowable. The questions called for the decision of the plaintiff as to the merits of the defense.

[2, 3] Another witness for the plaintiff was permitted to state that if, after trying the battery the second time on the holes separately, one of them should be cleaned out, and it was found that the charge in that hole had gone off properly, then, in such case, "the conclusion of a reasonable man who understood his business, and acting in a reasonable way," would be that the next hole, and each of the others, had also been exploded by the battery. This also was witness should have been confined to the testimony should have been excluded. The witness should have been confined to the facts, the usual method of operations in such work, and the things necessary to be done to avoid danger. Even if we admit that the plaintiff was held only to the standard suggested—the care required of a reasonable man who understood the work—nevertheless it was for the jury, and not the witness, to apply the standard and decide from the evidence what a reasonable man should have done or concluded from the facts before him. In view of the slight margin of evidence in favor of the proposition that the plaintiff used due care in connecting the wires and cleaning out the holes, we cannot say that this evidence was without prejudice to the defendant.

The judgment and order are reversed.

LAVINBURG v. SCHWALBE et al.

(S. F. 5,665.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 13, 1911.)

1. Wills (§ 166*)—Undue Influence—Sufficiency of Evidence.

Evidence held not to show that a will was made through the undue influence of testator's daughter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 421–437; Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

2. Wills (§ 166*)—Undue Influence—Sufficiency of Evidence.

While undue influence may be shown by circumstantial evidence, it must amount to more than a mere suspicion, and be proof of circumstances which are inconsistent with the fact that the will was the spontaneous act of testator.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 421–437; Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

3. Wills (§ 288*)—Validity—Presumption.

The presumption in a will contest is in favor of the will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 651; Dec. Dig. § 288.*]

4. Wills (§ 166*)—Undue Influence—Evidence.

That a will was unnatural, in that it did not give a son and daughter that share of the property which they were entitled to expect, does not of itself show undue influence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 421–437; Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

5. Wills (§ 163*)—Undue Influence—Evidence—Fiduciary Relation.

The existence of a confidential relation between testator and the principal beneficiary will not of itself raise the presumption of undue influence.

6. Evidence (§ 222*)—Declarations—Will Contest.

In a will contest by a son against testator's daughters, who were the residuary and principal legatees, another daughter who received only a small sum testified that the month after their father's death she had a conversation with one of the residuary legatees in the absence of the other residuary legatee, in which she charged that such legatee made their father make the will, to which the latter replied, "Of course, wouldn't you have done the same thing if you could?" and evidence was also admitted of such residuary legatee's boast that she could "handle" her father like a child. Held, that the evidence was not admissible; such declarations not having been made in the presence of the other residuary legatee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 768–800, 803–806; Dec. Dig. § 222;* Wills, Cent. Dig. § 410.]

7. Wills (§ 81*)—Will Contest—Invalidating in Part.

A will cannot be invalidated as to one legatee and upheld as to the others.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 201, 202; Dec. Dig. § 81.*]

8. Wills (§ 165*) — Will Contest—Admission of Evidence—Affection for Children.

Declarations tending to show testator's affection for his son, to whom he only gave a small sum, are admissible in evidence in a will contest to show testator's friendliness to one of his heirs, but it is error not to limit them to that purpose.

9. Wills (§ 164*)—Contest—Admission of Evidence—Undue Influence.

In a will contest on the ground of undue influence, in which contestant claimed that testator's marital troubles had so affected his mind that he was easily influenced by the daughter, who was claimed to have influenced him in making the will, evidence as to his unhappy married life, showing that he was greatly distressed by his wife's divorce, was admissible.

10. Wills (§ 164*)—Will Contest—Admission of Evidence.

In a contest by testator's son to set aside a will for undue influence, evidence was not admissible for contestant, in rebuttal of contestee's claim that testator believed his son to be wealthy on account of his display of wealth, that contestant was, in fact, poor, though he could deny that he boasted of or displayed any wealth.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thos. F. Graham, Judge.

Proceedings by Leon Eleazar Lavinburg, contestant, against Sarah Schwalbe, individually and as executrix, and another to contest the will of Samuel L. Lavinburg. From orders denying motions to set aside a verdict for contestant, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Heller, Powers & Ehrman, Marcel E. Cerf, J. E. Harper, and John R. Tyrrell, for appellants. J. J. Dunne, H. H. Davis, and Jerome H. Kann, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Jessie Bloom and Sarah Schwalbe, two of the legatees under the will of Samuel L. Lavinburg, deceased, appeal from the orders denying their motions to vacate the verdict of the jury rendered in favor of Leon E. Lavinburg in a contest of said will. Contestant is a brother of appellants and also a legatee under his father's will.

By the terms of the will of Samuel L. Lavinburg legacies were provided as follows: To the son Leon L., the contestant, $500; to Cecilia Werthman, a daughter, $500; to Jane Ruben, a daughter, $5,000; and the residue in equal parts to Sarah Schwalbe and Jessie Bloom, daughters. Sarah Schwalbe and California Safe Deposit & Trust Company were nominated as executrix and executor, respectively, but, the latter failing to qualify, Mrs. Schwalbe was appointed and letters testamentary issued.

The contestant did not depend upon any direct showing that the testamentary act of Samuel L. Lavinburg was influenced by Sarah Schwalbe, but, according to the theory of the contest, all of the facts and circumstances surrounding the acts of the testator in making his will led to the inevitable conclusion that it must have been, not the spontaneous act of Lavinburg, but the product of his daughter Sarah's malign influence over him. The essential facts as shown at the trial were as follows: Lavinburg was formerly a resident of England, living first at London and afterward at Brighton. While residing in the latter city in 1884 he became involved in financial troubles, and wrote a letter to his son who had gone to Canada to live, asking the latter (the contestant here) to return to Brighton, and to assist in the settling of the father's affairs. In response to this letter Leon returned to Brighton, contributed between $400 and $500 to the father's account, helped the latter in the settlement of his affairs, and in 1885 accompanied the family to San Francisco, where his father and mother remained, but where he stayed only a short time, returning to the Middle West and settling finally in Chicago, where he resided until 1906, when he returned to San Francisco. Here he has resided ever since. It was shown at the trial that a very warm affection existed between the father and his only son. On the latter's return from Canada to Brighton, the father kissed him and exclaimed, "Oh, Leon, Leon, you have saved me by coming home." The letters of the father to the son, while not frequent, were of most affectionate tenor. When Leon returned to San Francisco in October, 1906, he was met at the station by his sister Mrs. Schwalbe, who conducted him to the home of Mrs. Bloom, another sister, where his father then resided. Again he was received by his father with many demonstrations of love, and during the next few days he and his father were together almost constantly. Without going into the testimony in detail it is sufficient to say that it indicated great affection upon the part of testator for his son. After the family arrived in San Francisco the daughters married. One of them, Mrs. Jessie Bloom, resided for some years in Seattle, but later returned to San Francisco. Lavinburg's wife died in 1892, and soon afterwards he went to live with his daughter Mrs. Cecilia Werthman, but, owing to some quarrel, he sought other quarters. In 1904 there was another disagreement between Mr. Lavinburg and the Werthmans, which apparently was never settled prior to his death at Christmas, 1907. Meanwhile his will was executed on January 5, 1905.

There was abundant evidence of testator's love for his daughter Mrs. Sarah Schwalbe, who was found by the jury's verdict to be guilty of influencing him unduly in the making of his will. Dr. Levy, who had been his pastor and friend for 20 years, testified: "He was a man of very strong will power and determination. He told me he would dispose of his property in his own way, and that Mrs. Schwalbe had been more kind to him than the rest of the members of his family." Mr. D. R. Wilson, a member of the San Francisco Stock and Bond Exchange, who knew Lavinburg very intimately, gave the following testimony regarding testator's affection for his daughter, Sarah Schwalbe: "He said that he had the utmost confidence in Mrs. Schwalbe; that she had always treated him with filial respect; that he had a great deal of regard and trust in her." Similar testimony was given by Dr. Mann, Mr. Thomas Craig, Mr. Robert F. Parsons, and Miss Celia Caro.

In 1898 Lavinburg married. This union proved to be a very unhappy one, and in 1904 his wife instituted divorce proceedings on the ground of extreme cruelty. The usual order for costs and counsel fees pendente lite was made and an order was issued to him and to the bank which held custody of his property restraining them from disposing of any of it. Lavinburg, who was unquestionably most averse to parting with any of his money, was greatly disturbed by the prospect of having to support his wife after a divorce. A settlement was finally reached, and Mrs. Lavinburg went back to live with her husband on December 20, 1904. By the terms of the agreement with his wife, Lavinburg placed $6,000 worth of bonds in trust with the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company to provide an income of $25 a month for her. She remained with him but a short time after the reconciliation, however. She testified that on the morning of January 2, 1905, her husband called her names and quarreled with her without occasion. Afterwards she went out to do some shopping, and on her return Mr. Lavinburg and Mrs. Schwalbe were talking together in the dining room. She overheard the latter say: "I can't stand that any longer. You have to go and see a lawyer and make an end of that." Thereupon Mrs. Lavinburg left the house and never again lived with her husband, although in 1906 Mrs. Schwalbe urged her to return saying: "You know I can make father do better for you if you want to go back."

On January 3, 1905, the day after his wife's departure, Lavinburg and his daughter Sarah Schwalbe, who had remained at his house during the previous night, went to the San Francisco Savings Union, where Mr. Lavinburg conferred with Mr. Robert M. Welch, the cashier of that bank. He told Mr. Welch that he had married a young woman, that divorce proceedings were pending, and that he had made a settlement with his wife, but feared further attacks by her upon his fortune, as she knew he was worth about $50,000. He desired to part with his title to certain stocks and bonds deposited with the bank to secure an indebtedness. Finally, upon the suggestion of Mr. Welch, Lavinburg made a bill of sale to Mrs. Schwalbe of more than $50,000 worth of securities, and she became substituted as the bank's debtor in her father's place for approximately $30,000. She also placed three certain orders with the bank directing that the securities were to be released to her father as payment of their market value might be made by him; that on payment of the balance due on her note the securities were to be delivered to him; and that he was to collect all dividends on the pledged stocks and bonds. The trust relation thus created was greatly relied on as tending to establish contestant's case, and we shall have more to say of it later. After the transaction at the bank on January 3, 1905, according to the testimony of Mrs. Schwalbe, she said to her father that he had placed a great responsibility upon her, and that he would better make some paper to show what he would wish her to do in case of his death. He replied, "Well, after a while I will make a will," and they parted. She also testified that two weeks later he told her that she and the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company were the "executors" of his will, but that he never revealed its contents to her until after the great fire of April, 1906. After leaving Mrs. Lavinburg on January 3, 1905, and probably on the same day, Mr. Lavinburg went alone to the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company's place of business, and was referred to Mr. Cerf as a lawyer who would properly draft a will for him. He went alone to Mr. Cerf's office. Mr. Cerf was engaged upon some important work, and suggested that while Lavinburg was waiting for him to complete the task at hand the time might be profitably employed in drawing a memorandum of the matters which he wished to incorporate in his will. This was done, and the memorandum in Lavinburg's handwriting, which was introduced in evidence, contained practically the provisions which were afterwards incorporated in the will. After considerable discussion at Mr. Cerf's office Mr. Lavinburg departed. Two days later he returned alone and executed the will, Mr. Cerf and Mr. Norris acting as witnesses, and the document, at Mr. Lavinburg's special request, remained in Mr. Cerf's custody until the testator's death. Mrs. Schwalbe never saw it until after that event. There was not only the testimony of the witnesses to the will that on January 5, 1905, Lavinburg was of sound and disposing mind, but a number of intimate friends testified that he was a man of iron resolution with reference to his own affairs, who was not easily influenced by any one.

Contestant introduced evidence to the effect that Mrs. Schwalbe had a general influence over her father, and was wont to boast of it. His contention seems to be that the will was unnatural; that Mrs. Schwalbe had a great influence over her father; that at a time when he was greatly perturbed over his marital difficulties she suggested that he make a will; that at the time she made such suggestion she was his trustee, holding his possessions, as counsel for contestant phrase it, "in the hollow of her hand"; that this trust relation, coupled with other facts and circumstances, created a presumption of undue influence; that she accompanied her father to the bank on January 3, 1905, after the opportunity of influencing him accorded by her remaining at his home during the preceding night; and that her influence remained with him and overpowered his volition during the subsequent period of preparation and execution of his last will.

[1] We think that the circumstances shown do not justify the conclusion reached by the jury. The verdict must have been influenced by the idea in the minds of the jurors that the will was unnatural and by certain matters erroneously admitted in evidence which we shall discuss later. Testator was a man who, though of an age somewhere between 74 and 80 years, was abundantly able to conduct his affairs, and who did manage them with ability and thrift. There was some conflict of evidence regarding his bodily vigor at the time the will was executed, but there is no contention that he was not mentally competent. This man of business went alone to the office of an attorney; without suggestion or assistance drew the memorandum of his wishes respecting the disposition of his property by will; returned according to appointment; and executed that instrument. For almost three years thereafter he mingled with his friends, attended to his affairs, met and associated with his son who returned after an absence of 20 years, and yet he made no complaint of his daughter's dominion over him, nor any effort to free himself from that malign charm. It requires better evidence than this record presents to set aside an act done apparently with deliberation and executed with the solemn formality required by law.

[2, 3] To the facts shown by the record before us this language from the opinion in Re McDevitt, 95 Cal. 33, 30 Pac. 106, seems thoroughly applicable: "Evidence must be produced that pressure was brought to bear directly upon the testamentary act; but this evidence itself need not be direct. Circumstantial evidence is sufficient. It must, however, do more than raise a suspicion. It must amount to proof, and such evidence has the force of proof only when circumstances are proven which are inconsistent with the claim that the will was the spontaneous act of the alleged testator. I think there is nothing beyond suspicion shown here. There is no proof. Circumstances have been proven which accord with the theory of undue influence, none of which are inconsistent with the hypothesis that the will was the free act of an intelligent mind. This does not amount to proof. And many circumstances are shown which are wholly inconsistent with the hypothesis of undue influence. And the presumption of law, in the absence of all proof, in a contest, is in favor of the will." See also In re Langford, 108 Cal. 622, 41 Pac. 701; Estate of Kendrick, 130 Cal. 368, 62 Pac. 605; Estate of Nelson, 132 Cal. 194, 64 Pac. 294; Estate of Carithers, 156 Cal. 428, 105 Pac. 127.

[4] Assuming that the will was an unnatural one which cut off the son and one daughter from that share of the property which they were entitled to expect, that alone cannot avail to sustain the verdict finding undue influence; and in this connection it is well to remember that the testator was not upon good terms with Mrs. Werthman when the will was drawn.

It is insisted by respondent's counsel that, under the circumstances of this case, undue influence is presumed from the confidential relations existing between Mrs. Schwalbe and her father.

[5] The court properly instructed the jury that the existence of a confidential relation between the testator and this beneficiary was not enough, taken alone, to raise a presumption of undue influence. While there was such a relation existing between Mrs. Schwalbe and her father, it was more nominal than real, because, as we have seen, Mr. Lavinburg up to the time of his death held complete control over his property. But, giving to the circumstances of the trust relation all possible weight, it amounts to nothing in view of the fact that the testator had the independent advice of an attorney and acted in the absence of his trustee in the preparation and signing of his will. This is not a case where advantage was taken of a sick man to whom others had no access by one standing with reference to him in a relation of confidence and trust. It is rather the case of a shrewd, stubborn business man who acted after obtaining professional legal advice. This case is similar in several essential particulars to Estate of Higgins, 156 Cal. 259, 104 Pac. 8. That was a case in which the testator was an aged, feeble man, and the proponent a favorite son, who stood in a confidential relation to him. This son had urged the father to make a will. After referring to the presumption arising from the existence of confidential relations, Mr. Justice Sloss, speaking for the court, said: "This presumption was fully met and overthrown by the uncontradicted evidence showing the actual circumstances surrounding the preparation and execution of the will. Estate of Morey, 147 Cal. 495 [82 Pac. 57]. It was shown that the testator, before executing his will, had consulted with an attorney, who visited him for that purpose. At this interview no member of his family, except his wife, was present. The nature and extent of a surviving wife's interest in community property was explained to the testator, who said that one-half of the estate (all of which he declared to be community property) would be sufficient provision for Mrs. Higgins. Concerning the disposition of the other half, he said he did not desire to give his daughter an equal share. He first spoke of giving her $1,500, but before the close of the interview mentioned the sum of $2,500. He stated that he did not want Mr. Chick, his daughter's husband, to handle any considerable amount of his property. In the afternoon of the same day, the attorney, accompanied by his son, returned with a draft for the proposed will. In the absence of the proponent, the testator was asked for his decision regarding the gift to his daughter. He expressed a thought of raising it to $3,500. The attorney then suggested a division into shares, instead of a cash legacy. This, after some consideration, was approved by the testator, and he fixed upon the proportions of one-sixth to Mrs. Chick, two-sixths to Albert, and three-sixths to Herbert. Blanks which had been left in the draft were filled accordingly, and the will was executed. Its other provisions, such as appointment of executor, etc., followed the direction of the testator. In the face of this showing, which we have set forth in mere outline, there is no basis for the claim that the will was secured to be made by the undue influence of proponent." In the later case of In re Ricks, 117 Pac. 536, the rule is thus stated by Mr. Justice Lorigan: "But no warrant is given to a jury to find that undue influence was exerted at the time the will was made from proof merely of such relation alone. Undoubtedly the relation between respondent and his mother was affectionate and confidential, and that he would have a general influence over his mother proceeding from such relation. But the existence of such relation and this general influence raises no presumption that undue advantage was taken of it by respondent. There is no legal suspicion of undue influence arising from the existence of such a relationship, which imposes upon the son the necessity, when a will in his favor is attacked, of assuming the burden of proof that he had not unduly influenced his mother in making her will. The confidential relation and the opportunity afforded therefrom to exercise undue influence may, of course, always be taken into consideration with other evidence, when the question of undue influence is in issue. But the relation itself and opportunity are not sufficient alone to warrant a finding that undue influence was actually exerted. Proof merely that confidential relations existed between a testator and the main beneficiary under his will is not sufficient to destroy its validity, but there must be some proof, in addition to the relation of facts or circumstances showing the use of that relation at the time the will was made overcoming the free will and desire of the testator, in order to invalidate the testament."

[6] Appellants call our attention to the admission of certain testimony regarding the declarations of one residuary legatee not made in the presence of the other. There were several instances of this sort of testimony, but it will be sufficient to refer to a few only. Mrs. Werthman related a conversation which she said occurred in Oakland in the month of April following her father's death. She testified that on that occasion she said to Mrs. Schwalbe, "You made father make that will, you know you did," to which, as she testified, Mrs. Schwalbe replied, "Of course, wouldn't you have done the same thing if you could?" Respondent contends that this evidence went in without objection, but an examination of the record shows that, as soon as any conversation with Mrs. Schwalbe was called for in a question to Mrs. Werthman, counsel raised the specific objection that a declaration of one legatee made without the presence of the others was hearsay, and not binding upon them. All the rest of Mrs. Werthman's testimony went in subject, by stipulation, to the same objection and exception. This was clearly error under the rulings of this court in Estate of Dolbeer, 149 Cal. 245, 86 Pac. 695; Estate of Dolbeer, 153 Cal. 662, 96 Pac. 266. The same error was committed by the court in admitting evidence of Mrs. Schwalbe's boasts that she could "handle," her father and "turn him around in five minutes like a child," and in allowing certain papers in the probate proceedings to be offered as written admissions of Sarah Schwalbe. In allowing one of these documents to be received in evidence the court said: "It will not be binding against her [meaning Mrs. Bloom], but binding against Mrs. Schwalbe."

[7] Evidently the court did not have in mind the rule announced in Estate of Dolbeer, supra, Estate of Freud, 73 Cal. 556, 15 Pac. 135, and Estate of Pforr, 144 Cal. 121, 77 Pac. 825, that a will cannot be invalidated as against one legatee and upheld with respect to others. This misconception led to the erroneous admission of numerous declarations of Mrs. Schwalbe which we need not review with greater particularity.

[8] The court also admitted declarations made before and after the execution of the will tending to show the affection of Lavinburg for his son, Leon. Such declarations, when there is no issue of unsoundness of mind, are properly admitted if limited by the court in suitable instructions to their function of showing friendliness of a testator to one of his heirs, but appellants contend that error was committed by the court in failing to limit their application. We think this contention must be sustained. See Estate of Ricks, 117 Pac. 532, and cases there cited.

[9] Appellants also complain of the introduction of evidence by the contestant revealing the unhappy married life of the testator and his second wife, but it was the theory of the contestant that these marital troubles so worked upon the sensibilities of Lavinburg as to make him an easy prey to the machinations of his daughter Sarah. The evidence did show that he was greatly distressed by the divorce case and the incidents connected with it. If the engagement of respondent to show that Mrs. Schwalbe took advantage of her father's distress had been successfully accomplished, the evidence of the domestic woes of the old man would have been material. The court properly admitted it in support of the theory of the contestant.

Appellants also call our attention to the court's refusal to permit the former wife of the testator to answer certain questions with reference to his mental condition at about the time of the execution of the will. The record shows, however, that she testified upon direct examination regarding her former husband's mental condition as favorably to appellants as they could possibly desire. The court properly sustained an objection to an interrogatory on cross-examination by which her opinion was sought upon the question whether or not Lavinburg was easily influenced. The question was not pertinent to anything about which she had spoken on her direct examination.

[10] Respondent was permitted to introduce evidence regarding his financial condition. If this has been done as a part of his case in chief, respondent concedes that it would have been serious error (Estate of Kaufman, 117 Cal. 296, 49 Pac. 192, 59 Am. St. Rep. 179), but proof of his poverty he insists was properly allowed in rebuttal of the showing made by appellants that the testator believed his son Leon to be a wealthy man by reason of certain boastings and exhibitions of ready money. He denied on the witness stand that he had ever made any such pretenses of wealth to his father. This evidence, of course, was properly allowed, but, as the material inquiry related to the father's belief on the subject of his son's wealth and not to the fact of the latter's wealth or poverty, the principle of the Kaufman case was applicable, and the evidence that Leon Lavinburg was really a poor man was improperly allowed.

Certain instructions are criticised by appellants, but we think that these criticisms are for the most part unfounded. Viewed in its entirety the charge to the jury fully and fairly stated the law.

The orders from which appellants prosecute their appeal are reversed.

PEOPLE v. SCHAFER. (Cr. 1,708.)

1. Burglary (§ 20*)—Information—Sufficiency.

Under Pen. Code, § 459, providing that every person who shall enter any house, etc., with intent to commit grand or petit larceny therein, is guilty of burglary, an information charging that accused entered a portion of the plant of a tanning company known as the "Beam House" with intent to steal leather is a sufficient statement of the offense of burglary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Burglary, Cent. Dig. §§ 51–54; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

2. Criminal Law (§ 1166½*)—Appeal and Error—Harmless Error—Presumptions.

Where a challenge for cause was refused, the juror being peremptorily challenged, the refusal was harmless if it is not shown that the use of this peremptory challenge compelled accused to accept a juror unsatisfactory to him, though accused exhausted all of his peremptory challenges before the jury was selected.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3116–3117; Dec. Dig. § 1166½.*]

3. Criminal Law (§ 655*)—Trial—Remarks by Court.

Where a juror was challenged because he had stated that he knew a probable witness for the prosecution, and that he would believe him in preference to witnesses he did not know, the court's remark to counsel in refusing the challenge "that if you know a man, and he is perfectly satisfactory to you, you would naturally believe him before an unknown," was not objectionable, as it could not have prejudiced the minds of the jurors present.

4. Criminal Law (§ 351*)—Evidence.

A letter written by accused, who was incarcerated, asking another person to assist him in effecting an escape and stating that he was in a bad fix, is admissible in evidence as tending to show consciousness of guilt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 778–785; Dec. Dig. § 351.*]

5. Criminal Law (§ 1043*) — Appeal—Exceptions — Necessity of Specific Exceptions.

Where accused objected generally to the admission of the incriminatory letter, he cannot complain on appeal that isolated portions were inadmissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2654, 2655; Dec. Dig. § 1043.*]

6. Burglary (§ 41*) — Prosecutions — Evidence—Sufficiency.

In a prosecution for burglary, evidence held, under Pen. Code, §§ 460, 463, making a burglary committed between sunset and sunrise an offense in the first degree, sufficient to show burglary in the first degree.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Burglary, Cent. Dig. § 98; Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

7. Criminal Law (§ 1147*)—Appeal—Sentence—Discretion of Court.

Pen. Code, § 461, making burglary in the first degree punishable by imprisonment for not less than 1 nor more than 15 years, an accused cannot complain that a sentence of 10 years is an abuse of the trial court's discretion.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; A. J. Buckles, Judge.

William Schafer was convicted of burglary, and appeals. Affirmed.

Louis Ferrari, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

ANGELLOTTI, J. The defendant was convicted of burglary in the first degree, and appealed from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The appeal was transferred to this court for determination after decision by the District Court of Appeal for the Third District, affirming such judgment and order.

[1] 1. It is urged that the information does not state a public offense. After accusing defendant and one Daniel McFadden of the crime of "burglary, committed as follows," it proceeds: "The said Daniel McFadden and William Schafer, on or about the 14th day of October, A. D. nineteen hundred and ten, at the said county of Solano, state of California, * * * at and in the city of Vallejo then and there willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and burglariously did enter that certain portion and part of the plant, premises and building of the Santa Rosa-Vallejo Tanning Company, a corporation, said portion and part of said plant, building and premises being designated, called and known as the 'Beam House,' with the felonious and burglarious intent * * * then and there * * * at and in said 'Beam House' to commit the crime of larceny, contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute," etc. The claim is that the information does not allege that the defendants entered any place as to which burglary may be committed under our statute. The statute (section 459, Pen. Code) provides that "every person who enters any house, room, apartment, shop, warehouse, store, mill, barn, stable, outhouse, or other building, tent, vessel, or railroad car, with intent to commit grand or petit larceny, or any felony, is guilty of burglary." No demurrer was interposed to this information, and there is no pretense that the defendant was not fully advised thereby as to the precise charge against him. His claim, after trial and conviction, simply is that it so absolutely fails to show the offense of burglary that it cannot serve as sufficient support for the conviction and judgment. While the information, as said by the District Court of Appeal, is "open to some criticism," and contains more words than necessary, we think it substantially alleges an unlawful entry of a house of the tanning company, with intent therein to commit grand larceny. No other construction could reasonably be given to the language used. The qualifying word "beam" used in the information does not detract from the effect of the word "house," which denotes one of the structures named in section 459 of the Penal Code. Substantially the information alleged that the defendants unlawfully entered the "Beam House" of the tanning company, with intent therein to commit larceny. It thus sufficiently stated a public offense to support a judgment.

[2] 2. It is claimed that the trial court erred in disallowing a challenge for cause interposed to juror William Fraser on the ground of actual bias. It is unnecessary to determine whether there was any error in this ruling. Mr. Fraser was subsequently peremptorily challenged by the defendant, and did not serve as one of the jurors. While the record shows that the defendant did subsequently exhaust his 10 peremptory challenges, it does not appear that he had occasion or desire to use an additional peremptory challenge, or that each and all of the 12 jurors finally accepted and sworn were not entirely satisfactory to him. All that the record shows in this connection is the examination of Mr. Fraser and the proceedings and ruling upon the challenge for cause interposed to him, and the fact that the defendant used 10 peremptory challenges, including that used on Mr. Fraser. This is not enough to warrant reversal for error in the ruling on the challenge for cause to Mr. Fraser. It is entirely consistent with the record that the 12 jurors who actually tried the case were absolutely satisfactory to defendant, and that he desired all of them to serve, and would not have excused any one of them if he had been given the opportunity. After judgment, the contrary should not be presumed. It was said in People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 196, 48 Pac. 78: "Thompson on Trials, § 120, thus declares the principle: 'It is a rule of paramount importance that errors committed in overruling challenges for cause are not grounds of reversal, unless it be shown an objectionable juror was forced upon the challenging party after he had exhausted his peremptory challenges. If his peremptory challenges remain unexhausted, so that he might have excluded the objectionable juror by that means, he has no ground of complaint.' The rule above stated finds overwhelming support from the authorities." It is true that in People v. Durrant, supra, the defendant had not exhausted his peremptory challenges when the jury was completed, but the fact that he does exhaust them does not preclude the application of the rule above quoted. The important thing is that it does not appear that an objectionable juror was forced upon the defendant. This rule was applied by the Supreme Court of Nevada in State v. Raymond, 11 Nev. 98, where the court said: "In Fleeson v. Savage Silver Mining Company [3 Nev. 157], the Supreme Court of this state said that 'the rules governing the impaneling of juries, the introduction of evidence, and the general conduct of trials are but the means by which such right is to be obtained,' and that, if it appeared 'that a departure from them did not defeat or affect the ultimate object of the trial, it would be a mockery of justice to set aside a judgment, otherwise proper and regular, because of such departure.' And it was there decided that, if a juror is challenged for cause, that challenge is overruled, and he is then challenged peremptorily, there does not necessarily arise any inference that the challenging party is thereby injured; that an injury could only arise in case the challenging party was compelled to exhaust all his peremptory challenges, and afterward have an objectionable juror placed on the panel for the want of another challenge. This general principle to which we adhere has been frequently decided in both civil and criminal cases." In People v. Riggins, 112 Pac. 862, relied upon by defendant, the opinion states, not only that the defendant exhausted all his peremptory challenges, but that by reason of the rulings of the court he was forced to accept McKeen, a juror objectionable to him and challenged for cause by him, and also that he asked the privilege of challenging McKeen peremptorily, and that his request was denied.

[3] 3. Complaint is made of a remark made by the trial court in a discussion with defendant's counsel as to the merits of the challenge interposed to Mr. Fraser, before the ruling thereon. Fraser had testified that he knew Mr. Johnson, a probable witness for the state, and, on being asked whether in view of his acquaintance with him he would believe him in preference to another witness whom he did not know, answered that he would. Counsel then challenged the juror for cause, whereupon the court said: "Not on that. That is the principle observed by every one. If you know a man and he is perfectly satisfactory to you, and if you don't know the other man testifying, you would naturally believe him first." The claim appears to be that this remark of the court was in effect an instruction to the jury that they must believe the men they knew and mistrust the men they did not know. Of course, what the court said was not by way of instruction to the jury at all, and could not have been considered by any juror as such, but was simply a remark to counsel. The court's instructions to the jury were given later, and were so fair that absolutely no complaint is made concerning them on this appeal. The claim that the remark was of such a character as to operate to defendant's prejudice in the minds of such jurors as may have been present in the courtroom at the time appears to us to be utterly without basis. Evidently counsel for defendant perceived nothing prejudicial in the remark at the time it was made, for no objection or exception was then made to the same, and nothing was said in regard thereto until the case reached the appellate court.

[4, 5] 4. A letter written by defendant while he was in the county jail awaiting trial was admitted in evidence over his objection. As to this ruling the District Court of Appeal said: "A letter written by appellant in the county jail was admitted over his objection. It was delivered to the jailer by one Edwin Hines, 'a trusty,' two or three days before the latter's term of imprisonment had expired. Hines was not a witness in the case—presumably for the reason that he could not be found. The letter, however, was produced by the jailer with the foregoing explanation, and it was clearly shown to be in the handwriting of appellant. The superscription was, 'Friend Ed,' and a portion of the letter was as follows: 'Hello Ed. Now Ed, can I depend on you Tuesday night? Now Ed don't disappoint me when the lights go out. Be here with the steel saw. I guess one steel saw will do the work. I can work in here in the daytime, two bars inside and one outside. The bar outside I can get out in two hours. It is a snap.' Among additional things the letter contained this declaration: 'We are in a hell of a hole, you know that.' We can see no error in the ruling of the court admitting the letter in evidence. It contained written declarations by appellant of his purpose and intention to escape from jail if possible, and also that which might be reasonably construed as an admission of his guilt. If similar oral statements had been made by appellant, testimony concerning them could certainly be received. That he reduced them to writing makes them no less admissible. They are received as tending to reveal a consciousness of guilt, and the fact that appellant was not furnished the saw, and therefore he made no attempt to carry his purpose into execution, does not affect the question. Appellant complains that certain portions of the letter should not have been admitted, but he made no such objection in the court below; his opposition being to the letter as a whole, and it is too late to make the point now."

No objection to this portion of the opinion of the appellate court has been made in this court. It appears to us to correctly dispose of the claim made by defendant's counsel that the court erred in admitting the letter, and we adopt the same as a portion of this opinion.

[6] 5. It is urged that the evidence was insufficient to sustain a verdict of guilty of burglary of the first degree, which is burglary committed during the period "between sunset and sunrise." Pen. Code, §§ 460, 463. There is no foundation in the record for any such claim. The evidence is without dispute to the effect that the burglary was committed between 5 o'clock p. m. of the afternoon of October 13, 1910, and some time prior to 7 o'clock a. m. of October 14, 1910; that it had not been committed when Johnson left the tannery at 5 p. m. on October 13th, leaving the place unoccupied by any one; and that it had been committed when he returned some time before 7 a. m. the next morning. The parties committing the burglary took from the house entered by them hides weighing at least 1,400 pounds and loaded them on a wagon brought to the tannery for the purpose. Added to the almost necessary inference that this was not accomplished either in the short period between 5 p. m. and sunset on October 13th, or in the short period between sunrise and a few minutes before 7 a. m. on October 14th, is the testimony of a witness to the effect that he saw Schafer and his codefendant about 2:30 a. m. on the morning of October 14th about 3½ miles north of Vallejo, driving a single horse attached to a wagon, headed north (going from Vallejo), and that the horse was wringing wet.

[7] 6. It is urged that the court abused its discretion in sentencing the defendant to 10 years imprisonment in the state prison. The punishment awarded may appear somewhat severe, if, as is claimed, defendant had never before been convicted of any public offense, in view of the fact that the building entered was uninhabited and the property stolen was valued at something less than $130. But in this state the determination of the trial court as to the penalty to be adjudged on conviction of a public offense is conclusive upon all appellate courts, provided the court adjudges a penalty which is authorized by the statutes of the state. Section 461, Penal Code, makes burglary of the first degree punishable by imprisonment in the state prison "for not less than one nor more than fifteen years." As the trial court confined itself within these limits, its action is beyond review by the courts on appeal.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Elias Beckman against William G. Waters and the San Miguel Island Company. From an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

J. F. Conroy and E. W. Squier, for appellant. W. S. Day and Henley C. Booth, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The controversy between the parties turns principally upon the effect of an instrument, in form a deed absolute, executed by the defendant Waters to plaintiff, Beckman, and purporting to convey certain real estate, to wit, the island of San Miguel, containing about 14,000 acres of land, and situated in the Pacific Ocean off the coast of Santa Barbara county. On the part of the plaintiff, the claim was and is that this instrument was in fact what it purported to be, while the defendants contended below, as they contend here, that the deed was intended to be and was a mortgage. The transaction included the execution and delivery by Waters to Beckman of a bill of sale of live stock and other personal property on the island, and the same question of mortgage or absolute transfer is presented with reference to this bill of sale.

The action was commenced on March 11, 1904. An amended complaint, filed on July 2, 1904, alleges that on or about the 1st day of February, 1892, Waters executed and delivered to plaintiff a deed conveying the said island of San Miguel, and on the same day executed and delivered to plaintiff a bill of sale transferring the personal property above referred to. It then alleges that on the same day (February 1, 1892) the plaintiff executed and delivered to Waters an instrument in writing, whereby, after reciting the conveyance by Waters to Beckman of all the right, title, and interest of Waters in the island of San Miguel and in the personal property thereon, it was agreed that Waters, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns "may at any time hereafter within three years from the date hereof, pay to me, my heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, the sum of $7,000, gold coin of the United States, with interest thereon at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, interest payable semi-annually, and upon the payment of the said sum and interest thereon in manner and time aforesaid I do * * * agree to reconvey by a good and sufficient quitclaim deed and bill of sale to said William G. Waters * * * all my right, title and interest in and to the above described real and personal property and the increase thereof, excepting such personal property or products from said island that are sold in the meantime, and in the event of such payment in the manner and at the time hereinabove set forth with the interest at the time it becomes due, then the said W. G. Waters shall be entitled to credit for the amount of such sales upon said indebtedness." It is alleged that on March 25, 1892, defendant Waters paid $1,000 on account of the purchase price of the property mentioned in said instrument; that at divers times prior to January 1, 1896, sums aggregating $1,500 were received in part payment of said purchase price as proceeds and profits accruing from the property on the island; and that on or about the 1st day of January, 1896, the plaintiff, at the request of Waters, granted said defendant further time for payment of the balance of the purchase price. Plaintiff, it is alleged, held possession of the real and personal property so transferred to him from the 1st day of February, 1892, to the 11th day of May, 1896, said island being in charge and control of a manager employed by plaintiff; said manager died on the 11th day of May, 1896, whereupon Waters assumed charge and control of said island, and he and those claiming under him have ever since held possession of said island and property as trustees for plaintiff. On March 8, 1897, Waters sold, conveyed, and assigned unto his codefendant, San Miguel Island Company, a corporation, his right to and interest in said island and the property thereon, and said corporation has ever since claimed an interest in said real and personal property. It is further alleged that Waters is the manager of the business of said corporation; that as such he has received rents, issues, and profits of said island for which he has not accounted; and that the defendants claim said island and the property thereon adversely to plaintiff. No payments, except as above stated, have been made under said agreement of purchase. Under these allegations the plaintiff prayed for the appointment of a receiver; that the defendants be required to account; that they be restrained from disposing of the real or personal property; and that upon the ascertainment of the amount due by Waters to plaintiff, under the agreement of February 1, 1892, the court order said amount to be paid to plaintiff, and in default of such payment that the interest of the defendants in the property be divested.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The defendants answered separately, denying most of the material allegations of the complaint and setting up affirmative defenses. The nature of the issues raised will appear with sufficient clearness from the following summary of the findings.

The court found that the possession of the property was never delivered to the plaintiff, and that plaintiff never held possession as owner or otherwise; that defendant Waters never held possession of said property as trustee for the plaintiff or otherwise than as owner; that, in fact, said deed and bill of sale and said written agreement, all dated February 1, 1892, were and were intended by the parties thereto to be a mortgage by Waters to Beckman to secure the payment to Beckman of the sum of $7,000 on or before three years from February 1, 1892, with interest thereon at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, payable semiannually. It was found that no extension of time had been granted by plaintiff to defendant, and that plaintiff's claim was barred by the statute of limitations.

As above suggested, the plaintiff's main contention on his motion for a new trial was that the evidence did not sustain the finding that the transaction in question constituted a mortgage. Of course, if the plaintiff's position was that of a mortgagee, there can be no question that his right to relief is barred by limitation. The debt secured by the mortgage was due three years from February 1, 1892. The finding that no extension was granted is not attacked, and, consequently, an action to foreclose the mortgage was barred at the expiration of four years from the maturity of the debt, or February 1, 1899. The last-mentioned date was more than five years before the commencement of the action.

[1, 2] It is thoroughly settled by the decisions of this court that an instrument purporting to convey the title to real or personal property may be shown to have been intended to operate as a mortgage. It has often been said that clear and convincing evidence is required to justify a court in finding that a deed which purports to convey the title to land in fee simple was intended to be a mortgage. But, as is said in Couts v. Winston, 153 Cal. 686, 96 Pac. 357, in which many earlier cases are cited: "Whether or not the evidence offered to change the ostensible character of the instrument is clear and convincing is a question for the trial court. * * * In such cases, as in others, the determination of that court in favor of either party upon conflicting or contradictory evidence is not open to review in this court." And similarly, in Wadleigh v. Phelps, 149 Cal. 627, 637, 87 Pac. 93, 98, it is said that this court "will not disturb the finding of the trial court to the effect that the deed is a mortgage, where there is substantial evidence warranting a clear and satisfactory conviction to that effect."

[3] In the case at bar, it appears that, before any of the transactions here involved, the defendant Waters and one Schilling had been jointly interested in the ownership of San Miguel Island and the personal property thereon. In December, 1890, Waters had purchased Schilling's interest, giving him therefor a promissory note for $7,000, secured by an instrument described in the record as a "pledge" of the island and of the property thereon. This note and pledge were assigned by Schilling, in January, 1892, to the plaintiff Beckman, who was acting on behalf of himself and one Gaty. A finding, which is not attacked, declares that this assignment was a part of the transaction of February 1, 1892, by which the deed, bill of sale, and reconveyance agreement were executed. Coincident with the assignment of the pledge, Schilling made a quitclaim deed to Beckman of an undivided one-half interest in the island. This deed declared that it was made to Beckman for the purpose of enabling him "to fulfill all the obligations required in the said pledge of the said Schilling." Beckman and Gaty signed an agreement, declaring that they were equally interested in the purchase of the note and pledge from Schilling, and on the 1st day of February—the date on which the papers between Beckman and Waters were executed—Beckman executed to Gaty a deed of an undivided one-half interest in the island and the personal property thereon; such instrument reciting that Gaty had advanced a part of the consideration for the transfer from Schilling to Beckman. On the same day and as part of the same transaction, Beckman conveyed to Waters all of his interest in the island and personal property by instruments reciting that they were intended to discharge the pledge of Schilling. Then followed the making of the deed and bill of sale and the agreement set forth in the complaint.

We think these facts fully justified the trial court in concluding that the conveyance from Waters to Beckman was, in fact, a mortgage to secure the payment of $7,000, and this, notwithstanding the fact that there was no writing, whereby Waters in terms bound himself to pay such sum to Beckman. It will be observed that $7,000 was the consideration which Waters had originally agreed to pay Schilling for a one-half interest in the property, and that the payment of this sum was secured by lien upon the property. Beckman and Gaty succeeded to the interest of Schilling. New papers were executed, eliminating Schilling from the transaction, and introducing Beckman as the party with whom Waters was dealing. The same property which had been "pledged" to Schilling to secure the payment of the $7,000 was conveyed to Beckman, and this property was, by the agreement accompanying the deed and bill of sale, to be reconveyed to Waters upon payment of the same sum of $7,000, which had, two years before, been the purchase price of an undivided one-half interest. Waters remained in possession, and, as is shown by the pleadings, made partial payments to Beckman.

Taking all of these transactions together, it is a reasonable inference that the transaction between Beckman and Waters was intended to simply substitute the former for Schilling. The fact that under the terms of the agreement set forth in the complaint Waters was to receive a retransfer on payment of the precise sum which had been due to Schilling, lends strong support to the view that Beckman was purchasing the claim of Schilling, together with the security for it held by Schilling. It is certainly unlikely that Water's, after agreeing to pay $7,000 for a one-half interest in the property, would be willing to part with the entire property for no greater consideration than a release of his liability for this amount. And it would likewise be strange that Beckman, if he were the owner of property, one-half of which had, two years before, been sold for $7,000, should be willing to agree to sell the entire property at any time within three years for the same sum, with interest. Again, the partial payments which, in his complaint, Beckman admits having received are more consistent with the existence of a debt and mortgage than of an agreement for sale, which contained no provision for partial payments. A further circumstance supporting the conclusion of the court below is the execution by Beckman to Gaty, on February 1, 1892, the very date of the transactions in question, of a deed conveying a one-half interest in the property. If his interest was that of a mortgagee, his conveyance might well have been intended to transfer an interest in the mortgage, but if, on the other hand, he was the owner, and had already made an agreement to sell the property to Waters, he could not properly convey any part of the property to any one else.

It is undoubtedly true that there can be no mortgage without an indebtedness (Ahern v. McCarthy, 107 Cal. 382, 40 Pac. 482; Henley v. Hotaling, 41 Cal. 22), and that no note for the $7,000 was given by Waters. But in this respect the case is analogous to Couts v. Winston, supra. There, too, there was no direct promise in writing to pay the sum advanced, but the transaction as a whole was such as to justify the inference that the money was advanced as a loan, and that the party executing the deed had at least impliedly agreed to repay the sum advanced. The same inference is permissible here, and is the more reasonable, because of the fact that the instrument providing for a reconveyance speaks of payment of the sum of $7,000 "at the time it becomes due," and provides for credits to Waters upon his "indebtedness."

There are several alleged errors of law assigned by the appellant. The plaintiff offered in evidence a power of attorney from himself to Gaty. This paper does not appear to have been executed on the same day as the instruments in controversy, and was not proven to be a part of the same transaction. Furthermore, there is nothing to show that it was ever brought to the knowledge of the defendant Waters, and it could not therefore bind him.

[4] The plaintiff was not present at the trial. His deposition, taken in a former action, was offered. The defendants objected to its admission upon two grounds, one of which was that the certificate of the notary before whom the deposition was taken was not signed. The objection was sustained. There was no error in this ruling. Under section 2032 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a deposition must be "certified by the judge or officer taking" it. A certificate, prepared in proper form, was attached to the deposition, but, as suggested above, the notary had neglected to sign it, although the notarial seal had been affixed. Where, as here, the form of certificate indicates that it was intended that the authentication should be by means of a signature, we do not think a sealed, but unsigned, certificate amounts to a compliance with the requirement that the deposition shall be certified by the officer.

[5] It is also claimed that the court erred in denying the motion for a continuance on the ground of the absence of the plaintiff. The court did not abuse its discretion in this ruling. The affidavits offered to support the motion showed, at most, that the plaintiff was unable to be present at the time set for the trial. But there was nothing to indicate that he would be able to appear at any later time; nor was there any sufficient showing of an excuse for the failure to take his deposition in proper form before the trial. No other points are raised.

The order is affirmed.

In re CAROTHERS' ESTATE. (Sac. 1,671.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 15, 1911.)

1. Wills (§ 439*)—Construction—Circumstances of Making.

By express provision of Civ. Code, 1318, in case of uncertainty arising on the face of a will, testator's intention is to be ascertained from its words, taking into view the circumstances under which it was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 952, 955, 957; Dec. Dig. § 439.*]

2. Wills (§ 602*) — Estates Created—Defeasible Fee—Conditional Limitations.

A will gave to testator's wife and a son an estate in a farm for the life of the wife. It then provides that on the wife's death the farm "vests absolutely in and is the property of" the son, "and in case" he "dies without issue his property herein specified becomes the property of" a second son, and at his death goes to a daughter. Civ. Code, § 1322, provides that a clear and distinct devise cannot be affected by any other words not equally clear. Held, that the words of the devise over to the second son and daughter were sufficiently clear to meet the requirements of the statute and to impose conditional limitations on the fee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1351–1359; Dec. Dig. § 602.*]

3. Wills (§ 466*)—Construction—Particular Words—"That."

Where by his will testator creates an estate in fee in his eldest son, and then provides "that in case" the devisee "dies without issue his property herein specified becomes the property of" testator's second son, the word "that" must be construed as "but" or "provided that."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 466.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, p. 6935.]

4. Wills (§ 622*) — Estates Created—Remainders—Fee on a Fee.

Where, after the creation of a defeasible fee in the first son, a will provides that on the death of such son without issue the farm devised becomes the property of testator's second son and on his death goes to testator's daughter, the devise to the daughter is not void as an attempt to create a remainder after a devise in fee to the second son.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1440–1444; Dec. Dig. § 622.*]

5. Wills (§ 542*) — Survivorship—Death Coupled with Contingency—"Simply."

Civ. Code, § 1336, providing that "words in a will referring to death or survivorship simply relate to the time of the testator's death unless possession is actually postponed, when they must be referred to the time of possession," has no application to the construction of a will containing words of limitation upon a death coupled with a contingency such as dying without issues; this not being death "simply."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1165–1168; Dec. Dig. § 542.*]

6. Wills (§ 545*) — Survivorship — "Dies Without Issue."

If, from the terms of the will and the circumstances attending its making, it does not appear that the words "dies without issue" are intended to mean death before testator or the first taker, they will be construed to mean death either before or after that event.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2059–2061.]

7. Wills (§ 545*) — Survivorship — "Dies Without Issue."

A will created in testator's wife and eldest son an estate for the wife's life in a farm constituting the bulk of his estate. It then provides that on the wife's death the farm "vests absolutely in and is the property of" the son, and in case said son "dies without issue his property herein specified becomes the property of" a second son, and at his death goes to a daughter. When the will was made, the eldest son was a bachelor 42 years old, while the daughter had three young children. Held, that testator intended to preserve the estate for his daughter, and hence the words "dies without issue" will be construed as meaning death at any time, and not death in the lifetime of the wife in order to effectuate that intent.

Angellotti, Melvin, and Sloss, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; J. W. Hughes, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Andrew Carothers, deceased. From an order John E. Witherspoon, administrator, and others, appeal; Earl D. White being the respondent. Reversed.

White & Miller, Richards & Carrier, and Devlin & Devlin, for appellants. William M. Sims, R. C. Van Fleet, and W. B. Treadwell (Snook & Church, of counsel), for respondent. Charles A. Bliss, amicus curiæ.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from an order of partial distribution of the estate of Andrew Carothers, deceased, to the respondent, Earl D. White.

The decision of the case depends on the meaning and effect of the last will of the deceased. After a clause giving certain specific personal property to his son, William P. Carothers, to his wife, Eleanor Carothers, and to one Joseph A. Lowry, respectively, the will proceeds with the portions here involved, which are as follows:

"I also give and bequeath to my wife and William P. Carothers my entire farm with all improvements thereon located in the county of Sacramento county, state of California, during the lifetime of my said wife, and at her death said land with all the improvements and proceeds thereof vests absolutely in and is the property of said William P. Carothers, that in case said William P. Carothers dies without issue his property herein specified becomes the property of John Thomas Carothers, and at his death goes to Elizabeth Witherspoon.

"I further direct at the death of my said wife my daughter Elizabeth Witherspoon shall receive one thousand dollars proceeds from said property and May H. Lowry five hundred dollars."

The testator died on December 13, 1876, leaving surviving as his heirs at law his wife, Eleanor, and three children, namely, William P. Carothers, John Thomas Carothers, and Elizabeth Witherspoon. Eleanor, the wife, died on February 24, 1897. On February 14, 1898, William P. Carothers executed a deed purporting to convey an undivided one-half interest in the farm to said John Thomas Carothers. On March 11, 1899, John conveyed to his wife, Kate A. Carothers, all of his right, title, and interest therein. On September 15, 1904, Kate conveyed to J. J. Burke a part of said farm, a small tract of four acres. This is the land in controversy. The respondent, Earl D. White, is the successor of Burke, and the undivided one-half of the four acres was distributed to him, subject to a charge for the legacies to Elizabeth Witherspoon and May H. Lowry, in case they had not been paid previously. The claim of the respondent is that by the terms of the will, upon the death of the testator's wife, Eleanor, William P. Carothers became vested of the farm in fee, that his deed to John carried the undivided one-half thereof to John in fee, and that by the subsequent transfers the respondent became vested of the fee in the undivided half of the four acres.

The appellants are the children of Elizabeth Witherspoon. She died in the year 1881. John Thomas Carothers died in the year 1899. William P. Carothers died on June 2, 1902, without issue. The claim of the appellants is that by the will William P. Carothers was given, first, an estate in common with Eleanor Carothers for and during the lifetime of Eleanor, and, secondly, a contingent remainder in fee; the condition being that in case he should die without issue the property should go to John Thomas Carothers for his life and that at the death of John it should go to Elizabeth Witherspoon. Their theory is that the estate of William terminated upon his death without issue, carrying with it all the subordinate estates conveyed by him, including that of John's wife and that of the respondent, and that as John died before the death of William, upon the death of the latter the entire estate in the farm became vested in the appellants as the heirs of Elizabeth Witherspoon, to whom the will in that event had devised it.

[1] In case of uncertainty arising upon the face of a will, the testator's intention is to be ascertained from the words of the will, taking into view the circumstances under which it was made. Civ. Code, § 1318. Assuming that the will is uncertain, the circumstances to be considered in this case are as follows: At the time he executed the will the testator was 74 years of age. He was then very sick, confined to his bed, and his death was expected soon. It was executed on December 7, 1876, and he died six days afterward. Eleanor Carothers was his childless second wife. She was then aged 56 years. William P. Carothers was a bachelor, then aged 42 years, John was 39 years old, and had one child then living. She afterwards died before the death of John. Elizabeth Witherspoon was then 46 years old, was married, and had three young children. The farm was his place of residence. It contained 158 acres and comprised the bulk of his estate. The will appointed William P. Carothers and Eleanor Carothers as executor and executrix, without bonds.

[2] The respondent's theory is that the clause in the will which reads as follows: "That in case said William P. Carothers dies without issue his property herein specified becomes the property of John Thomas Carothers, and at his death goes to Elizabeth Witherspoon"—refers solely to the death of William without issue in the lifetime of the widow, Eleanor, so that when he survived Eleanor he became vested of an unconditional and unqualified fee. Upon this theory a complete and accurate statement of the intention of the testator would have required the interpolation of an additional phrase, so as to express it thus, the interpolated words being italicized: " that in case said William P. Carothers dies without issue during the lifetime of my said wife, his property herein specified becomes the property of John Thomas Carothers, and at his death goes to Elizabeth Witherspoon."

The respondent, in support of this construction, advances two propositions which he states substantially as follows: (1) A clear devise of a fee will not be cut down by other expressions or clauses contained in the will which do not with reasonable certainty indicate the intent of the testator to cut it down, and if such intent is not thus shown the subsequent clause will be construed so as to make it consistent with the positive devise, or, if necessary, entirely disregarded. (2) Where a devise is made to one in fee, with a devise over in case of his death without issue, the words "death without issue" are to be taken as relating solely to his death in the lifetime of the testator, or, if the fee is in remainder after the termination of an estate for life or years, then to his death prior to the ending of the particular estate, so that if he survives thereafter he will take an absolute fee.

1. The first proposition is embodied in section 1322 of our Civil Code: "A clear and distinct devise or bequest cannot be affected * * * by any other words not equally clear and distinct." The words, "and at her death said land with all the improvements and proceeds thereof vests absolutely in and is the property of said William P. Carothers," considered separately, clearly give William a fee-simple estate. They are immediately followed, however, as part of the same sentence, separated only by a comma, by the words, "that in case said William P. Carothers dies without issue his property herein specified becomes the property of John Thomas Carothers, and at his death goes to Elizabeth Witherspoon." Passing the second proposition and assuming that this refers to the death of William at any time, this passage, so far as it imposes a limitation upon the fee, is as clear and distinct as the previous devise of the fee to William.

[3] The word "that" beginning the clause is obviously used in the sense of "but" or "provided that." The testator's intention is unmistakably declared to be that in the contingency mentioned—that is, William's death without issue—the farm should go to John and Elizabeth successively. The rule contended for, as in case of all other rules of interpretation, is designed to aid in arriving at the intention of the testator as expressed in his will, and it must yield to that intention when it appears with reasonable clearness from the words used. The subsequent words are sufficiently clear to meet the condition of the rule, and they must be taken as providing a conditional limitation upon the fee previously devised, as they were manifestly intended to do.

[4] It is suggested that these words are not sufficiently certain to comply with the rule because, when taken literally, they appear to give the entire fee in remainder to John, and it is insisted that if John had the fee it would go to his heirs at his death and not to Elizabeth. We do not think there is any foundation for this objection. While the form of the provision is not elaborate and the language is not particularly well chosen, its effect is plain if the entire clause is considered together. It can mean nothing else than that, upon the death of William without issue, John should take, for and during his own life, whatever estates were given to William by the previous clauses, and that upon John's death the entire remainder would vest in Elizabeth, or her heirs if she were not then living. If William's death had occurred during Eleanor's lifetime, of course the estates of John and Elizabeth, respectively, would have been in the undivided one-half only, while Eleanor lived.

[5, 6] 2. The second proposition is expressed in the Civil Code as follows: "Words in a will referring to death or survivorship, simply, relate to the time of the testator's death, unless possession is actually postponed, when they must be referred to the time of possession." Section 1336. In this case William's possession of the fee was postponed until the death of Eleanor, and therefore, if this rule should be applied, the words relating to his death would be taken to mean his death in the lifetime of Eleanor. This section of the Code expresses what appears to be the general rule upon the subject at common law. The respondent relies upon the following statement of the rule by Mr. Underhill: "The intention of the testator in providing for a devise over after giving a fee in absolute terms is most likely to prevent a lapse; and, if the devisee shall survive the testator, he will take an absolute fee simple in the property devised to him, which will not be defeasible on his subsequent death without issue, and the limitation over will be disregarded." 1 Underhill on Wills, § 347. The author, in the next section, materially modifies this statement of the rule by the following language: "The rule is extremely technical in its character. It does not apply where there are indications, however slight, that the testator indicated a death without issue occurring subsequent to his death. The rule which construes death without issue to mean death without issue prior to that of that testator is not favored by the courts. The ages and conditions of the primary devisees may be material in determining whether the testator meant death without issue before or subsequent to his death. * * * In such a case, particularly where at the date of the execution of the will any of the primary devisees are unmarried, it may fairly be presumed that the testator had in contemplation a future marriage and birth of issue, and that, intending to keep the property in his family, he meant a death without issue to take place after his death. If, therefore, the primary devisees survive him, they take an estate in fee which is defeasible upon their subsequent death without issue." Section 437. In both these passages the author is discussing the effect of a devise over upon death without issue in cases where there is no intervening life estate to postpone the possession of the contingent remainder, and hence he speaks only of the effect of a death without issue before and after the testator's death. But manifestly, where there was such postponement, the same considerations would apply as to the effect of such death before and after the ending of the life estate. It is contended by both parties here that there is an irreconcilable conflict in the decisions of other jurisdictions upon the question whether words in a will referring to death without issue relate to the time of the testator's death or of actual possession if there is a postponement by reason of an intervening particular estate, or whether they relate to a death after the devise vests in possession, as well as before, and each claims that the weight of authority is in his favor. We have no decision on the subject in this state.

It is important to notice that the rule as stated in the Civil Code applies only where there are words "referring to death or survivorship, simply." The will of Carothers does not refer to the death of William "simply." It refers to his death "without issue," a contingency which might never happen. We have no provision of our Code declaring what the rule should be where the words refer to death upon a contingency. With respect to cases of this kind, speaking of those in which possession is postponed by a particular estate, Mr. Underhill says: "The general rule is that, in the absence of clear evidence of a contrary intention, a devise over in case of death without issue in the case of a remainder, as with an immediate estate or interest, means a death at any time, and not a death without issue during the life tenancy. The devisees therefore take a remainder, whether vested or contingent, upon the death of the testator, but which becomes vested in possession and enjoyment only upon the death of the life tenant, and which is then defeasible on their subsequent death without issue." Volume 1, § 346, p. 465. The italics are the author's. Mr. Jarman treats the subject at length by classes or heads. In one part he considers cases where the reference is to death "simply"; in another a class which he designates by the title, "Death, with Contingency," in which he includes the words "death without issue." This latter class he again divides into those where the estate is to vest immediately upon the death of the testator, and those where the original gift is postponed to take effect after an intervening estate for life or years. Speaking of those vesting immediately, he says: "The general rule is that, where the context is silent, the words referring to the death of the prior legatee in connection with some collateral event apply to the contingency happening as well after as before the death of the testator." 2 Jarman on Wills (6th Ed.) 719, *p. 1596. And in reference to the case of a postponed gift to one, with a devise over in case of his death on a contingency, he says: "It is settled, however, that in this case, as well as where the original gift is immediate, the substituted gift will prima facie take effect whenever the death under the circumstances described occurs." Id. 725, *p. 1603. In view of this well-known classification of the different varieties of testamentary gifts where death is referred to, it is at least clear that in adopting section 1336 there was no intention to provide a statutory rule for the cases where the reference was to death with a contingency. We are therefore left to construe the words of this will with the aid of such light as the authorities afford.

A large number of cases are cited by the respective counsel upon the question of the proper application of the words "dies without issue." We do not deem it advisable to review them. The above quotations from Jarman and Underhill show that the text-writers who have given close consideration to the subject favor the theory that they should be held to refer to death after as well as before the death of the testator or life tenant, unless the context or circumstances show the more limited meaning. A reading of the cases cited rather leads to the conclusion that, after all that may be said, the only rule truly applicable to such expressions is that the intention of the testator is the primary object of search, and that it is to be ascertained by considering the whole will in connection with the nature and character of the testator's estate and the part of it affected, and such of the surrounding circumstances known to him as may tend to illustrate his meaning. If all these indicate that the reference is to a death without issue before some particular time or event, effect must be given to the will accordingly. If, on the contrary, they show an intention that death at any time was to bring about the result stated, then that effect must be given to the words. If there is nothing to indicate either, then the ordinary meaning of the words is that the reference is to death at any time it may occur, and that the happening or not happening of the contingency is to determine the result. Nearly all of the cases cited fall within one or the other of the first two of the alternatives just stated, and they were, for the most part, really decided in that way; but in some of them the decision is reached by the arbitrary application of what was considered the correct rule of construction. This would probably account for much of the conflict.

[7] Applying the principles of interpretation above stated, we find little difficulty in ascertaining the testamentary intent. When the testator gave William the remainder after the death of Eleanor, and then proceeded to declare what should become of the property if William should die without issue, he must have had in mind the fact that William was a bachelor 42 years old and the possibility of his future marriage and the birth of children. It is more reasonable to suppose that he intended to preserve the estate to Elizabeth Witherspoon or her children, in case William left no issue, than that he merely desired to avoid a lapse if William died before Eleanor. If the former was his purpose, there can be no doubt that the qualifying clause was intended to limit the fee devised to William and referred to his death at any time.

We have also, in the will itself, more than a mere death upon contingency to point out the testator's meaning. The clause immediately preceding the reference to William's death on its face gave William a remainder in fee in the farm. The farm was therein "specified" as William's property, to become "his" in possession upon the death of Eleanor. Knowing William's age and unmarried state, he then came to consider that William might die without issue after coming into possession of the fee. To provide for this apprehended contingency, he proceeded to declare that if William should die without issue "his property herein specified" should go to John for his life and then to Elizabeth. The provision would doubtless have been construed to apply to and include the unexpired life estate as well as the fee in remainder, in case William had died before Eleanor; but it also shows that the testator was thinking of the property which would be "his"—that is, William's—and referred to the death of William after the death of Eleanor and after he had come into possession of the remainder "specified" as his in the preceding clause of the sentence, as well as to his death before that event.

It is suggested that the last paragraph of the will, which gives legacies to Elizabeth Witherspoon and May H. Lowry payable at the death of Eleanor out of the proceeds of the farm, shows that the testator supposed that William, if he were living, would then have an indefeasible fee, and that he must have intended that result. The argument is that the payment of these legacies out of a mere defeasible fee would have been a burden on William greater than the testator can be supposed to have intended. We cannot see that this argument is of any force. When the testator made the will, all the future possibilities were before him. If William had died without issue before Eleanor, leaving John surviving, John would have had a vested life estate in the remainder, beginning, as to one-half, with the death of Eleanor. At her death the legacies would be payable, and the burden upon John, if he survived her, would assuredly be as great as it would have been upon William, had he survived Eleanor.

Our conclusion is that the estate of William was a fee defeasible upon his death without issue, and that as that event has occurred, and John is also dead, the farm is now vested in the heirs of Elizabeth Witherspoon.

Upon a former submission of this cause, the foregoing opinion was filed, and the order, accordingly, reversed. Upon petition of the respondent, the judgment of reversal was vacated and a rehearing ordered for the purpose of giving further consideration to the questions involved. The cause was thereupon reargued and again submitted. Upon the further consideration we are satisfied with the opinion and conclusions heretofore announced, and we again adopt the aforesaid opinion as that of the court.

The order appealed from is reversed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

ANGELLOTTI, J. (dissenting). This appeal was first decided in the District Court of Appeal for the Third Appellate District, where judgment was rendered affirming the order appealed from. Accompanying the judgment was the following opinion prepared by Mr. Justice Burnett:

"This is an appeal from a decree of partial distribution to one Earl D. White of the estate of Andrew Carothers, deceased.

"Andrew Carothers died on or about the 13th day of December, 1876, and on January 8, 1877, his will was admitted to probate and his son, William P. Carothers, was appointed executor of the estate. By his last will and testament said Andrew Carothers disposed of the real estate herein involved as follows: 'I also give and bequeath to my wife and William P. Carothers my entire farm with all improvements thereon located in the county of Sacramento, state of California, during the lifetime of my said wife, and at her death said land with all improvements and proceeds thereof vests absolutely in and is at said death the property of said William P. Carothers, that in case said William P. Carothers dies without issue his property herein specified becomes the property of John Thomas Carothers, and at his death goes to Elizabeth Witherspoon.' The said wife, Eleanor A. Carothers, died on the 24th day of February, 1897. On the 14th day of February, 1898, said William P. Carothers conveyed by a good and sufficient deed to John T. Carothers an undivided one-half interest in said property. The latter, on the 11th of March, 1899, conveyed the same to his wife, and she to J. J. Burke, on September 15, 1904. The said Burke died, and on the 6th day of September, 1907, in the superior court of the county of Alameda, a decree of distribution was made and entered by which all of the interest of said Burke was distributed to said Earl D. White. On the 31st day of October, 1904, the said Burke had filed in the superior court of Sacramento county his petition for the distribution to him of the undivided one-half interest in this real property belonging to the estate of said Andrew Carothers, deceased. His death occurred before the hearing of said petition, and his successor, the said Earl D. White, was regularly substituted, and to the latter the distribution was made. The said John Thomas Carothers died testate in the year 1899, without leaving issue; his said surviving widow, Kate A. Carothers, being the sole devisee of his estate. William P. Carothers was never married and never had any issue. He died intestate on June 2, 1902. The said petition for distribution was contested by John E. Witherspoon, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of said Andrew Carothers, deceased, and by John E. Witherspoon, Andrew H. Witherspoon, and Emma Witherspoon, the heirs at law and successors in interest of Elizabeth Witherspoon, a deceased daughter of the said Andrew Carothers, deceased. The position of respondent is that the fee, subject only to the life estate of the said Eleanor, vested in William at the death of the testator, and that the provision in reference to the said John Thomas and Elizabeth are substitutionary only, or, at least, that at the death of said Eleanor the said William became entitled to the fee simple absolute. To the contrary, it is insisted by appellants that the estate of said William P. Carothers was terminated by reason of his death without issue, and that therefore the alternative provisions of the will to take effect in case of the happening of the contingency became operative. Hence the claim of appellants to the fee as heirs of said Elizabeth, whose death antedated that of the said William P. Carothers.

"Many questions of law suggested by the language of the will are discussed with great learning by the counsel for both parties. Their investigations have taken a wide range, and it would seem that no relevant authority worthy of consideration has escaped attention. We deem it unnecessary, however, to follow the discussion in all its ramifications, as the determination of the controversy really hinges upon the construction of the phrase 'dies without issue,' or rather upon the question whether that contingency is limited to any particular time.

"Respondent's position is stated as follows: 'Our contention is that after devising the property absolutely to William P. Carothers, and carving out of it a life estate for his wife, he bethought himself that in case William P. Carothers died in his own lifetime or in the lifetime of his wife there would occur a lapse, and so he provided the substitutionary scheme. This is the only way in which the intention of the testator to convey an absolute interest in the property to the first taker can be possibly carried out.' In support thereof it is submitted: '(1) A devise of testator's real estate to a person absolutely carries the fee simple absolute. A devise of the proceeds, rents and profits without limit passes the absolute fee. (2) A clear devise or bequest will not be cut down by other expressions or clauses contained in the will which do not with reasonable certainty indicate the intent of the testator to cut it down. The court will, when in doubt, justly prefer that construction of any subsequent clause which will make it consistent with the plainly expressed intention to devise or bequeath an absolute estate. (3) Under section 1336 of the Civil Code words in a will referring to death or survivorship relate to the time of the testator's death, unless possession is actually postponed, when they must be referred to the time of possession. This is the rule which must govern the construction of Andrew Carothers' will.'

"As opposed to this view, it seems clear to appellants that: 'The testator intended that William P. Carothers should have the remainder in the property after the expiration of the life estate, but that he would not have the same absolutely so that he could dispose of it to others. The testator wanted to keep the property in the family. If William had issue, the property was to stay in his family. If he had not, it was to go to the other children of testator.' The reasons for this conclusion are summarized as follows: '(1) The natural meaning of the words "die without issue" is a death at any time. (2) The context of the will shows an intention to keep the property in his family, and this can best be done by so construing the words. (3) The surrounding circumstances show that the testator must have intended the words to refer to death at any time. (4) Respondent's construction is based not on the testator's intention, but on harsh and technical rules of construction. That even in those states, which have adopted it, it is according to respondent's own authority, Underhill, regarded as highly technical, often defeating the intention of the testator, not favored by the courts and departed from on indications however slight.'

"The fact is, however, that there is no difference of opinion—and there can be none—between counsel, that the court's duty is to ascertain, if possible, from an inspection of the will, the intention of the testator, and to give effect to such intention if not in contravention of the law, and that rules of construction are prescribed to aid, and not to embarrass or retard, the court in its effort to determine such intention. The rules of construction suggested by counsel, indeed, are provided by the Code, and the only question can be as to their application to the will in controversy. Section 1318, Civil Code, is: 'In case of uncertainty arising upon the face of a will as to the application of any of its provisions, the testator's intention is to be ascertained from the words of the will, taking into view the circumstances under which it was made exclusive of his oral declarations.' Of course, the surrounding circumstances are to be resorted to only in case of uncertainty in the language used and for the purpose of ascertaining what the testator intended by the words of the will. Estate of Tompkins, 132 Cal. 173, 64 Pac. 268. The question as to the period of time to which the words 'die without issue' should be referred seems to be within the purview of the phrase 'as to the application of any of its provisions,' and if it does not appear from the language of the will, in view of other rules of construction, what the testator intended by said contingency, the surrounding circumstances, if of any significance to remove the uncertainty, may be considered and accorded the weight to which they seem to be entitled. In re Mackay, 107 Cal. 308, 40 Pac. 558.

"Again, in section 1322 we have the rule upon which respondent relies with such confidence expressed as follows: 'A clear and distinct devise or bequest cannot be affected by any reasons assigned therefor, or any other words not equally clear and distinct or by inference or argument from other parts of the will or by an inaccurate recital of or reference to its contents in another part of the will.' But appellants contend that equal effect must be given to section 1321, providing that 'All the parts of a will are to be construed in relation to each other, and so as, if possible, to form one consistent whole; but, where several parts are absolutely irreconcilable, the latter must prevail.' And also to section 1329, that 'a devise of real property passes all the estate of the testator, unless otherwise limited.'

"In Estate of Marti, 132 Cal. 672, 61 Pac. 966, the importance of said section 1322 is considered, and it is therein said: 'The testator had, by a previous clause in his will, given and bequeathed to his wife "all the other property, real and personal, and wherever situated of which I may die possessed." This gift is explicit and without any words of limitation or qualification. Considered by themselves, they create in her an absolute estate in the property given by him. The authorities all agree that, when an absolute estate has been conveyed in one clause of a will, it will not be cut down or limited by subsequent words except such as indicate as clear an intention therefor as was shown by the words creating the estate. Words which merely raise a doubt or suggest an inference will not affect the estate thus conveyed, and any doubt which may be suggested by reason of such subsequent words must be resolved in favor of the estate first conveyed. This rule of construction controls the rule that an interest given in one clause of a will may be qualified or limited by a subsequent clause'—citing cases.

"There is no room for controversy as to the foregoing, unless possibly as to the accuracy of the statement that one rule 'controls' the other. The fact seems to be that in the case discussed by Mr. Justice Harrison the rule as to qualification or limitation has no application. Nor is there any inconsistency between the various sections of the Code to which we have referred. If A. in one part of his will by language free from uncertainty devises real estate to B. absolutely, and in a subsequent portion uses language of an uncertain import, but which might be construed as a limitation or qualification of the fee, no one would contend that B. is entitled to less than the entire estate in said property. But if A. should devise real estate to B. and qualify the devise by an equally clear declaration that B. should have only a life estate, there would be no hesitation in giving effect to the subsequent limitation. It follows necessarily from the principle that certainty is preferred to uncertainty and that the intention of the testator should be rendered operative as far as possible.

"In the light of the foregoing familiar principles, what estate was devised to the said William P. Carothers? There is no uncertainty as to the significance of this language: 'I also give and bequeath to my wife and William P. Carothers my entire farm with all improvements thereon during the lifetime of my said wife, and at her death said land with all improvements and proceeds thereof vests absolutely in and is at said death the property of said William P. Carothers.' The words seem to have been chosen carefully with a view of giving the wife and William a joint life estate and of vesting the fee beyond controversy in the latter. The legal effect of the words used, irrespective of the context, would not be changed as far as vesting the fee is concerned, if 'absolutely' and the phrase 'and is at said death the property of' had been omitted (section 1329, Civ. Code); but they are important as manifesting the intention of the testator to vest without qualification the complete title in William, postponed, however, as to its enjoyment until the death of the wife. An absolute estate is one 'that is free from all manner of condition or incumbrance.' It means 'Complete, final, perfect, unconditional, unrestricted.' Rap. & L. Law Dictionary. 'The ownership of property is absolute when a single person has the absolute dominion over it, and may use it or dispose of it according to his pleasure, subject only to general laws.' Section 679, Civ. Code. 'The term "absolute ownership" hardly needs definition. An ownership liable to be divested by any contingency arising by any instrument creating the ownership is not absolute.' In re Howland's Will, 75 App. Div. 207, 77 N. Y. Supp. 1025.

"We must presume that the testator used language advisedly, in view of its universally accepted significance. And as a bequest to a person necessarily implies the condition that the devisee shall be alive at the time the bequest is to take effect, we find the testator expressing his intention that, if the said William P. Carothers shall be alive at the time of the death of Eleanor, he shall be vested with the absolute dominion over said property, not liable to be divested by any contingency that may arise, provided if he dies without issue the property becomes the property of John Thomas Carothers. Is it not, therefore, the natural construction, to limit the operation of the qualifying contingency at least to the period prior to the death of said Eleanor? At any rate, there is some uncertainty as to whether the testator meant death 'without issue' at any time, and hence to give effect to the rule as to a clear devise we reach the conclusion that the testator had in view a substitutionary provision in case William should die before the testator or the said Eleanor.

"Again, the contrast between the perspicuous words of devise in reference to William P. Carothers and the somewhat obscure phraseology as to John Thomas Carothers and Elizabeth Witherspoon is worthy of notice. In the first instance there can be no doubt as to the testator's intention. He uses language apt and ample to vest in William the entire estate: 'I also give and bequeath.' But in case of William's death without issue 'his property herein specified becomes the property of John Thomas Carothers, and at his death goes to Elizabeth Witherspoon.' While the words 'becomes' and 'goes,' unembarrassed by the consideration of the clear devise of the fee to William, would probably be held sufficient to express the intention of the testator that the property 'becomes' the property of John Thomas and at his death 'goes' to Elizabeth, yet it is manifest that in one case the intention is entirely free from doubt, but in the other, at least somewhat obscure and uncertain. I think it is reasonably clear that the testator had in view the death of Eleanor as the point of time when all uncertainty should be removed as to the character of the estate vested in the devisee. This conclusion seems to be confirmed by the last devise of $1,000 to Elizabeth Witherspoon and $500 to May H. Lowry to be received 'at the death of my said wife.'

"If we had no other guide than the decisions of the courts to prescribe the limits of the phrase 'death without issue,' it would be difficult to reach a conclusion. The expression has indeed received judicial exposition in many jurisdictions. It is asserted in one of the briefs that more than 100 cases dealing with this question have been cited by each party herein. Many of these decisions are irreconcilably conflicting. In some instances, however, the phraseology is somewhat different, and the conflict is, therefore, more apparent than real. For example, sometimes the devise is to A., and in case of his death to B. Death is not a contingency, but a certainty, and, as it is apparent in such a case that the testator had in view a possible contingency, it is hardly open to controversy that he contemplated the death of A. in his lifetime. But 'death without issue' introduces an additional element and renders the question less free from doubt, although the difference is ignored in some of the decisions.

"But confining our attention to the expression before us, it is apparent that the cases are hopelessly at variance, as may be seen by a reference to the following from the many that have been examined.

"The question is elaborately and learnedly discussed and many authorities reviewed in Fowler et al. v. Duhme et al., 143 Ind. 248, 42 N. E. 623, wherein it is declared: 'Another rule is that the law so favors the vesting of estates and is so adverse to the postponement thereof that they will be held to vest at the earliest possible period in the absence of a clear manifestation of the intention of the testator to the contrary. While this rule has usually been declared with reference to the vesting of remainders, it is nevertheless declaratory of the policy of the law which would prefer certainty rather than contingencies, and which would deny force and effect to an uncertainty raised by doubtfully expressed contingencies instead of resorting to slight circumstances and rendering them effective to defer the vesting of estates or make their vesting contingent. This policy should not be relaxed when inquiry is directed to the force of words asserted to dismantle an estate in fee devised by apt words. * * * Another rule, and that which is of the greatest significance in the construction of the will before us, is, as said in Wright v. Charley, 129 Ind. 257, 28 N. E. 706: "That where real estate is devised in terms denoting an intention that the primary devisee shall take a fee on the death of the testator coupled with a devise over, in case of his death without issue, the words refer to a death without issue during the lifetime of the testator and that the primary devisee surviving the testator takes an absolute estate in fee simple." This rule may be said to be almost, if not entirely, free from conflict in the decisions, and there is no doubt of its adoption in this state and that it is supported by the vast weight of authority'—citing on page 261 of 143 Ind., on page 627 of 42 N. E., a long list of cases.

"On the other hand, the view urged by appellants is strongly upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States in Britton v. Thornton, 112 U. S. 532, 5 Sup. Ct. 294, 28 L. Ed. 816, in the following language: 'When indeed a devise is made to one person in fee and "in case of his death" to another in fee, the absurdity of speaking of the one event which is sure to occur to all living as uncertain and contingent has led the courts to interpret the devise over as referring to death in the testator's lifetime. 2 Jarman on Wills, c. 48; Briggs v. Shaw, 9 Allen (Mass.) 516; Lord Cairns in O'Mahoney v. Burdett, L. R. 7, H. L. 388, 395. But when the death of the first taker is coupled with other circumstances which may or may not ever take place, as, for instance, death under age or without children, the devise over, unless controlled by other provisions of the will, takes effect according to the ordinary and literal meaning of the words upon death under the circumstances indicated, at any time, whether before or after the death of the testator.'

"The question has been brought to the attention of our Supreme Court several times, but I think it can hardly be said to have been positively adjudicated.

"In Jewell v. Pierce, 120 Cal. 82, 52 Pac. 133, it is said: 'The construction which these words in a will should receive has been decided differently in different states, but has never been determined in this state.' The court, however, declined to decide the question, holding that it was not necessary to a decision of the cause.

"The language construed in Estate of Alexander, 149 Cal. 146, 85 Pac. 308, involves a different contingency from the one before us. The court, though, refers to a limitation over in case of death as follows: 'A devise to A. with a limitation over in case of his death vests an absolute estate in A., unless he dies during the testator's lifetime—citing cases. Similarly a gift to various persons "or the survivors of them" refers to those surviving at the death of the testator. The Civil Code of this state provides (section 1336) that "words in a will referring to death or survivorship, simply relate to the time of the testator's death, unless possession is actually postponed when they must be referred to the time of possession." But the above authorities as well as many more that might be cited show that the same rule exists universally irrespective of any statute.'

Whether the court would have made any distinction between a limitation over 'in case of death' and one 'in case of death without issue' does not appear, nor was it necessary to decide the question, although some of the cases cited with approval hold that the phrase 'death without issue' relates to death in the lifetime of the testator. Moreover, for other reasons stated in the opinion, it seems clear that the testator intended the conditional limitation 'if she remains unmarried' to apply at the time of the testator's death.

"In the Estate of Barclay, 152 Cal. 753, 93 Pac. 1012, allusion is made to the subject as follows: 'The only provision in the will under which S. C. Blackinton could possibly be deprived of this property was one to the effect that in case one or more of the children should die their share was to be divided among the remaining children "unless they have heirs." This provision apparently referred only to such a death as might occur before the death of the testator (Civ. Code, § 1336); but in any event it could not apply to S. C. Blackinton's interest, for she left a child surviving her as well as her husband.'

"I think, therefore, that respondent is not justified in saying that by the foregoing decisions in this state the question is foreclosed as to whether the words 'dying without issue' are substitutionary merely or that the issue here is determined by said section 1336, but gathering the intention of the testator from the whole instrument, the only reasonable construction, in my opinion, is opposed to the theory that death at any time without issue was contemplated.

"Appellants also contend that an important feature here is the precedent life estate in favor of the said William P. Carothers. This would be of moment if it were not followed by the devise to him of the absolute fee.

"The said provisions in reference to William and Eleanor express as clearly as language can the intention that they should have the life estate until the death of Eleanor and then the fee should vest in William. Of course, no one would contend that William's life estate would continue after he was vested with the fee. Therefore appellants make a wrong application of the quotation from Fowler v. Ingersoll, 127 N. Y. 472, 28 N. E. 471, to the effect that: 'This rule (holding that the words of contingency are substitutionary merely) has no application when the first devisee or legatee takes a life estate and is applied only when the prior gift is absolute and unrestricted. * * * And many cases could be cited where the courts, having construed the prior estate to be less than the absolute fee have held that the words of contingency referred to a death whenever it may happen.'

"Instead of devising a life estate to said William, the testator, after using language that carries such an implication, hastens to express in the most positive and unequivocal manner his purpose to vest the entire estate in William, subjecting its possession, as we have seen, to the life interest of Eleanor.

"The fact that the testator died within a week after the execution of the will is not of sufficient moment to affect the result. The argument is that since he must have been under a sense of impending death, and William was of the age of 42 and unmarried, it is most improbable that the contingency mentioned could have been contemplated as occurring prior to the testator's death. But the force of the contention is entirely nullified by the construction which refers the said contingency to the time of the death of Eleanor. Besides, there is no positive evidence that the testator believed that he was about to die. It is true that he was quite ill. He was suffering from an ailment that had afflicted him periodically for ten years. But at any rate, conceding that he felt that the end was near, this is only a circumstance to be considered with other circumstances in case of doubt, and in view of the language of the will expressing so emphatically the purpose to vest an unqualified estate in William, should not be given the weight claimed by appellants.

"As we construe the will there is no occasion for the application of the rule preferring the latter in case of conflicting provisions. Holding that there is a clear devise of the fee to William and that the contingency is confined either to the death of the testator or of Eleanor, we find harmony rather than inconsistency in the provisions in controversy."

I believe that this opinion correctly disposes of the questions presented on this appeal, and that the order should be affirmed for the reasons therein stated. I therefore dissent from the judgment.

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 17*)—DIVERSION—NOTICE—RIGHTS — CONSTRUCTION OF WORKS—TIME—EXTENSION.

Civ. Code, § 1416, prior to its amendment in 1907, provided that a claimant of water must begin diversion works within 60 days after the posting of notice and diligently pursue the same to completion. Section 1419 declared that failure to comply with such requirement forfeited the claimant's rights as against a subsequent complying claimant, but section 1422 provided that if the proposed place of diversion, or any part of the diverting canal, was within the United States forest reserve, or other public land, the claimant might commence his works within 60 days after a license from the proper officers to use the reserved lands provided he began steps to secure such license within 60 days after posting the notice of appropriation. Held, that where plaintiff's notice of appropriation alleged that the places of its intended diversion and part of the route of its conduit were within the Sierra forest reserve of the United States, plaintiff having diligently prosecuted its application for use of the public land, the right of diversion was not subject to adverse appropriation until 60 days after the application to use the public land had been acted on.

An appropriator's right pending the determination of his application to use public lands was an "interest in real property" which he was entitled to protect by a suit to determine conflicting claims to real property authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 738.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Inyo County; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by the Inyo Consolidated Water Company against Stoddard Jess and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Hunsaker & Britt, P. W. Forbes, and Andrew H. Rose, for appellant. Leslie R. Hewitt, City Atty., Ben. H. Yandell, and W. B. Mathews, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The court below sustained a general demurrer to the second amended complaint. Plaintiff refused to amend further. Thereupon judgment was given for defendants. Plaintiff appeals.

The first count of the complaint purports to allege a cause of action, under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to determine the alleged conflicting claims of the plaintiff and defendants, respectively, to the right to use the waters of Cottonwood creek, in Inyo county, and to the right to divert such waters for use. The complaint alleges that the city of Los Angeles has a prior right to divert and use 180 miners' inches of said waters. The alleged conflicting claims do not relate to that water, but solely to the excess of the stream above that quantity. It appears from the briefs that the demurrer to this count was sustained upon the theory that it does not show that the plaintiff owns or possesses any subsisting interest in, or right to, the water or the use thereof. This constitutes the question to be determined.

The plaintiff claims its right under and by virtue of five notices of appropriation posted and recorded by George Chaffey, as provided in section 1416 of the Civil Code. Plaintiff has succeeded to Chaffey's rights. Two of the notices were posted on June 24, 1905; the other three on July 31, 1905. The notices state, and the fact is, that the places of intended diversion, and part of the route of the conduit to be constructed to convey it to the place of use, are and then were within the Sierra forest reserve of the United States. No diversion works or dams had been built or begun in pursuance of the notices, or either of them, at the time the action was commenced, which was on July 16, 1907. In excuse for this delay the plaintiff relies on the extensions of time to begin that work given by section 1422 of the Civil Code, and by the amendment of March 21, 1907, to said section 1416. The amendment took effect on May 20, 1907 (Stat. 1907, p. 780).

[1] Section 1416, as it stood prior to 1907, provides that a claimant must begin the diversion works within 60 days after the notice is posted and diligently pursue the same to completion. There are certain exceptions not necessary here to notice. By section 1419 a failure to comply with this requirement forfeits claimant's right, as against a subsequent claimant who does comply. Section 1422, in effect, is that if the fact is, and the notice so states, that the proposed place of diversion or any part of the diverting canal is within a forest reserve or other United States government reservation of public land, the claimant may commence the diversion works within 60 days after he shall have received a grant of license from the proper public officers to occupy and use such reserved lands for that purpose, provided that, within 60 days after the posting of the notice of appropriation, he shall have begun the necessary surveys required to precede the application for such license, and shall have diligently prosecuted such surveys to completion, and, upon such completion, shall have also applied to the proper officer for such license and prosecuted such application with reasonable diligence. Facts are alleged showing that the provisions of this section have been fully complied with, and that the applications for said licenses or grants of authority to occupy and use said reserved lands are now being considered by the officers of the United States authorized to make such grants, but that they have not yet been determined, and, consequently, that plaintiff is unable to proceed with said diversion works.

The effect is that plaintiff is relieved from the requirement of sections 1416 and 1419 that such works must be commenced within 60 days after the posting of the notices of appropriation in order to preserve the claimant's statutory rights under the notice. As to these claims, the time limited has been extended and has not yet expired. The plaintiff's rights to begin and complete the diversion works are the same as they would be if the original 60 days had not expired. His present right to maintain this action is also the same.

not a vested right, that it is not property, and that it cannot be protected against adverse claimants by a suit to determine conflicting claims. In this behalf they cite Kelly v. Natoma Water Co., 6 Cal. 105; Maeris v. Bicknell, 7 Cal. 261, 68 Am. Dec. 257; Kimball v. Gearhart, 12 Cal. 50; Nevada, etc., Co. v. Kidd, 37 Cal. 309; and Mitchell v. Amador, etc., Co., 75 Cal. 482, 17 Pac. 246. These cases all involve water rights existing prior to the enactment of the Code in 1872, prescribing a statutory mode of acquiring a right to the use of running water. They lay down the rule that a right to the use of running water does not vest in possession at common law, until there has been an actual diversion and beneficial use of the water. But they all recognize, and some of them declare, that, before any actual diversion or use of the water, a claimant may acquire an incipient, incomplete, and conditional right to the future use of the water, by beginning the construction of the works necessary for such diversion and use, and, in good faith, diligently prosecuting the same to completion.

Thus, in Nevada, etc., Co. v. Kidd, supra, on page 310, referring to such an embryo claim to water and to a hostile use before its completion, the court says: "There is, in fact, as yet, no present water right to be affected. The party has merely acquired the possession and site for his dam and canal, and a right, by diligently pursuing his object, to acquire a future right to the possession of the water, which, when acquired, shall, for the purposes of priority and of redressing any injuries that may thereafter accrue, date by relation from the first act in selecting the location and making the claim." (Italics ours.) Such claimant had no immediate right to the control or use of the water, because he was not yet ready to take it. And he had no right to damages from any one who used the water while he was making his dam and ditch. It does not follow, from this, that he had no right at all. On the contrary, it was declared that as soon as he began work on his dam and ditch, with the avowed intent thereby to take and use the water, he acquired a prior right respecting the water. In Maeris v. Bicknell, supra, the facts were that plaintiffs' grantors, not intending to use the water, but for the purpose of draining it away from their mining claims, had constructed a ditch, which carried the water away, but they had made no actual use of it. Meantime, defendants diverted the water above plaintiffs' ditch and had used it. The court said: "Unless the grantors of plaintiff had constructed their ditch with the intention of using the water for mining or other useful purposes, or after its construction they had actually so applied it, the defendants could not know that they ever would so apply it, or intended so to apply it. If, at the time plaintiff's ditch was made, such intention had existed and been avowed, and afterwards carried out in good faith within a reasonable time, considering all the circumstances, then defendants could not, by any act of theirs, rightfully appropriate any water in the ravine, necessary to fill the ditch of plaintiff." (Italics ours.) There is no case, arising prior to the enactment of the Code, which holds that the party, who thus in good faith began and diligently prosecuted the work on a dam and ditch for the diversion and use of water, could not protect his incipient right to the water, against the hostile diversions and claims of others, by an appropriate suit for that purpose. It is obvious that this could not be so. Such visible act and avowed intent gave him a conditional right to the future use of the water, prior to its actual use; the condition being that he should thereafter diligently continue the work to completion and then divert the water and apply it to a useful purpose, failing which his right would cease. Upon the performance of these conditions, his title to such use would become complete and perfect. In the meantime, however, he had an existing conditional right, manifested by actual visible possession of the works. It would be clearly a property right, and, it being incidental and appurtenant to land, it was real property. Civ. Code, § 658.

The purpose of the Code was to afford a more perfect protection for such rights and to facilitate the subsequent acquisition of the title to the use. Previously, the incomplete right could be acquired only by some open visible work to that end, upon the ground, accompanied by a declaration of the intent. Disputes would naturally arise as to priority between different diversions from the same stream at places far apart. The Code endeavors to avoid this by providing for the posting of a notice at the proposed dam, and declaring that such notice secures a prior right, without any work, for the period of 60 days thereafter. Wells v. Mantes, 99 Cal. 586, 34 Pac. 324. Thus there is given that which it is said did not exist before (Kelly v. Natoma Water Co., supra), a constructive right to the use of the water, a right existing only by publicly declared intent, and which may be made a perfect and complete title, as against all except prior users and riparian owners, by beginning the work within 60 days, diligently prosecuting it to completion, and thereupon actually using the water. This incomplete right, although not as yet a title, is an interest in the realty. Under section 738, Code of Civil Procedure, the person who has an interest in real property may maintain an action to determine the validity of a conflicting claim which is adverse to his own claim. It follows that the first count states a cause of action and that the general demurrer thereto should have been overruled.

The objection to the second count is wholly technical, and, as it may be obviated by amendment, it is not necessary to consider it.

The briefs discuss at length the effect of the amendment of 1907 to section 1416 of the Civil Code, and of an amendment of 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 1419) to the same section. The latter omits the amendments of 1907, in effect repealing them. The amendment of 1907 purported to give one who had posted such notice, in a case where there were "conflicting claims to the waters so appropriated," a right to begin a suit to determine such claims within 60 days from the time of posting, and it extended the time for beginning the work to 60 days after final judgment in such suit, provided it was diligently prosecuted. A field of inquiry is thus presented upon which we will not enter. Does this apply to notices posted prior to the passage of the amendment? Does it apply where the so-called conflicting claim is a mere assertion, or must there be a physical exercise of the right claimed, and one of such a character that it actually prevents or interferes with the beginning of diversion works under the notice? And must all this be alleged? Does the repeal of these provisions, after this suit was begun, terminate the extension of time thereby granted? These are interesting questions; but as the plaintiff's time appears to be still running by virtue of the extension provided in section 1422, which is not repealed, we deem it unnecessary to determine them.

The judgment is reversed.

KELLOGG v. MALLORY et al. (Sac. 1,909.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 13, 1911. Rehearing Denied Jan. 12, 1912.)

1. Appeal and Error (§ 1010*)—Questions Reviewable—Findings—Conclusiveness.

Where an appeal is taken too late to allow a review of the findings on the ground that they are not supported by evidence, such findings as are responsive to the issues are conclusive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1010.*]

2. Vendor and Purchaser (§ 185*)—Contracts—Time of the Essence—Forfeiture.

Where a contract for the sale of real estate, stipulating for payment in installments, made time of the essence, and the purchaser made default, and the vendor did not acquiesce therein, and no equitable ground for relief was shown, the contract was terminated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 369-372; Dec. Dig. § 185.*]

3. Vendor and Purchaser (§ 3*)—Contracts—Construction.

A complaint alleged that plaintiff was indebted to defendant for $438.13 for money received to make the first payment on a proposed purchase of land from a third person, which land plaintiff was about to purchase; that the third person, at plaintiff's request, contracted to sell the land to defendant for $1,220.85, payable in cash and in annual installments; that on the same day defendant contracted to sell the same to plaintiff for $1,659.03, which was the aggregate of the sum to be paid by defendant to the third person and the sum which plaintiff owed to defendant. The complaint did not allege that the latter sum had been paid by defendant to the third person on account of the purchase of the land or that the full price, so far as the third person was concerned, was more than $1,220.85. Held, that defendant's agreement with plaintiff was simply one for the sale by defendant to plaintiff of the land, and defendant did not hold the land in trust for plaintiff.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; John G. Covert, Judge.

Action by H. E. Kellogg against H. Mallory and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. R. McQuiddy and Frank E. Kilpatrick, for appellant. O. L. Abbott, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendants in an action brought by plaintiff to obtain specific performance of a contract between himself and defendant Mallory relative to certain land in Kings county, Cal.

[1] The appeal was taken nearly six months after the entry of judgment, and more than four months after the statement on appeal was settled. It is admitted by plaintiff, in accord with the claim of defendants, that the appeal was taken too late to allow a review by this court of any exception to the decision of the trial court on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence. Such findings of the trial court as are responsive to the issues made by the pleadings are therefore conclusive upon us.

[2] Considering the action as one for the specific enforcement of a contract for the sale of certain land by Mallory to plaintiff, which was apparently the theory of the framers of the complaint, we are satisfied that the judgment is fully supported by the pleadings and the findings on such issues as were made thereby. Substantially, the facts thus established are as follows: On December 3, 1906, Mallory and plaintiff entered into a written agreement, whereby Mallory agreed to sell and convey the property to plaintiff for $1,659.03, $211.63 thereof being paid in cash, and the remaining $1,447.40 being payable in yearly installments on October 1st of each year to and including the year 1914; all of said deferred payments being evidenced by promissory notes of the same date, bearing interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, payable annually. By the terms of said agreement plaintiff was entitled to the possession of the property. It was provided in such agreement as follows: "It is understood and agreed that time is of the essence of this agreement and in each and every one of the terms, conditions and provisions hereof, and that the terms hereof shall bind the heirs, successors and assigns of the parties hereto. It is understood and agreed that if at any time the second party shall be in default in the performance of any of the terms, covenants and provisions of this agreement that all of his rights hereunder shall be forfeited and at an end, * * * and all payments made under this agreement shall be deemed full compensation for the use, rent and occupation of said land during the time the second party shall have remained in possession thereof under this agreement; provided, that whenever the second party shall be in default in any of the terms and conditions of this agreement, if allowed to remain upon said premises by the first party he shall hold and occupy the same as the tenant of the first party subject to the right of the first party to demand and receive immediate possession thereof from the second party as such tenant."

Plaintiff neglected and refused to pay to Mallory the sum of $177.17 due on October 1, 1909, evidenced by promissory note maturing that day, and also neglected and refused to pay $51.27 interest due on that day on that and five remaining installments evidenced by notes maturing respectively on October 1st of the years 1910 to 1914, both inclusive, and defendant did not consent to nor acquiesce in such neglect and refusal. So far as the complaint shows, it was not until November 29, 1909, that plaintiff notified Mallory that he was desirous of paying any additional money on the contract, and on that date he notified him in writing that he would pay all amounts remaining due on December 8, 1909, at a specified place; but Mallory, who in the meantime had transferred his interest in said land to defendant Abbott, never consented to receive the same or in any way waived the default of plaintiff in the matter of the payments due October 1, 1909. Nothing is alleged in the complaint tending to excuse the failure of plaintiff to comply with the contract in the matter of such payments, or tending to show any equitable grounds for relieving him from the effect of such failure, or tending to show any reason why Mallory should be held to have consented to delay in the matter of payments or estopped to claim that the contract was terminated by such failure. These are the material facts established by the pleadings and certain findings within the issues. Plaintiff's claim as to what the evidence introduced on the trial showed in this behalf cannot be considered on this appeal, in view of the fact that the appeal was taken too late to allow us to consider the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings. We know of no rule of law that would authorize a court to enforce against the vendor a contract for the sale of real estate where, by the express provisions of the contract, all of the rights of the vendee have terminated by reason of his failure to make certain payments at a specified time, and there has been no consent to, waiver of, or acquiescence in, such failure by the vendor, or any pretense of facts excusing such failure of the vendee for tending to show equitable ground for his relief. Under its express provisions, the contract of sale is terminated. Such is the case before us, as shown by the pleadings and findings.

[3] Plaintiff claims in his briefs presented on this appeal that facts alleged in the complaint and admitted by the answer show that the relation between him and Mallory was in reality not that of mere vendor and vendee under a contract for the sale of real estate. It was alleged in the complaint that on December 3, 1906, plaintiff was indebted to Mallory in the sum of about $438.13 for money had and received by him to make the first payment on account of a proposed purchase of these lands from The Laguna Lands, a corporation, the owner thereof, which said lands "plaintiff then desired and was about to purchase"; that said corporation, on December 3, 1906, at plaintiff's request, entered into a contract whereby it agreed to sell such lands to Mallory, for $1,220.85, payable $305.21 in cash and $915.64 in annual installments on October 1st of each of the years 1907 to and including 1914, with interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum; that on the same day plaintiff and Mallory entered into the contract of sale hereinbefore described; and that the full consideration specified therein, $1,659.03, was the aggregate amount of the sum agreed to be paid by Mallory to The Laguna Lands for the land, and the sum of $438.13 owed by plaintiff to Mallory. It was not alleged that such $438.13 so received by plaintiff from Mallory had been paid by him to The Laguna Lands on account of the purchase price of such land, or that the full price of the land, so far as the owner was concerned, was more than the amount stated in the contract with Mallory, viz., $1,220.85. Upon these allegations alone, it is now claimed that the transaction between plaintiff and Mallory was simply one by which Mallory was to take the agreement from the owner as security for the payment to him by plaintiff of the purchase price, which he was to advance to the owner for the plaintiff, and that in accord with the doctrine of such cases as Campbell v. Freeman, 99 Cal. 546, 34 Pac. 113, plaintiff was the real purchaser, and Mallory occupied the relation to him of trustee of the legal title and mortgagee for such money as might be advanced by him for its purchase and for the additional indebtedness referred to. It may be conceded that the facts so alleged would afford strong grounds for a conclusion by a court sustaining allegations of a complaint declaring some understanding between Mallory and plaintiff by which Mallory was to advance the purchase money for plaintiff and take the title to the land as security. But the difficulty with plaintiff's claim in this behalf is that there is nothing in the nature of such an allegation. We have stated all the allegations that bear upon this matter. While not inconsistent with the present claim of plaintiff that Mallory was to pay the purchase price to the owner for plaintiff, and take the title in his own name as security, they are likewise not necessarily inconsistent with the theory that there was no such understanding between Mallory and plaintiff, and that the two contracts, that between the owner and Mallory and that between Mallory and plaintiff, were entirely separate and distinct transactions, in the former of which plaintiff had no interest whatever, and there is no allegation or pretense of allegation of the ultimate fact of such an understanding as is, under these circumstances, essential to a maintenance of plaintiff's claim. So far as appears from the complaint, the two contracts were absolutely separate and distinct, and Mallory's arrangement with plaintiff was simply one for the sale to him of certain real property. We are aware of no case in which one who has in fact paid the purchase money for real estate conveyed to him has been held to be the trustee of another on the ground that he so paid it on behalf of another who was the real purchaser, in the absence of allegation that he did pay it for such other person, or where one holding the legal title to land has been held to be only the mortgagee thereof in the absence of allegation that the legal title has been conveyed to him as security for an indebtedness. It seems clear that the complaint before us presented no such case as is now urged, but that it was solely a complaint for the specific performance of a contract between Mallory and plaintiff for the sale of real estate by Mallory to plaintiff. This was doubtless the theory of the judge of the trial court.

The judgment is affirmed.

BROADBENT v. KEITH. (Civ. 1,036.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 7, 1911.)

ELECTIONS (§ 305*)—CONTESTS—APPEAL—DISMISSAL.

It appearing on appeal in a municipal election contest that respondent has resigned the office, and appellant has been appointed thereto to fill a vacancy, and that the public has no interest in the appeal, it is properly dismissed on agreement of the parties.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Election contest by Andrew E. Broadbent against John M. Keith. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Appeal dismissed.

See, also, 15 Cal. App. 382, 114 Pac. 996.

Shaw, Ross & Dyke, for appellant. Conkling & Brown, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an election contest involving the office of marshal of the city of Imperial, Cal. It appears from a statement in writing, filed by the attorneys for appellant herein, that plaintiff and respondent has voluntarily resigned the office of marshal of the city of Imperial, to which he was declared elected, and that defendant and appellant has been appointed by the board of trustees of said city of Imperial to fill said vacancy, which office he now holds, and it appearing by reason of the facts recited the public can have no interest in the result of said appeal, and the appellant having consented thereto.

It is therefore ordered that the appeal herein be, and the same is, dismissed.

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1109*) — APPEAL — DISMISSAL.

Where there is no evidence in the record of an appeal from the judgment or from an order denying a motion for a new trial, if such order was made, and no briefs have been filed, the record will be stricken from the files.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Norton, Judge.

James Tate was convicted of an offense, and he appeals. Record stricken from files.

Charles de Legh and Fred A. Copestake, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, for the People.

HART, J. This cause was on the October, 1911, calendar of this court, and submitted on the record.

There is no evidence in the record of an appeal having been taken from the judgment or an order denying the defendant a new trial, if such an order was made. Obviously, therefore, this court has not acquired jurisdiction to review the record. Moreover, there are no briefs filed in the cause, and, if an appeal had been taken, the same would have to be dismissed for a failure of appellant to file a brief, assuming that he would have omitted to do so, had he taken an appeal, either from the judgment or the order denying him a new trial, if a motion of that character was made and denied. People v. Perry, 117 Pac. 1036.

For the foregoing reasons, the record will have to be stricken from the files of the court, and it is so ordered.

2. Courts (§ 212*)—Jurisdiction—Amount in Controversy.

Under Const. art. 6, § 4, providing that the District Courts of Appeal shall have jurisdiction in cases at law, where the demand does not exceed $2,000, an appeal in an action to recover property alleged to be of the value of $6,000, and demanding judgment for that sum, if a delivery could not be had, should be taken directly to the Supreme Court.

N. F. Coombs, John T. York, and F. L. Coombs, for appellant. T. L. Coombs, for interveners. F. E. Johnston, H. L. Johnston, and L. E. Johnston, for respondent.

HART, J. This is a direct appeal to this court from the judgment on the judgment roll alone. The complaint alleges that the property, for the recovery of which the action was brought, is of the value of $6,000, and demands judgment for that sum in case a delivery thereof cannot be had.

[1] It is the settled rule in this state that, "where jurisdiction depends on the amount in controversy, the ad damnum clause of the complaint is the sole test." Henigan v. Ervin, 110 Cal. 37, 42 Pac. 457.

[2] This court has appellate jurisdiction in such cases at law only where "the demand, exclusive of interest, or the value of the property in controversy, amounts to three hundred dollars, and does not amount to two thousand dollars." Article 6, § 4, Const.

The cause was therefore erroneously brought to this court by direct appeal and will have to be transferred to the Supreme Court.

Such is the order.

PEOPLE v. BARLOW. (Cr. 215.)

1. Criminal Law (§ 1159*)—Appeal—Review—Question of Law.

On an appeal by defendant in a criminal case, the appellate court will reverse the judgment because unsupported by the evidence only where there is an entire absence of evidence to support the verdict, under the rule that on such appeals only questions of law will be considered, since, if the evidence against accused considered without regard to conflicting evidence tends to support the verdict, the question is one of fact on which the determination of the jury and the trial court is conclusive.

2. Assault and Battery (§ 89*)—Abusing Children—Evidence.

3. Assault and Battery (§ 92*)—Abusing Female Child—Evidence.

[1] Appellant's sole contention is that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict of the jury. The rule is well settled that upon an appeal by a defendant in a criminal case this court will pass only upon questions of law, and it is only where there is an entire absence of evidence to support a verdict that a question of law is presented. "If the evidence which bears against the defendant, considered by itself, and without regard to conflicting evidence, tends to support the verdict, the question ceases to be one of law—of which alone this court has jurisdiction—and becomes one of fact, upon which the decision of the jury and the trial court is final and conclusive." People v. Saunders, 13 Cal. App. 746, 110 Pac. 825. Under this rule, the question is whether the evidence offered by the prosecution—none whatever being adduced by the defendant—tended to support the verdict.

[2] The facts which the evidence tends to establish are as follows: That defendant for the first time met the prosecutrix, a girl of eight years of age, upon the sidewalk near what is known as the roller coaster at Long Beach; that he gave her some oranges and a sandwich, and told her to go down under the roller coaster, stating that he would meet her there. She did as requested, and defendant shortly afterwards joined her. She testified that she could not remember whether defendant put his hands upon her, or what he did, while they were down under the roller coaster. Nevertheless the child's testimony was material, in that it tended to prove the relation existing between herself and defendant prior to the meeting to be that of strangers.

[3] An officer connected with the police force saw defendant sitting with the girl under the roller coaster, which was to some extent at least protected from the view of passersby and others in the vicinity, and from a place of concealment 50 or 60 feet distant he watched them. His testimony was that defendant, among other things done by him, pulled the child's dress up above her knees, and repeatedly placed his hand up as far as he could get it under her dress. While he could not and did not state that the defendant placed his hand upon her privates, nevertheless, there could be no doubt from his testimony, if the jury believed it, as to the fact that defendant did commit lewd and lascivious acts with the child, as charged in the information, nor as to the intent with which the acts were done.

The jury appears to have been prompt in reaching a verdict of defendant's guilt, and, under the evidence, this court cannot say that it was not justified in its conclusion.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

HARVEY et al. v. MEIGS et al. (Civ. 850.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 31, 1911.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 190*)—ACTION BY STOCKHOLDERS — MISAPPROPRIATION OF FUNDS — PLEADING—COMPLAINT.

Where a complaint by stockholders of a corporation alleges that the defendants have standing in their names on the books of the corporation more than a majority of its outstanding shares, and have combined and conspired to accomplish unlawful purposes, and to that end have elected directors subservient to their wishes who had no interest in the corporation except to work out the will and interests of defendants as their implements and representatives, and the defendants have, at all times mentioned in the complaint, dictated and do now dictate all the acts of the directors of the corporation; that the defendants "have, by virtue of their control of such corporation and its board of directors," appropriated and converted money belonging to it, and through such control of the board of directors have created a fictitious indebtedness against said corporation and in favor of defendants, etc.—although it does not show who were the directors or directly aver that directors were chosen at the organization of the corporation, or that they or their successors continued to act as such throughout the times mentioned in the complaint, such facts appear inferentially, and as it clearly appears that the defendants worked their purposes through the directors, it presents sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action.

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 190*)—ACTIONS BY STOCKHOLDERS—MISAPPROPRIATION OF FUNDS—PARTIES—DIRECTORS.

In an action by minority stockholders against the majority stockholders for wrongful acts and misuse of corporate funds, alleged to have been consummated with the aid and through the board of directors, the directors should have been made parties in order that complete relief might be afforded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 729; Dec. Dig. § 190.*]

3. PLEADING (§§ 192, 356*) — DEMURRER — SCOPE—DEFECTS APPARENT ON FACE.

That an amended complaint was filed without previous leave of court obtained is a question which cannot be raised by demurrer, which goes only to the defects apparent on the face of the pleading; the proper method of raising the question being by motion to strike it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 426, 1111; Dec. Dig. §§ 192, 356.*]

4. ACTION (§ 38*)—MISJOINDER OF CAUSES—ACTION BY STOCKHOLDERS.

Though a complaint in an action by stockholders of a corporation alleges a conspiracy on the part of majority members in control of the corporation and in pursuance thereto the misappropriation of the money of the corporation, the fraudulent issue of stock to the same parties charged with the misappropriation, and other acts of a similar nature, the acts are a part of a general design, and equity will relieve all in the same action, so that the complaint is not open to the objection that several causes of action have been improperly joined.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Action, Cent. Dig. § 549; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

5. CORPORATIONS (§ 190*)—ACTIONS BY STOCKHOLDERS — MISAPPROPRIATION OF FUNDS—RIGHT TO SUE.

Minority stockholders may bring an action against the majority members for the misappropriation of corporate funds, though plaintiffs became stockholders after such misappropriation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 723; Dec. Dig. § 190.*]

6. CORPORATIONS (§ 190*)—ACTIONS BY STOCKHOLDERS — MISAPPROPRIATION OF FUNDS — PLEADING.

A complaint by minority stockholders against the majority members charging a misappropriation of corporate funds is not ambiguous, though it does not show that the defendants were stockholders and owning a majority of the stock at the time of the alleged commission of the acts set forth therein, where it is alleged that defendants appeared on the books of the corporation to be the owners of such stock.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 730; Dec. Dig. § 190.*]

7. CORPORATIONS (§ 190*)—ACTIONS BY STOCKHOLDERS—MISAPPROPRIATION OF FUNDS—PLEADING.

Where a complaint in an action by minority stockholders against the majority members for a misappropriation of corporate funds alleges that the defendants, who appeared as majority stockholders on the books of the corporation, controlled the board of directors at all times since the corporation was organized, it is immaterial who were the board of directors, as the action is against the defendants, and the complaint is not ambiguous for failing to allege who were directors constituting a majority of the board at the time of the alleged commission of the acts complained of.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 730; Dec. Dig. § 190.*]

8. CORPORATIONS (§ 190*) — ACTIONS BY STOCKHOLDERS—MISAPPROPRIATION OF FUNDS—PLEADING.

Where a complaint by minority stockholders charges the majority members, who appear to practically constitute its managing body, with a misappropriation of the funds, an allegation that during the times mentioned the defendants have withdrawn and taken a certain sum of money belonging to the corporation, and have converted and appropriated the same to their own use and benefit, avers with sufficient certainty the manner and times of the alleged appropriation and conversion.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by T. Norman Harvey and another against F. M. Meigs and others. From a judgment for defendants, on demurrer to an amended complaint, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Charles C. Boynton, for appellants. J. C. Campbell and R. G. Hudson, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. J. A general and special demurrer to the fourth amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend, and defendants had judgment that plaintiffs take nothing by the action. The appeal is from the judgment.

In their said amended complaint the plaintiffs allege that they bring the action "on behalf of the said Carisa Chemical Company, and on behalf of themselves and all other stockholders of said Carisa Chemical Company; that the said company has been a corporation ever since the month of August, 1904, with a capital of 1,000,000 shares of the actual value of $1 each at the time of issue, and that the number of directors is and at all times has been 5; that plaintiff Harvey is and ever since a date prior to the commencement of the action has been a bona fide owner and holder of 100 shares of the stock of said corporation, and plaintiff Benedict is and ever since the month of February, 1906, has been the owner and holder of 1,900 shares of the capital stock of said corporation; that defendants F. M. Meigs and A. W. Meigs are, and at all times mentioned in the complaint have been, copartners under the name of Meigs & Co." (The original complaint was filed November 7, 1908.) It is then alleged that the individual defendants named "acquired, and at all times since the organization of the defendant corporation have controlled, and are controlling, and have, and have had, standing in their names on the books of said corporation a majority of the outstanding stock of said corporation, and said defendants at all said times have combined and conspired together to accomplish the unlawful and fraudulent acts and purposes herein alleged, and to that end to elect the directors and dictate the acts of the directors of said corporation and the acts of said corporation, and said defendants have at all said times, for the purpose of consummating the ends of said conspiracy, caused to be elected men constituting a majority of the board of directors of said corporation in every way subservient to the wishes and will of said defendants, and men who had no interest in the management and conduct of the affairs of said corporation except as the implements and representatives of the interests and will of said defendants, and at all said times defendants dictated, and do now dictate, all the acts of the directors of said corporation and all of the acts of said corporation."

It is then averred that by reason of the foregoing facts it "has been futile and useless for plaintiffs to make any demand upon the said corporation or its directors to commence this, or any, action against defendants," and that during the times mentioned in the complaint over $135,000 came into the ownership and possession of the corporation, and the defendants "have, by virtue of their control of said corporation and its board of directors, fraudulently and wrongfully taken and withdrawn from said corporation, and have appropriated and converted to their own use and benefit, without any consideration or benefit to the said corporation, in excess of ninety-four thousand dollars ($94,000) of said money of said corporation, which said money said defendants now retain and claim as their own property, and deny that said corporation has any interest in or right thereto."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It is further averred that defendants, "as part of said conspiracy, and with intent to defraud said corporation and its board of directors, have sought and endeavored to create an indebtedness, and have created a fictitious and fraudulent indebtedness against said corporation and in favor of defendants" (other than defendant Upham). "That said defendants have caused such fictitious indebtedness to be inscribed on the books of the defendant corporation as an indebtedness of said corporation under and as of date August 31, 1908, and as on said day pretended balances appear on said books to the credit of the following-named firm and persons, and the amount to the credit of any firm or person immediately follows the name of the firm or person in whose favor said credit appears, as follows, to wit:" (Then follow the items aggregating over $49,000.) "That the fact is, there is not due, owing, and unpaid to F. M. Meigs, A. W. Meigs, R. L. Meigs, Meigs & Co., E. C. Dudley, L. Raymond Dudley, W. I. Wilcox, Charles L. Morgan, or any of them, from said corporation, nor was there due, owing or unpaid at such date as said balances appear, or at any prior date, or at all, to said persons, or any of them, any sum of money whatsoever from said corporation; and any indebtedness appearing upon the books of said corporation as due from said corporation to said persons, or either of them, is and has been at all times, fictitious, fraudulent and void, and without consideration, and has been created by said defendants for the purpose of transferring the assets of the corporation from the defendant corporation to themselves, with the purpose of enriching themselves, and that said defendants threaten to, and will, unless restrained, withdraw such sums appearing in said credits, and cause same to be paid to themselves, and will thereby injure the defendant corporation to an amount exceeding forty-nine thousand dollars ($49,000).

"(7) That said defendants, other than defendant corporation, with intent to defraud the defendant corporation, have claimed, and do now claim, to be the owners of, and have, by virtue of their said control of said corporation, caused themselves to appear upon the books of said corporation as the owners of more than four hundred thousand (400,000) shares of the subscribed and outstanding stock of the defendant corporation, and they do now appear as such owners, whereas the total subscribed and outstanding stock of said corporation does not exceed six hundred and eighty-two thousand and fifty-five (682,055) shares; that of said four hundred thousand more than three hundred and fifty thousand (350,000) shares have been issued fraudulently and without any consideration whatsoever to said corporation; that such improper issues of stock were made directly to these defendants, and were so made as to enable, and did enable, these defendants to control and manage the affairs and business of said corporation, and to continue in such control and management for the purpose of carrying out the fraudulent acts and the conspiracy herein alleged to the grievous injury of these plaintiffs and of the defendant corporation; that the value of said three hundred and fifty thousand (350,000) shares of stock fraudulently appropriated by said defendants and their agents was at the time of said appropriation three hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($350,000)."

It is then alleged that "plaintiffs herein and their transferrers, until within one month prior to the time of commencing this action, had no knowledge, nor ever had knowledge, of the acts, transactions and attempted transactions herein complained of; that they never authorized them or any part of them; that they never consented to them or any part of them; * * * that they have no redress through the corporate management, and that they are without any plain, adequate, certain and speedy remedy at law."

An accounting to the corporation by the defendants is prayed for; that a discovery be had of the amount of damage to said corporation; that defendants be compelled to refund to the corporation the money misappropriated by them, to wit, $94,000, with interest; that the alleged fraudulent credits appearing on the corporation books to defendants be canceled, that the alleged fraudulent shares, namely, 350,000 shares, of the said capital stock be canceled, or that defendants be required to pay to the corporation its value; that defendants be enjoined from paying to themselves, or causing to be paid to them, the said sums standing on the books of the corporation to their credit; also from voting said shares of stock alleged to have been fraudulently issued to them; from disposing of any of the money or property of the corporation; from acting in any trust capacity in the management of said corporation and for general relief.

Defendants not only challenge the sufficiency of the alleged facts but they assign numerous defects in the complaint which may be thus summarized: (1) That there is a misjoinder of parties, in that plaintiff Benedict was joined as plaintiff without leave of court, and, for like reason, defendants R. L. Meigs, Dudley, and Wilcox were joined as defendants. (2) That several causes of action are improperly united, namely, a cause of action for conspiracy; for moneys fraudulently appropriated and converted; for cancellation of fraudulent issues of stock; for an accounting and injunction. (3) That the complaint is ambiguous in that it cannot be ascertained therefrom whether plaintiffs Harvey and Benedict were stockholders at the time the alleged wrongful acts were committed; or that the defendants were stockholders of a majority of the stock at such time; or who were directors or a majority of the board at such time; or whether the alleged conspiracy was consummated by defendants as stockholders or as directors or officers of the corporation; or in what manner plaintiffs have been injured by any of the alleged wrongful acts of defendants; or in what manner or at what time defendants are alleged to have appropriated and converted the sum of $94,000 as alleged. Like grounds are set forth as showing the uncertainty and unintelligibility of the complaint.

We are without any assistance from the respondents, no brief having been filed by them. One of two inferences might seem to follow; either that the complaint is so obviously insufficient as to call for no explanation of its defects, or that, as obviously, its sufficiency is apparent. And yet we are not at liberty to indulge either inference. I take this opportunity to remark that it is due to the reviewing court that counsel should exend to it all possible assistance in its endeavor to reach right conclusions in cases brought before it. Briefs of counsel have a double value in that they serve to lighten the labor of the reviewing court, thus facilitating the decision of cases, and in that they often present points of view which might otherwise be overlooked. For myself, I may say that rarely, if ever, have I found a brief without value in the determination of the case in which it is filed, and I am glad to acknowledge the great service to the court which counsel generally extend by their presentation of points and authorities. I desire to add that where a plaintiff is sent out of court on his pleading, without a hearing on the merits of his case, the adversary party should support the grounds of his assault and not throw all responsibility upon the appellate court unaided.

[1] Passing for the moment the alleged imperfections of the complaint suggested by the special demurrer, I think enough appears in the complaint to withstand the general demurrer.

It appears from the amended complaint: That plaintiff Benedict was, in 1906, and ever since has been, a stockholder of the corporation, and plaintiff Harvey was such stockholder prior to and at the commencement of the action. That the Carisa Chemical Company became a corporation in 1904 with a capital stock of $1,000,000, of like number of shares of the value of $1 each, and that each share thereof at the time of issue had an actual value of $1. That the persons named as defendants have had standing in their names on the books of the corporation more than a majority of its outstanding shares ever since the organization of the corporation, and have combined and conspired to accomplish the unlawful purposes alleged, and to that end have elected directors subservient to their wishes who had no interest in the corporation except to work out the will and interests of defendants as their "implements and representatives," and the defendants have, at all times mentioned in the complaint, "dictated and do now dictate, all the acts of the directors of said corporation and all the acts of the said corporation. That during the times mentioned in the complaint the corporation came into the possession and ownership of the sum of $135,000, and that defendants "have, by virtue of their control of said corporation and its board of directors, fraudulently and wrongfully taken and withdrawn from said corporation, and have appropriated and converted to their own use and benefit, without any consideration or benefit to said corporation, in excess of $94,000 of said money," and still retain the same. That "as a part of said conspiracy and with intent to defraud said corporation," through their said control of its board of directors, defendants have created "a fictitious and fraudulent indebtedness against said corporation and in favor of defendants (naming all the defendants except defendant Upham), and in the execution of said fraudulent design have caused said fictitious indebtedness to be entered on the books of the corporation so as to show credits to certain named defendants. amounting to over $49,000, whereas in fact no such sum or any sum is due or owing to said defendants, but that the said credit entries are fraudulent and were made by defendants without any consideration to the corporation, and for the sole purpose of "enriching themselves" to the extent of such credits. That the entire issued shares of said corporation do not exceed 682,035 shares, of which defendants "caused themselves to appear on the books of said corporation as owners" of 400,000 shares, but that 350,000 of said shares have been issued fraudulently and without any consideration whatsoever to said corporation." That said shares were issued to defendants "so as to enable and did enable these defendants to control and manage the affairs and business of said corporation, and to continue in such control and management for the purpose of carrying out the fraudulent acts and the conspiracy herein alleged to the grievous injury of these plaintiffs and of the defendant corporation." That "the value of said 350,000 shares of said stock so fraudulently appropriated by said defendants and their agents was at the time of said appropriation $350,000."

It does not appear who were the directors, nor does it appear by direct averment that directors were chosen at the organization of the corporation, or that they, or their successors continued to act as such throughout the times mentioned, although these latter facts appear inferentially. As the business of the corporation could only be transacted through its directors the acts complained of could not have been consummated otherwise than by the aid of the directors, and it does appear very clearly that the defendants worked their purpose through the directors, from all which appearing in the complaint it may be inferred from the complaint that directors were in fact elected and were acting, during the period mentioned. The demurrer admits the truth of the facts pleaded and it seems to me that sufficient facts are sufficiently pleaded to constitute a cause of action for appropriate relief.

[2] I think, however, that the directors of the corporation should have been made parties to the action and as the personnel of the board has not changed so far as appears, complete relief cannot be afforded without their being brought in as codefendants. The special demurrer is next to demand notice.

[3] 1. A question is raised as to the right to include new parties plaintiff and defendant in an amended complaint under a claim that it was done without previous leave of court obtained. The answer to this objection raised by the demurrer is that the reviewing court deals only with the amended complaint, which it must be presumed was filed by leave of court, otherwise the proper proceeding on defendant's part was by motion to strike out. In Beattie Mfg. Co. v. Gerardi, 166 Mo. 142, 65 S. W. 1035, the court said: "When the amended petition was filed, the one of which it was amendatory was suspended; and as a demurrer goes only to some defect apparent upon the face of the pleading demurred to, this ground was in any event unavailing, and the question could only have been raised by motion to strike out."

[4] 2. It is claimed that several causes of action have been improperly united. The alleged conspiracy is not of the gist of the action; it is the acts done pursuant to the alleged confederation that constitute the cause of action. I can see no reason why a court of equity may not in the same action grant relief against the fraudulent misappropriation of money of the corporation, inquire into the fraudulent issue of stock to the same parties charged with such misappropriation, take an accounting to determine the extent of any misappropriation, and also grant an injunction if necessary to prevent similar acts. Especially must this be so when it appears that all the acts complained of are part of a common design. Taylor v. Bidwell, 65 Cal. 489, 4 Pac. 491; Wickersham v. Crittenden, 93 Cal. 17, 28 Pac. 788. Said the court in the case last cited: "It is often necessary, in order that the plaintiff may obtain full justice, that the relief granted him be as varied and diversified as the means that have been employed by the defendant to produce the grievance complained of."

3. It is next claimed that it cannot be seen from the complaint that plaintiffs were stockholders at the time of the alleged commission of the acts therein set forth. The complaint shows that one of the plaintiffs (Harvey) was a stockholder at the commencement of the action, which was Nevember 7, 1908, and that the other, Benedict, was a stockholder in February, 1906. Whether plaintiff Harvey became a stockholder by purchase from one who was a holder of shares at the time of the alleged fraudulent transaction, or whether he became a stockholder by subscription to the stock, does not appear. Mr. Morowitz says that "less the plaintiff's right of action, if he have any, is derived by purchase and transfer from the former holder of the shares." Morowitz on Corporations, § 265. He further says: "It has been pointed out that the estate of a corporation is to be treated as that of a continuing institution, irrespective of the members at any particular time composing it. Each share represents an interest in the entire concern, and the several holders are entitled to equal rights irrespective of the time when they acquired their shares. Causes of action belonging to the corporation increase the value of the corporate estate and must be treated like other assets. When enforced they inure to the benefit of all the stockholders without distinction." Section 265. I cannot reconcile this statement with the author's other statement that "a shareholder who has acquired his shares after an unauthorized transaction has taken place certainly cannot base his complaint on the ground that he has suffered a wrong, or that his equitable rights have been infringed."

[5] However this may be, both plaintiffs in any view have, on the showing made in the complaint, a right to prevent the payment of the fraudulent credits shown to stand on the company's books in favor of defendants. And if the defendants have without consideration and fraudulently appropriated $94,000 of the corporate funds which should be restored to its treasury, I fail to see why they have not a cause of action to compel such return even though they acquired their shares after such misappropriation. See the question fully considered in Just v. Idaho Canal & Irr. Co., 16 Idaho, 639, 102 Pac. 381, 133 Am. St. Rep. 140.

[6] 4. Ambiguity is alleged also because the complaint does not show that defendants were stockholders "and owning a majority of the stock at the time of the alleged commission of the acts set forth." It does appear that at all times since the organization of the defendant corporation the defendants have had standing in their names on the books of the corporation a majority of the shares, and that they have controlled the directors and the corporation. The complaint does not allege that defendants were the owners of these shares, but it alleges that they appear on said books to be the owners. Their relation to the corporation and the means of their control over it sufficiently appear.

[7] 5. It is alleged that the complaint is ambiguous because it cannot be ascertained therefrom who were directors constituting a majority of the board at the time of the alleged commission of the acts complained of. It does appear that defendants controlled the entire board at all times since the corporation was organized and so far as defendants are concerned it is not material who were directors, for the action is against the defendants and not against the directors. As already intimated the directors should be made parties, for complete relief cannot be had otherwise.

6. It sufficiently appears how and in what manner plaintiffs are being and have been injured by the alleged wrongful acts of the defendants.

[8] 7. The complaint is sufficiently certain in its averments as to the manner and times defendants appropriated and converted to their own use the $94,000 alleged to have been wrongfully withdrawn from the corporation by them. In Schaake v. Eagle Automatic C. Co., 135 Cal. 472, 63 Pac. 1025, 67 Pac. 759, the court said: "Faults consisting in ambiguities and uncertainties should be viewed, to a certain extent, in the light of the situation of the parties as to their knowledge of the facts; that is, as to facts of which the plaintiff cannot, from their nature, have as full information as the defendant. Less certainty is required in the allegations of the complaint, partly because a desirable degree of certainty may be impossible, and partly because the facts being known to the defendant he is not likely to be embarrassed or injured." The case here is one where the defendants practically constituted the managing body of the corporation, and must have had full knowledge of all the facts which they insist that plaintiffs must have alleged, though in no position to know or ascertain them.

I am unable to discover sufficient support for the judgment, and it is therefore reversed.

BRANDT v. SALOMONSON. (Civ. 843.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 8, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 5, 1912.)

1. PARTNERSHIP (§ 327*)—DISSOLUTION—ACCOUNTING—COMPLAINT.

A complaint, in an action for the dissolution of a firm and for an accounting, which alleges that defendant applied to his own use, from the profits of the business, money greatly exceeding the proportion thereof to which he was entitled, in the aggregate $3,000, more or less, and tools, building material, and machinery of the firm, to which he was not entitled, aggregating in value $3,000, more or less, proceeds on the theory that defendant has appropriated $3,000, more or less, more than he is entitled to, but states only an approximation of his appropriation, and does not preclude the court from finding the exact condition of the account.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Dec. Dig. § 327.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 173*)—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—QUESTIONS NOT RAISED IN TRIAL COURT.

Where, in an action for the dissolution of a firm and for an accounting, evidence of the amount appropriated by defendant was received without objection, it was too late for defendant on appeal to urge that plaintiff was limited to a judgment in a less sum, in view of the allegations of the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1079-1120; Dec. Dig. § 173.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thos. F. Graham, Judge.

Action by M. Brandt against Chris Salomonson. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Austin Lewis, for appellant. F. V. Meyers, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was for dissolution of partnership and for an accounting. The only controversy relates to the finding of the court that: "Defendant has taken and appropriated to his own use, and against the wish and without the consent of plaintiff, of the moneys and property of said partnership, exceeding the proportion thereof to which he was or is entitled, all as alleged in plaintiff's said complaint, money and property aggregating in value four thousand five hundred and thirty-four dollars and seventy-three cents."

[1, 2] The contention of appellant is that plaintiff has alleged in his complaint that defendant appropriated $6,000 belonging to the firm, and, since he was entitled to one-half of it as an equal partner, plaintiff is limited to a judgment for the recovery of only $3,000 against defendant. But in this appellant is in error. The allegation of the complaint is that: "The defendant applied to his own use, from the receipts and profits of said business, large sums of money, greatly exceeding the proportion thereof to which he was entitled, to wit, in the aggregate, the sum of $3,000, more or less, * * * and tools, building material, and machinery belonging to said partnership, to which he was not entitled, aggregating in value the sum of $3,000, more or less." As far as the allegation concerning the money is concerned, it is thus to be seen that the theory of the complaint is that defendant has appropriated $3,000, more or less, more than he is entitled to, or, in other words, to which plaintiff is entitled. Conceding that the averment as to the tools, etc., should be interpreted as claimed by appellant, it would leave $1,500 of their value to be paid to plaintiff, which, with the other $3,000, would be substantially the amount of the judgment in favor of plaintiff. But it is apparent that the amount stated in the complaint is intended to be only an approximation of the indebtedness of defendant, and the allegations should not be held to preclude the court from finding the exact condition of the account. Indeed, it is too late for appellant to make the point, since the evidence as to the whole amount appropriated by defendant was received without objection, and respondent points out in the record substantial support for the conclusion that the amount unaccounted for by defendant is $9,833.65 and by plaintiff the sum of $739.04. The aggregate is $10,572.69. Of this it is apparent that each is entitled to $5,286.34. Subtract this last sum from the sum unaccounted for by defendant, and the balance is $4,547.31, which defendant should pay to plaintiff to equalize the account. Respondent's figures are not disputed by appellant, and, upon an examination of the transcript, we cannot say that they are incorrect.

DYER LAW & COLLECTION CO. v. SALISBURY et al. (Civ. 1,051.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 7, 1911.)

Appeal and Error (§ 596*)—Taking Appeal—Requisites—Statutes.

Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, provides that any person desiring to appeal from the superior court to the Supreme Court or any of the District Courts of Appeal, in lieu of preparing and settling a bill of exceptions pursuant to section 650, may file with the clerk of the court from whose judgment the appeal is taken a notice of intent to appeal, and requesting that a transcript of the testimony and all rulings, etc., be prepared, which notice must be filed within 10 days after notice of entry of the judgment, order, or decree. Held that, in the absence of filing of such notice and request, no duty devolves on the clerk to prepare and send up the judgment roll, without which, or printed transcript of the papers required, authenticated under the rules of the appellate court, there is no record showing that any judgment has been rendered or order made from which an appeal will lie, or, if rendered or made, that any appeal has been taken therefrom.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by the Dyer Law & Collection Company against E. A. Salisbury and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Dismissed.

George L. Sanders, for appellants. Cleveland Schultz and Trusten P. Dyer, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Sections 950, 951, and 952, Code of Civil Procedure, designate the papers which the appellant is required to furnish the court upon an appeal. The only papers filed herein as constituting the record on appeal consist of a typewritten transcript of the evidence taken at the trial, certified by the trial judge to be correct, together with loose copies of the complaint and answer, attested by the clerk. It was doubtless appellants' intention, in lieu of preparing and settling a bill of exceptions pursuant to the provisions of section 650, Code of Civil Procedure, to be used on appeal, to avail themselves of the provisions of section 953a of said Code, which provides that: "Any person desiring to appeal from any judgment, order or decree of the superior court to the Supreme Court or any of the District Courts of Appeal, may, in lieu of preparing and settling a bill of exceptions pursuant to the provisions of section six hundred and fifty of this Code, file with the clerk of the court from whose judgment, order or decree said appeal is taken, or to be taken, a notice stating that he desires or intends to appeal, or has appealed therefrom, and requesting that a transcript of the testimony offered or taken, evidence offered or received, and all rulings, instructions, acts or statements of the court, also all objections or exceptions of counsel, and all matters to which the same relate, be made up and prepared. Said notice must be filed within ten days after notice of entry of the judgment, order or decree." So far as shown by the record, no attempt was made by appellants to comply with the provisions of the section with reference to the filing of the notice and request for a transcript of the evidence and papers necessary to be used on appeal. In the absence of the filing of such notice and request, as prescribed by section 953a (and assuming that the judgment roll, as defined by section 670, Code of Civil Procedure, need not be printed), no duty devolved upon the clerk to prepare, authenticate, and send up the judgment roll, without which, or a printed transcript of the papers required for use on appeal, authenticated as required by the rules of this court, there is no record showing that any judgment was rendered or order made from which an appeal would lie, or, if rendered or made, that any appeal was taken therefrom.

For the reasons given, the attempted appeal is dismissed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. R. Hervey, Judge.

Action by William Gregory against Charles Lantz. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Walton J. Wood and Charles Lantz, for appellant. Tipton & Cailor, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to recover the balance of an amount agreed to be paid by defendant to plaintiff pursuant to the terms of a lease of personal property. Judgment went for plaintiff, from which, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

The lease, set out in the complaint in hæc verba, is for one 5 horse power White & Middleton engine No. 1891, one pump jack, 80 feet of 7-inch casing, 45 feet of 4-ply belting and fittings, etc., which the lessor agreed to furnish for the term of 6 months from July 9, 1908, for the use of which defendant covenanted and agreed to pay plaintiff the sum of $580, payable $250 cash upon delivery, and the balance in installments, as therein specified. It was further provided that, should suit be brought to enforce any covenant contained therein, defendant should pay a reasonable attorney's fee in such suit. The lease contains no covenants on the part of the lessor, other than an option therein given to purchase, for a stipulated sum, the leased property at any time during the term of the lease, provided the specified rental shall have been paid at the times and in the manner therein contained. The complaint alleges delivery of the property to defendant and the performance of all the covenants thereby imposed upon plaintiff, but that defendant, retaining possession of the leased property, has paid the sum of $139.37 only, leaving a balance of $440.63 unpaid, and which he refuses to pay. It also alleged that plaintiff had employed attorneys to prosecute the suit, on account of which he had incurred a liability in the sum of $75 for attorney's fees. Defendant answered, admitting the execution of the lease, but denying that any sum was unpaid thereon, or that plaintiff had been compelled to employ attorneys, as alleged. By separate answer and cross-complaint, he alleged that by said contract of lease plaintiff was to install the property so leased, so that the same could be used for the pumping of water for the summer irrigation of 1908, and that he neglected and failed to do so until December, 1908, by reason whereof he was damaged.

It is not alleged that the contract as executed was other than what the parties intended it to be; hence the only question is whether plaintiff performed the covenants thereby imposed upon him. The court upon ample evidence found that he did. Measuring the rights of the parties by the terms of the contract, no duty devolved upon plaintiff to install the pumping plant for use in the summer of 1908, or at any other time, or at all. He simply leased the property to defendant, and if plaintiff installed it such act, so far as shown by the record, was voluntary and without consideration, or by virtue of some agreement not pleaded. Neither did plaintiff make any covenant of warranty as to the capacity of the engine or pump when installed; hence, if it be true, as claimed by appellant, that the plant when installed failed to do the work which he expected it to do, he cannot now complain, since he did not exact any covenant from plaintiff with regard to the efficiency of the engine or capacity of the pump.

Appellant claims there was a failure on the part of plaintiff in complying with the terms of the contract in this: That whereas, he agreed to deliver 80 feet of casing, he furnished but 60 feet. While we think that under the circumstances disclosed by the record the delivery of the 60 feet of casing would constitute a substantial compliance with the contract, the evidence clearly shows that plaintiff delivered the full 80 feet, and defendant retained and used the same for about 5 months—almost the entire term of the lease—when, owing to the fact that the plant failed to work satisfactorily, plaintiff, at defendant's request, undertook to remedy the trouble, and removed from the well 20 feet of the casing installed therein, for the reason that it was thought the reduction in the length of the casing placed in the well would increase the efficiency of the plant. The removal of the 20 feet of casing was in the nature of repairs, and it does not appear that defendant objected to the change until January 11, 1909, which was after the expiration of the term of the lease. While plaintiff may be liable to defendant for the conversion of the 20 feet of casing, it cannot be said that such conversion 5 months after the delivery thereof showed a lack of substantial compliance with the contract.

[1] During the trial, defendant offered in evidence a writing, claimed by him to have been signed by plaintiff at the time the contract here sued upon was executed. Plaintiff's objection to its reception in evidence was sustained. The instrument was not pleaded by defendant, and there is nothing in the writing itself, nor in the evidence offered, tending to show that it had any connection with the transaction, or was relevant to the issue involved. There was no error in excluding it from the evidence.

[2] The theory of defendant seems to have been that, by the terms of the contract, plaintiff agreed to install the plant and guaranteed a certain degree of sufficiency. While there is nothing in the record upon which to base such theory, nevertheless, if it should be adopted, we could not, owing to a conflict of evidence, say the findings were without sufficient support.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. HAROLD. (Cr. 337.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Nov. 9, 1911.)

LARCENY (§ 14*) — FALSE PRETENSES — EVIDENCE.

Prosecutor was induced by the fraud, trick, and device of defendant to agree to purchase from D. moving picture films of little or no value for $150. Prosecutor went with defendant to D.'s room to complete the purchase, and there handed defendant $145 to be paid to D. for the films. Defendant handed some of the money to D., but put the balance in his pocket. It appeared that defendant and D. were operating together to defraud prosecutor, and that, when defendant obtained and received the same, he intended to steal it. Held sufficient to show larceny, and not obtaining money by false pretenses, though prosecutor testified that when he delivered the money to D. he intended to part with it in payment for the films.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. §§ 34–38; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, Judge.

Arthur R. Harold was convicted of grand larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

P. M. Walsh, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, for the People.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from a judgment and order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. Defendant was convicted upon a charge of grand larceny for the stealing of $145 from one W. H. Ranes. The only point urged for a reversal is that the evidence establishes a case of obtaining money by false pretenses rather than a case of larceny.

There is no merit in appellant's contention. The evidence shows that through the fraud, trick, and device of defendant the prosecutor was induced to agree to purchase from one Davidson certain moving picture films of little or no value for $150. The prosecutor went with appellant to a room occupied by said Davidson to complete the purchase, and there the prosecutor handed to appellant the sum of $145 to be paid to Davidson for the films. Appellant handed some of the money to Davidson, but put the balance, probably half of it, in his own pocket. The evidence justifies the conclusion that appellant and Davidson were fellow conspirators operating together to fleece the prosecutor out of his money, and that when appellant obtained and received the money from the prosecutor he intended to feloniously steal the same. The claim of appellant that title passed when the prosecutor handed the money to appellant is based principally upon the answer made by the prosecutor to a question put to him upon cross-examination. He was asked, "You intended at the time you transferred this $145 to transfer the money to Davidson in payment of the films, didn't you?" to which he answered "Yes."

Undoubtedly such was his general intention; that is, he intended that title to the money should be finally transferred to Davidson. But the answer must be understood in the light of the circumstances shown to exist by the whole record. The prosecutor was not buying films from appellant, and handed the money to appellant only that appellant might hand the same to Davidson in payment for the films which the prosecutor had agreed to buy from Davidson. Appellant purported to be acting with and for the prosecutor. So long as the money remained in the hands of appellant, it was the money of the prosecutor. There is no pretense that the evidence shows that the prosecutor intended to transfer title to the money to appellant. The evidence shows without doubt that appellant intended when he obtained possession of the money to steal it, and accomplished his purpose.

The facts in this case are entirely similar to the facts in People v. Arnold, 118 Pac. 729, and People v. Delbos, 146 Cal. 737, 81 Pac. 131, where it was held that convictions for grand larceny were sustained by the evidence.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. LEDERER. (Cr. 214.)

1. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 331*)—CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY—INTENT.

In a prosecution for fraudulently conveying and concealing property with intent to defraud creditors, evidence held to show that defendant's intent in holding an auction sale of his stock and making promises to pay in the future, which he did not keep, was to dispose of his stock and leave the creditor without means of satisfying the debt.

2. Fraudulent Conveyances (§ 329*)—Criminal Responsibility—Transfer.

Where, notwithstanding an alleged transfer of a jewelry business from defendant to his father, defendant continued to conduct the business in his name and for his own benefit, and it appeared that prosecutor, a creditor, looked to him for the payment of his account for merchandise sold, though such account was kept on prosecutor's books in the name of the father, such alleged transfer was no defense to a prosecution of defendant for fraudulently conveying, assigning, and concealing the property with intent to defraud prosecutor.

3. Criminal Law (§ 1122*)—Appeal—Record—Questions Presented—Instructions.

Where there is no evidence in the record of the existence of an alleged fact, the court on appeal cannot consider whether there was error in the instructions given referring to such fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2940–2945; Dec. Dig. § 1122.*]

4. Criminal Law (§ 543*)—Evidence—Testimony on Preliminary Examination—Absent Witness.

A witness who had testified on preliminary examination was not present at the trial, and the sheriff testified that he had made a search for him, and had been unable to find him. There was evidence that he had not been seen in the county for several weeks prior to the trial, and had announced his intention to go to the Philippine Islands. An acquaintance produced a letter to which was attached the witness' initials, which appeared to have been posted from a town in Ohio some days prior to its receipt, containing references to a business matter about which the absent witness had talked with the addressee about three weeks previously. Held that, though the handwriting of the latter was not identified as that of the absent witness, still the letter, in connection with the other testimony, afforded some ground to sustain a finding that the witness could not, with due diligence, be produced on the trial, so as to authorize the admission of the reporter's record of the testimony of the witness at the preliminary examination.

5. Criminal Law (§§ 543, 1153*)—Appeal—Review—Matters of Discretion.

Pen. Code, § 686, provides that the testimony of a witness, taken at a preliminary examination, may be read at the trial on its being satisfactorily shown to the court that he is dead, or insane, or cannot with due diligence be found within the state. Held, that whether the showing of due diligence is sufficient to lay a foundation for the admission of the record of the testimony of an absent witness on the preliminary examination is within the discretion of the trial judge, the exercise of which will not be reviewed, if there is any evidence to support the conclusion reached.

6. Criminal Law (§ 1169*)—Appeal—Review—Prejudice.

In a prosecution for fraudulently disposing of a stock of goods with intent to defraud creditors, defendant was not prejudiced by evidence of an auctioneer employed by defendant to sell a large part of the stock at auction that, while be was engaged in selling the stock, defendant had a conversation with a traveling salesman, and finally adjusted it by giving the salesman a check, "dated ahead," which was objected to as allowing parol evidence of the contents of a written instrument.

7. Criminal Law (§ 1172*)—Appeal—Harmless Error.

Where, in a prosecution for fraudulently conveying a stock of goods with intent to defraud creditors, there was ample proof of defendant's indebtedness to prosecutor, and uncontradicted evidence that when a statement was presented to defendant, showing the total amount of its indebtedness, he did not question its correctness, but promised to secure funds to satisfy it, defendant was not prejudiced by an objectionable instruction as to the character of evidence which a promissory note furnishes of the debt which it represents.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; E. P. Unangst, Judge.

H. C. Lederer was convicted of fraudulently conveying and concealing property with intent to defraud, and he appeals. Affirmed.

L. A. Enos and Carpenter & Gibbons, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

JAMES, J. Defendant was convicted of fraudulently conveying, assigning, and concealing his property with intent to defraud Nordman Bros. Company, which was then his creditor in a large sum of money, as that crime is described in section 154 of the Penal Code. He was sentenced to pay a fine in the sum of $1,005, from which judgment, and from an order made by the trial court denying his motion for a new trial, he has appealed.

[1] From the reporter's transcript of the testimony, it appears that the defendant was in charge of a jewelry store in the city of San Luis Obispo for at least 1½ years prior to the date of his arrest, and that he assumed to be the owner thereof; his name appearing upon signs placed about the place of business and upon a large safe which he kept in the store for the purposes of that business. The complaining creditor had furnished merchandise to the amount of more than $2,000 in value for the defendant's use. A short time prior to the date of defendant's arrest, a representative of this creditor called upon defendant at his place of business, and made known the state of his account with the complainant. This account was then in the form of a book charge in part, and in part was evidenced by two promissory notes, signed by the defendant and one Charles F. Lederer, the father of defendant. When the representative of the creditor made the request upon defendant that he discharge at least a part of the indebtedness, defendant promised to do so within a short time, which promise, and several others of like intent, he utterly failed to keep. Shortly before his arrest, he employed an auctioneer to sell off the stock of jewelry, and sales were had during several days until the merchandise on hand was reduced to an amount which represented but a small part of the stock theretofore kept on hand. None of the money received from these sales did the defendant apply upon his indebtedness. Again a representative of the creditor called upon him and requested payment of the account, and again defendant promised that he would obtain some money. He told the creditor's agent at the time of the latter's last visit that he had made an arrangement with a bank to obtain money, and that if he would call later in the day he expected to have it ready for him. This agent discovered that defendant had made no arrangement with the bank to obtain any money. After this last conversation with this agent, defendant left his store and prepared immediately to take the afternoon train for Los Angeles, telling an employé to say to the agent when he inquired for him that he (defendant) had gone to the country to obtain $1,000 or $1,500, which he intended to pay over to the creditor. The defendant was arrested at the railway depot when about to take the train to leave San Luis Obispo. Considering all of the facts and circumstances shown in evidence, it was very clearly established that the intent of the defendant was to dispose of the jewelry stock and leave his creditor without any means of satisfying the debt.

[2, 3] While it does appear that the charge account kept by Nordman Bros. Company was carried upon their books in the name of Charles F. Lederer, it is equally clear that the defendant was conducting the jewelry business at San Luis Obispo in his own name and for his own benefit, and that the creditor looked to him for payment of the account. Moreover, it appears further that the defendant at no time questioned the correctness of the account as to its amount or his own responsibility as to the payment thereof. An attempt was made on the part of the defense to show that in July, 1909, defendant and one Curtis transferred the jewelry business to Charles F. Lederer, father of defendant. Defendant testified that on a certain day in the month mentioned he executed a notice of intention to sell and a bill of sale. It appears that this notice of intention to sell was intended to be given to satisfy the requirements of section 3440 of the Civil Code, but we are left altogether in the dark as to what its contents were; for, while the record shows that it was read in evidence, it is not brought before this court in any way, and by stipulation entered into between counsel it constituted one of the exhibits which it was agreed should not be set out in the transcript. There is therefore no testimony shown from which we can properly infer that a notice of intention to sell the jewelry business was ever executed, or that the bill of sale which was said to have been made referred in any wise to the business then being engaged in by the defendant. For this reason, it is not proper for us to consider as to whether the court erred in giving any of the instructions which referred to the matter of the alleged sale of the jewelry stock and business in 1909 to Charles F. Lederer. In addition to all of this, as we have before noted, it appeared without contradiction that the defendant, from July, 1909, down to the date of his arrest, had conducted the business in his own name, that he assumed to be the sole proprietor thereof, and that the complaining creditor looked to him for the payment of its debt.

[4] It is argued that the trial court erred in admitting the reporter's record of the testimony of a witness named Lamphere, which was taken in due form at the preliminary examination of the charge against defendant. This witness was not present at the trial, and there was evidence before the court that he had not been seen in San Luis Obispo for several weeks prior to the date of the trial, and that he had theretofore announced it as his intention to leave the state and go to the Philippine Islands. An acquaintance of his, who was sworn as a witness, produced a letter to which was attached the name and initials of Lamphere; this letter appearing to have been posted from a town in the state of Ohio some days prior to its receipt. The handwriting appearing in the letter was not identified as being that of Lamphere, but the letter contained references to a business matter about which Lamphere had talked with the witness who received the missive, about three weeks prior thereto. Lamphere had been served with a subpœna early in April, 1911, to attend on May 16th at the trial. Before May 16th arrived, the district attorney and defendant agreed to continue the trial to May 31st, which continuance was ordered by the court. While it was not shown that Lamphere had notice of this continuance, it was testified to by another witness that he (Lamphere) had never reported at the courthouse in response to the subpœna; and the sheriff of San Luis Obispo county testified that after the commencement of the trial he had made a search for Lamphere at San Luis Obispo and had failed to find him. Under the circumstances, we think that, while the handwriting in the letter was not identified as being that of Lamphere, still that document, in connection with the other testimony referring to his then absence from the city, afforded some ground upon which the trial court might properly base its conclusion that the witness could not, with due diligence, be produced at the trial.

[5] Section 686 of the Penal Code provides that the testimony of a witness taken at a preliminary examination may be read at the trial, "upon it being satisfactorily shown to the court that he is dead or insane, or cannot with due diligence be found within the state." It has been held that under the provisions of this section the trial judge has discretion in determining whether or not a sufficient foundation has been laid, entitling such testimony to be read in evidence, and that, where there is any evidence to support the conclusion affecting that matter, the ruling cannot be disturbed on appeal. People v. Nelson, 85 Cal. 421, 24 Pac. 1006; People v. Witty, 138 Cal. 576, 72 Pac. 177; People v. Lewandowski, 143 Cal. 574, 77 Pac. 467.

[6] The alleged error complained of, arising upon the ruling of the court allowing the auctioneer employed by defendant to state his recollection as to the date appearing upon a check given by defendant to a traveling salesman, seems to us to have been without prejudicial effect upon the rights of the defendant. The auctioneer was allowed to testify, against objection made by defendant, that, while he was engaged in selling the jewelry stock, defendant had some controversy with a traveling man, and that finally the controversy was adjusted, and that defendant had delivered to the traveling salesman a check which was, as the witness said, "dated ahead" about 10 days. Apparently defendant was owing money to the employer of the traveling salesman, and he settled his debt by giving a check dated as the witness described. We do not understand how the jury could have reasonably drawn any inference from this occurrence unfavorable to defendant; and therefore the ruling of the court in allowing oral testimany of the contents of a written instrument, if erroneous, was without prejudice.

[7] The instruction given by the trial judge as to the character of evidence which a promissory note furnishes of the debt which it represents appears to be properly subject to the criticism which counsel urge against it. Whether the instruction was erroneous or not seems immaterial in the face of the uncontradicted testimony going to show the existence of the debt itself. As we have before stated, not only was there ample proof of the amount of the debt which was owing to the complaining creditor at and prior to the arrest of defendant, but there was the further testimony, which stood uncontradicted, that when a statement was presented to defendant, showing the total amount of his indebtedness, he made no question as to the correctness of that statement, but promised and agreed that he would secure funds with which to satisfy it.

In our opinion, defendant was convicted upon sufficient evidence, and no errors were committed by the trial court such as to warrant an order of reversal.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

WAGNER v. EL CENTRO SEED & NURSERY CO. (Civ. 1024.)

1. TRIAL (§ 395*)—FINDINGS—SUFFICIENCY.

Where the findings determined that the amount for which judgment was entered was due prior to the commencement of the action, defendant could not complain because of a want of a specific finding of the exact date of the maturity of the debt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 395.*]

2. SALES (§ 365*)—ACTIONS—FINDINGS—INCONSISTENCY.

Where, in an action for the price of merchandise, defendant relied on a counterclaim, a finding that the merchandise was sold at a price agreed on between the parties, and a finding covering the issue presented by the counterclaim that the seller was to receive a specified per cent. of the wholesale price of the entire amount of the merchandise, without finding the amount of the wholesale price at the date of delivery, were not inconsistent, but the ultimate facts proposed by the pleadings were sufficiently determined to support a judgment for the seller.

3. TRIAL (§ 404*)—FINDINGS—CONSTRUCTION.

The findings must be so construed as to support the judgment, if possible, and any apparent inconsistency between different parts of them must be reconciled so as to give effect to the judgment where the same can be done on any reasonable construction of the language used.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by A. F. Wagner against the El Centro Seed & Nursery Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Conkling & Brown, for appellant. D. V. Noland, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Appeal by defendant from a judgment entered against it in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $471 and costs. The appeal is presented on the judgment-roll.

In plaintiff's complaint it was alleged: "That within two years last past, to wit, between the 1st day of October, 1910, and the 1st day of February, 1911, said defendant became and was indebted to said plaintiff, upon an account for goods, wares, and merchandise, to wit, nursery stock and nursery pots, sold and delivered to said defendant within two years last past, in the city of El Centro, county of Imperial, state of California, in the sum of $583; that said nursery stock was sold to said defendant by said plaintiff at defendant's instance and request; that said defendant agreed to pay plaintiff the sum of $583 for said nursery stock and pots. That the said amount became due and payable on the 11th day of January, 1911; that no part of said sum has been paid, except the sum of $97; that there is still due, owing and unpaid from said defendant to said plaintiff upon said account the sum of $486." Defendant denied all of the material allegations of the complaint, and set up by way of counterclaim an alleged cause of action growing out of the transaction upon which the action was brought. The trial court found the facts to be as alleged in plaintiff's complaint, except that the amount found due to plaintiff was the sum of $471.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[1] There was no finding as to the particular day when this sum became due, but the finding of the court sufficiently determined that the amount for which judgment was entered had become due prior to the commencement of the action. This being true, no complaint can be made by the defendant because of the want of a specific finding fixing the exact date when the debt became due and payable.

[2] It is contended by defendant that there is an inconsistency in the findings of the court, inasmuch as in that part of the findings which covers issues presented by the counterclaim it was determined that plaintiff was to receive 60 per cent. of the wholesale price of the entire amount of nursery stock delivered, and the court failed to find what the amount of the wholesale price was at the date of delivery. We think that the findings as made are not inconsistent, and that the ultimate facts proposed by the pleadings of the parties were all fully and legally determined. The court did find clearly and unmistakably that the merchandise was sold at a price agreed upon between the parties, and if this price was the wholesale price of the stock, it was, nevertheless, the price agreed to be paid by defendant.

[3] It is a familiar rule, too well settled and fixed to require citation of authority to sustain it, that the findings of a trial court must be so construed as to support the judgment, if possible, and that any apparent inconsistency between different portions of such findings must be reconciled in such a way as will give effect to the judgment, where this can be done upon any reasonable construction and interpretation of the language used. In this case we think that the findings fully sustain the judgment and that the objections made thereto by the appellant are without merit.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

LAURELLE v. BUSH, Tax Collector.

(Civ. 972.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Nov. 8, 1911.)

1. Theaters and Shows (§ 3*)—Licenses—Ordinances — Construction — "Panorama"—"Kinetoscope."

While a city ordinance imposing a license fee on and prescribing the location of museums, panoramas, cycloramas, kinetoscope, or phonograph parlors, does not specifically refer to the motion picture business, it is sufficiently covered by the words, "panorama" and "kinetoscope," and must be held to be within the contemplation of the ordinance.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, p. 3934.]

2. Theaters and Shows (§ ½,* New, Vol. 13, Key No. Series)—"Panorama"—Nature.

A "panorama" is a picture which, representing scenes too extended to be seen at once, is exhibited a part at a time by being unrolled continuously before the spectators.

3. Theaters and Shows (§ ½,* New, Vol. 13, Key No. Series)—"Kinetoscope"—Nature.

A "kinetoscope" is a machine for producing animated pictures, a mechanical contrivance involving, among other things, a transparent or translucent narrow film on which a series of photographs consecutively represent the continuous development of movement or action in the persons or things which are the subject of such photographs.

4. Municipal Corporations (§ 116*)—Ordinances—Implied Repeal.

Where a city ordinance imposing a license fee upon the owners of museums, panoramas, cycloramas, kinetoscopes, or phonograph parlors and its amendment requiring a permit from the board of police commissioners for, and prohibiting the location of, such exhibitions within certain limits, is not repealed expressly by a later ordinance which made it unlawful to conduct a moving picture exhibition without first receiving a permit from the board of police commissioners, and as such later ordinance does not purport to fully cover the subject-matter of nor appear to be a substitute, but merely adds additional requirements, it cannot be held to repeal it by implication.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 268-271; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

5. Licenses (§ 7*)—Ordinances—Validity.

A general grant of power unaccompanied by specific directions as to the manner of exercise implies the right and duty to adopt and employ such means and methods as may be reasonably necessary, so that a city ordinance providing for licensing moving picture exhibitions is not invalid because it vests in police commissioners power to grant or refuse a permit for the conduct of the business which is arbitrary and dependent solely upon their whim or caprice, because it does not restrict the power or prescribe methods for its application.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Cent. Dig. §§ 7-15; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 603*)—ORDINANCES—VALIDITY—REASONABLENESS.

In view of the danger of fire and panic from the close proximity of moving picture exhibitions to schools or churches, a city ordinance which prohibits the future location of such exhibitions within 200 feet of a church or schoolhouse is not invalid as prescribing unreasonable or unnecessary conditions upon the business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1334; Dec. Dig. § 603.*]

7. LICENSES (§ 7*)—ORDINANCES—VALIDITY—REASONABLENESS.

Where a city ordinance provides for the licensing of moving picture exhibitions, etc., and prohibits the location of such businesses within certain districts, a requirement therein that the applicant for a permit to engage in such business shall specify by street and number the precise premises in which he desires to locate is reasonable and necessary to an intelligent and effective enforcement of the ordinance, and will not render it invalid as prescribing unreasonable or unnecessary conditions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Cent. Dig. §§ 7-15; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 591*)—DELEGATION OF POWER.

Where a city ordinance provides that a license to run moving picture exhibitions shall be granted only when a permit therefor has been granted by the board of police commissioners, but directs that no other restriction than as to the location of such places shall be considered by such board, the restriction is mandatory, and imposes upon the board the duty of granting a permit upon ascertaining that the conditions precedent have been complied with, and, as the refusal of a permit in such case would be an abuse of power, rather than the exercise of a discretion, which could be reached and remedied by mandamus, the ordinance is not invalid as a delegation of power.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1310; Dec. Dig. § 591.*]

9. MANDAMUS (§ 14*)—GRANTING OF LICENSE—COMPLIANCE WITH CONDITIONS.

Where an ordinance regulating moving picture exhibitions, etc., provides that a permit therefor be obtained from the board of police commissioners, and that the right to have such a permit shall be absolute upon compliance with certain conditions as to the location of the business, issuance of the permit is a condition precedent to the granting of the license, and the determination as to whether the premises comply with the requirement is for the board, not for the applicant, so that a petition for mandamus to require the issuance of a license by the license collector which alleges that the premises comply with the requirement of the ordinance is insufficient; the only right to relief by mandamus being upon a showing that the board ignored the petition for a permit entirely, or arbitrarily refused a permit in the face of the undisputed or established fact that the specified restrictions did not apply.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Mandamus by Otis Laurelle against David Bush, Tax Collector. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Percy V. Long, City Atty., and J. F. English, Asst. City Atty., for appellant. Edgar C. Levey and George M. Lipman, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. The plaintiff in the above-entitled proceeding petitioned the superior court for a writ of mandate, requiring and compelling the defendant, as the tax collector and ex officio license collector of the city and county of San Francisco, to issue to plaintiff a license to engage in the moving picture business. The petition for the writ in the main alleged that on the 3d day of March, 1911, the plaintiff tendered to defendant in his official capacity as tax and license collector the sum of $25, the amount fixed by ordinance as a license fee for opening and operating a moving picture exhibition. Thereupon plaintiff demanded of defendant a license to carry on said business at the premises known and designated as No. 452 Castro street in said city and county. It was further alleged in the plaintiff's petition that said premises were not within a distance of 200 feet from the front line of any church or school, or within 100 feet of the property line of the sides or rear of any church or school, that the defendant refused to issue said license, and that by reason thereof plaintiff is prohibited from engaging in a lawful and useful business.

The plaintiff in his petition, and here, bases his claim of right to the license in question solely upon the provisions of Ordinance No. 777 of the city and county of San Francisco, which requires, in substance, that every person, firm, or corporation maintaining or conducting any museum, panorama, cyclorama, kinetoscope, or phonograph parlor, wherein an admission fee is charged, and operated for the entertainment or amusement of the public, shall pay a license fee of $25, per quarter. The ordinance provides, further, that the tax collector shall not issue a license to any person, firm, or corporation to conduct such business unless the applicant therefor shall have first obtained from the board of police commissioners a permit to conduct the same, and that the board of police commissioners shall not issue any permit to any person who proposes to maintain said business within a distance of 200 feet from the front line of any church or school, or within 100 feet of the property line of the sides or rear of any church or school. Provision is then made that these restrictions shall not apply to buildings already erected or in course of construction, and especially designed to be used for kinetoscope or other similar exhibitions, and that no other restrictions as to the location of such business shall be considered by the board of police commissioners.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Although plaintiff's petition makes specific reference by title and number to the ordinance just referred to, no mention is made of the fact that the ordinance requires a permit from the board of police commissioners before the defendant is authorized to issue a license. In this connection it appears that Ordinance No. 777, which was enacted and approved in 1903, related only to the imposing of a license fee upon the owners of "museums, panoramas or cycloramas or any kinetoscope or phonograph parlor," and did not purport to regulate the conduct or restrict the location of such business. In the year 1908 this ordinance was amended solely by including within its provisions the clauses which required a permit from the board of police commissioners and prohibited the location of the designed exhibitions within the limits hereinbefore specified.

It should be noted in passing that the board of supervisors in 1909, by a supplementary ordinance known as "No 761, New Series," made it unlawful for any person to conduct or carry on any "moving picture" exhibition without first making application for and receiving a permit from the board of police commissioners. The only additional requirement of this ordinance, in so far as the procurement of a permit is concerned, is that the applicant must file his application in writing, which shall be signed by him, give his address, and specify by street and number the place where the proposed "moving picture" exhibition is to be located. Other provisions of the ordinance give immediate supervision and censorship of all pictures which may be exhibited, after a permit is granted and a license issued, to the police commissioners, and provision is also made for the revocation of permits in the event of a violation of certain prescribed rules not mentioned in the first ordinance, which are intended to keep the moving picture business within the limits of ordinary decency and morality. The validity of those rules is not assailed in this proceeding, and therefore they need not be further mentioned or considered.

The answer of the defendant set out in hæc verba the original ordinance relied upon by the plaintiff, together with the amendatory and supplementary ordinance just referred to, and then pleaded as a defense to the action that the plaintiff at no time obtained the required permit in writing to engage in the kinetoscope or any similar business, and that for this reason alone the defendant refused to issue a license to plaintiff. The plaintiff interposed a demurrer to the defendant's answer upon the ground that the facts therein stated did not constitute a defense. This demurrer was sustained without leave to amend. Thereupon judgment for plaintiff was entered in effect upon the pleadings, and the mandate of the court issued compelling the defendant to grant the license prayed for. The defendant appeals from the judgment.

The trial court, in sustaining the demurrer to the defendant's answer, proceeded presumably upon the theory advanced by plaintiff that the ordinances in question are unconstitutional, in this: (1) That they are unreasonable, discriminatory, and oppressive, and an unlawful interference with and an unnecessary restraint of a useful and lawful occupation; and (2) that they attempt to delegate legislative powers and functions from the board of supervisors, a legislative body, to the police commissioners, an administrative board.

[1] In support of this theory, it is assumed by plaintiff's counsel that the ordinances under consideration do not attempt in any way or form to regulate or restrict the business of exhibiting moving pictures, and therefore it is argued that the ordinances are but the grant of an arbitrary power to the police commissioners, whereby they are given the sole and unrestricted authority to grant or refuse any application for the permit required by the ordinances.

If the assumption upon which this argument is founded were true, the result contended for might follow as a matter of law; but, as we read and understand the several ordinances, they are not susceptible of any such construction. "Moving picture" exhibitions are not specifically designated in the category of amusements required to be licensed by Ordinance No. 777, nor is any mention made of "moving pictures" in so many words by the amendment thereto, which purports to regulate "cycloramas, kinetoscope" and other similar entertainments.

[2] A "panorama," however, is defined to be "a picture which, representing scenes too extended to be seen at once, is exhibited a part at a time by being unrolled continuously before the spectator."

[3] A "kinetoscope" is defined to be "a machine for producing animated pictures" (Webster's Dict.), and has been judicially described as "a mechanical contrivance involving, among other things, a transparent or translucent narrow film of very great length, on which a series of photographs consecutively represent the continuous development of movement or action in the persons or things which are the subjects of such photographs. This film by a photographic device is caused to pass with great rapidity by a set of lenses, through which, by use of a powerful electric light, the scenes which are the subject of the series of photographs are much enlarged and thrown upon a white screen. As one picture of the scene photographed succeeds another upon the screen with great rapidity, the impression produced upon the retina of the eye by the preceding picture continues longer than does the existence on the screen of the picture which produces the impression. As a result the impression produced by one picture lasts approximately until the impression produced by the next succeeding picture occurs. The result is substantially that one sees a continuous moving picture, reproducing the action and movement of the scenes photographed upon the film." Barnes v. Miner (C. C.) 122 Fed. 480, 487. It must be conceded, therefore, that the character of the business contemplated by the plaintiff and for which he seeks a license comes as directly within the provisions of the original ordinance and its amendmoent as if "moving pictures" had been definitely named and described therein.

[4] In our opinion Ordinance No. 777, as originally enacted and subsequently amended, is still in force, and full effect may and should be given to its several requirements, notwithstanding the enactment and existence of Ordinance "No. 761, New Series." The last-mentioned ordinance does not purport to fully and completely cover the subject-matter of, or appear to be a substitute for, the earlier ordinance. The two ordinances are not in any wise conflicting. One does not purport to repeal the other either expressly or by implication. On the contrary, they are in complete harmony; and, as the last ordinance appears to be purely an auxiliary of the original ordinance, both must be read and construed together. When so read and construed, it is manifest that they formulate a reasonable, harmonious, municipal regulation of all forms of panoramic, kinetoscope, and moving picture exhibitions, not only in regard to the location and character of the buildings in which such exhibitions may be given, but in regard as well to the kind and character of pictures which may be produced.

[5] The contention of plaintiff's counsel that the power to grant or refuse a permit for a license is arbitrary and dependent solely upon the mere whim and caprice of the police commissioners is readily refuted by a casual reading of the ordinances. It is a well-recognized rule of statutory construction that a general grant of power, unaccompanied by specific directions as to the manner in which the power is to be exercised, implies the right and duty to adopt and employ such means and methods as may be reasonably necessary to a proper exercise of the power. 2 Lewis' Sutherland, Statutory Construction, § 508; DuPage County v. Jenks, 65 Ill. 275; Ex parte McManus, 151 Cal. 331, 90 Pac. 702.

If, therefore, the ordinances under consideration did no more than denounce the issuance of a license without the previous procurement of a permit from the board of police commissioners, this in itself would imply and require an inquiry as to the propriety of granting a permit in any given case. Goytino v. McAleer, 4 Cal. App. 655, 88 Pac. 991.

Tested by this rule, it cannot be said that the board of police commissioners is vested with an undefined and whimsical discretion in the matter of granting or refusing a permit. It is not necessary, however, to invoke this rule in aid of the validity of the ordinances here assailed, for they in express terms prescribe and limit the conditions under which a permit for a license may be applied for and granted.

[6] Neither can it be said that the conditions to be complied with are unreasonable or unnecessary. The manifest menace of fire and panic likely to result to school children and church congregations from the close proximity of kinetoscope exhibitions is a valid and commendable reason for the proviso found in the amended ordinance prohibiting such exhibitions within 200 feet of a church or school unless at the time of the passage of such amended ordinance they were housed in buildings already erected or in the course of erection, and specially designed for that purpose; and the requirement of the supplemental ordinance that the applicant for a permit to engage in such business shall specify by street and number the precise premises in which he desires to locate is a reasonable and necessary expedient plainly intended and devised to aid in an intelligent and effective enforcement of the ordinance.

[7] These conditions apply equally and uniformly to all persons alike, and the direction that "no other restriction of such places as to the location of such places shall be considered by the board of police commissioners * * *" is mandatory, and clearly contemplates that no discretion is given to withhold a permit if it be found that the location or building selected for the proposed enterprise conforms to the requirements of the ordinance. In other words, the ordinances impose upon the board of police commissioners the plain duty of granting a permit upon ascertaining that the conditions precedent to the performance of such duty exist; and the refusal of a permit in such a case would be an abuse of power rather than the exercise of a discretion, which could be reached and remedied by mandamus. Ex rel. Coffey v. Chittenden, 112 Wis. 575, 88 N. W. 587; Reed v. Collins, 5 Cal. App. 494, 90 Pac. 973; 2 Abbott's Municipal Corp. 985,

[8] The contention of plaintiff that the ordinance violates the rule of law which prohibits the delegation of legislative powers is untenable. As heretofore indicated, it is clear that the ordinances designate all of the conditions under which a permit for a license may be issued, and the requirement that a license shall issue only after a permit therefor has been granted by the board of police commissioners confers no power upon that board to determine the necessity for a license, or legislate as to the terms and conditions upon which it may be issued by the defendant as license collector. The requirement is but a preliminary step in the procedure prescribed for the procurement of a license, and in no sense can it be said to be an improper delegation of power. In re Guerrero, 69 Cal. 99, 10 Pac. 261; In re Bickerstaff, 70 Cal. 39, 11 Pac. 393; Ex parte Fiske, 72 Cal. 125, 13 Pac. 310; In re Flaherty, 105 Cal. 564, 38 Pac. 981, 27 L. R. A. 529; County of Los Angeles v. Spencer, 126 Cal. 673, 59 Pac. 202, 77 Am. St. Rep. 217; Ex parte Quong Wo, on Habeas Corpus, 118 Pac. 714.

[9] It may be true, as plaintiff alleges in his petition, that the premises selected by him are not within 200 feet of a church or school; but the determination of this fact is vested in the board of police commissioners, and not in the plaintiff; and if it be true, as alleged in the answer of the defendant, that the plaintiff has ignored the provisions which require a permit as a condition precedent to the issuance of a license, the defendant cannot by mandamus be coerced into doing that which his plain duty under the law prohibits him from doing. The plaintiff, before he will be accorded any relief, must first submit to the jurisdiction of the board of police commissioners; and even then will not be heard to complain except upon a showing that the board ignored his petition entirely, or arbitrarily refused him a permit in the face of the undisputed or established fact that the specified restrictions did not apply to his case.

The judgment is reversed, and the lower court directed to overrule the plaintiff's demurrer to the answer of the defendant, and then proceed to a trial and determination of the issues raised by the pleadings in the case.

WILSON et al. v. FIRST NAT. BANK OF LONG BEACH. (Civ. 1,047.)

1. Municipal Corporations (§ 353*)—Improvement Contracts—Assignment—Liability of Assignee.

That a municipal contractor assigned his contract to defendant bank, upon its agreement to collect the money to become due thereon, to pay the materialmen and subcontractors from the proceeds, and to apply the balance to the contractor's debt to the bank, requires the bank to satisfy claims of materialmen and subcontractors before applying any of the proceeds to its own claim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 885; Dec. Dig. § 353.*]

2. Municipal Corporations (§ 376*)—Municipal Construction Contracts—Action Against Assignee—Pleading.

A complaint, stating that a municipal contractor assigned a contract to defendant bank, on its agreement to pay materialmen and subcontractors from the proceeds, and to apply the balance to the contractor's debt to the bank, that plaintiffs, as subcontractors, refused to proceed until assured by defendant that it would pay over to plaintiffs moneys falling due under the contract, etc., which defendant did, whereupon plaintiffs performed their work should be construed to charge the defendant as assignee, and not as guarantor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 376.*]

3. Pleading (§ 406*)—Uncertainty—Waiver of Objection.

An objection to a complaint for uncertainty is waived by failure to demur on that ground.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by Earl A. Wilson and others, partners as the Electric Supply & Fixture Company, against the First National Bank of Long Beach. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Denio & Hart, for appellants. John E. Daly, for respondent.

JAMES, J. [1] A general demurrer to an amended complaint, filed by plaintiffs, was sustained, and leave to further amend was denied. Thereupon judgment was rendered for defendant, from which plaintiffs appeal. In this amended complaint it was alleged that one E. L. Plantico, on August 1, 1906, entered into a contract with certain property owners of the city of Long Beach, wherein it was agreed that Plantico was to construct certain bulkheads and sidewalks and erect electrical street lamps along a boulevard in front of the property of the other contracting parties; that Plantico then engaged plaintiffs, as subcontractors, to do certain of the electrical work, and that, before plaintiffs entered upon the doing of this work, Plantico assigned the main contract, which he had made with the property owners, to the defendant bank. Plaintiffs then allege, on information and belief, that the assignment so made by Plantico to the bank was "upon the consideration and understanding that said defendant corporation would hold said contract and collect the moneys to become due thereunder from the respective property owners as the same became due under the terms of said contract, and pay materialmen and subcontractors from the proceeds thereof, and apply the balance, if any, to certain obligations owed by said E. L. Plantico to said defendant bank." This allegation follows: "That thereafter, and before commencing work under their said contract with said E. L. Plantico, these plaintiffs went to said defendant corporation, and refused to proceed with said work, except upon the condition that said defendant corporation collected the moneys to become due under the terms of said contract, and would pay over to these plaintiffs the moneys to become due to them upon the completion of said contract by them, made with said E. L. Plantico, as aforesaid, and were assured by said defendant corporation that it would do the same; that upon such assurance plaintiffs thereupon commenced work under their said contract, made with said E. L. Plantico, as aforesaid, and completed the same according to its terms." There was the further allegation that the amount which had become due to plaintiffs under their contract was the sum of $2,465.84, and that of this amount $1,240, and no more, had been received by way of credit from defendant bank, and that the defendant had refused to make further payments thereon. It was also alleged on information and belief that the defendant bank had collected on account of money due under the contract assigned to defendant by Plantico more than enough money to pay all claims of subcontractors and materialmen. Under the alleged terms of the assignment made by Plantico to the bank, the latter became charged with the responsibility of satisfying the claims of the materialmen and subcontractors before applying any of the proceeds received upon that contract to its own account.

[2] As we view the amended complaint, sufficient facts are stated to constitute a cause of action, although there appears to be some uncertainty as to whether plaintiffs intended to rely upon the assurance of the bank that it would see them paid, as a distinct and original contract on the part of the bank, or upon the agreement of the bank, which formed a part of the consideration for the assignment made by Plantico, that moneys collected upon the main contract should be first applied in extinguishment of the claims of the materialmen and subcontractors. We think, however, that the pleading is reasonably susceptible of the construction that plaintiffs did not intend to allege a separate contract on the part of the bank, made with them by way of guaranty, but that, all of the allegations considered, the pleading should be construed as intending to set forth only the cause of action based upon the liability of the bank under the assignment of Plantico, which was made in part for the benefit of these plaintiffs. Construed in that way, no other effect need be given to the allegations, referring to the assurance given by the bank to plaintiffs, that it would see them paid, than to treat that allegation as meaning only that the defendant assured plaintiffs that it would comply with the terms of its agreement with Plantico to first pay out of moneys collected on the contract assigned to it the demands of the materialmen and subcontractors.

[3] A demurrer for uncertainty might properly have been urged against the complaint, but no such ground of demurrer was made by the defendant, and that objection must therefore be deemed to have been waived. We think that the demurrer should have been overruled.

The judgment is reversed.

Const. art. 15, § 3, provides that all tidelands within two miles of any incorporated city or town in the state fronting on the waters of any harbor, estuary, bay, or inlet used for navigation shall be withheld from grant or sale to private persons, partnerships, or corporations. Held, that the word "tidelands," as so used, was not limited to lands covered and uncovered by daily efflux and reflux of the tide, but embraced lands properly described as submerged lands.

St. 1907, p. 987, confirming and validating leases of any tide or submerged lands belonging to the state within the municipal boundary of any county or municipality, or over which the county or municipality at the time of executing the lease was acting in de facto authority, for a period of not more than 50 years, etc., was not unconstitutional as special legislation.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Actions by the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company against Louise M. Hamilton and husband and by Louise M. Hamilton and husband against the same railroad company. Judgment for the railroad company in each case, and the Hamiltons appeal. Affirmed.

HENSHAW, J. The above-entitled cases involve a consideration of the same legal questions. The former case is an action to quiet title, the latter an action in ejectment, both between the same parties.

The facts found by the court, over which there is no controversy, may be briefly stated. In 1903 the government of the United States was engaged in the improvement of the harbor of San Pedro. The work contemplated a deepening of the "inner harbor" (an estuary or arm of the sea), the rectification of the inner harbor lines, the construction of jetties delimiting those lines, and to the seaward the construction of an enormous breakwater which, in a great sweep or curve, extends across the entrance to the inner harbor, and, while protecting it, affords safe anchorage to vessels on its landward side. Much dredging was necessary to deepen the inner harbor. The disposition of the material dredged was important. If cast into the ocean, the refluent tides would carry it back to the inner harbor. This being the condition, in April, 1903, the United States government entered into a contract with the San Pedro Railroad Company, by which it was agreed that the corporation would build in the Pacific Ocean, east of the inner harbor and of the government jetty bounding that harbor upon the east, a sea wall and retaining wall which would protect and confine not less than 2,500,000 cubic yards of the material dredged by the government from the inner harbor, and permit the government to pump its dredged material onto the corporation's land. The object to be attained was one of mutual benefit to the contracting parties. The government, upon the one hand, would thus safely and economically dispose of the dredged material, and the corporation, upon the other hand, would receive the benefit of this dredged material in the contemplated reclamation of tide and submerged lands fronting on the Pacific Ocean. Thereafter the railroad company obtained a lease from the city of Long Beach, a municipality of the sixth class, whose jurisdiction then extended over the territory in question, to a tract of land including the lands in controversy. It then proceeded, at an expense of $30,000, to build the retaining wall. The government deposited the materials dredged from the inner harbor within the confines of the wall, and thus were reclaimed from the Pacific Ocean the lands here in controversy. Thereafter, on March 23, 1907, the Legislature of the state of California passed a validating act, ratifying leases of a certain class, within which class this lease admittedly comes. Of the greater part of the lands in controversy, the railroad company has been in possession under its lease. To a minor portion of the lands, in the possession of Louise M.

Hamilton and her husband, the railroad company has claimed the right of possession.

The foregoing outlines the railroad company's claim of title. Louise M. Hamilton, defendant in the one action, plaintiff in the other, claimed a right of possession to a portion of the lands by virtue of her attempt to comply with the provisions of the possessory act of 1852. Stats. 1852, p. 158. Without regard to the question whether this act has been repealed, it is sufficient to say that the act contemplates the occupation of public lands "for the purpose of cultivating or grazing the same." The court found that none of the lands was suitable for purposes of cultivation or grazing—a finding which, under the circumstances, will excite no surprise. In truth, no serious attempt is made to support the asserted claim of title of the Hamiltons; their possession of a small portion of the land, however, affording sufficient standing ground from which to attack the title of the railroad company.

It was made to appear that the city of San Pedro had made leases similar to the one here in question, and that the city of San Pedro had subsequently become annexed to or amalgamated with the city of Los Angeles. The city of Los Angeles had also from the state acquired certain rights to the lands contiguous to the harbor of San Pedro, which rights, it is asserted, include the lands here in question. The city of Los Angeles, however, did not connect itself with this litigation, but was permitted through its representatives to file a brief. Other briefs were filed in answer thereto by others interested in the principal question here to be considered.

That question may be thus broadly stated: When the Constitution (article 15, § 3) declares: "All tidelands within two miles of any incorporated city or town in this state, and fronting on the waters of any harbor, estuary, bay, or inlet used for the purposes of navigation, shall be withheld from grant or sale to private persons, partnerships or corporations"—does this language forbid the leasing for a term of any part of such lands?

[1] For the consideration of the question thus broadly stated, "tidelands," as thus used in the Constitution, will be construed more broadly than in the ordinary signification of lands covered and uncovered by the daily efflux and reflux of the tide. It will be construed to embrace lands properly described as submerged lands (Ward v. Willis, 51 N. C. 183, 72 Am. Dec. 570), such as, in major parts, the lands here in controversy unquestionably were. The phrase will be so construed to carry out the manifest intent of the framers of the Constitution to protect the harbors of cities and towns from falling into private monopolistic ownership. People v. Kerber, 152 Cal. 731, 93 Pac. 878, 125 Am. St. Rep. 93. Such being the undoubted purpose, it would result in the absolute destruction of that purpose to hold that a city might not convey its tidelands proper, but might convey into private ownership all of the submerged lands beyond the tidelands proper. For there thus might be erected an impassable barrier between the city and its own harbor waters, with the resulting monopolistic control of the harbor itself. It will further be assumed that the lands here in controversy front on a "bay." They certainly do not front upon the harbor of San Pedro, for the maps in evidence in the case establish that between these lands and the harbor of San Pedro is a wide jetty, wholly under the ownership and control of the government of the United States. To seaward these lands front upon the Pacific Ocean. They do not even front upon the outer harbor, but upon the open sea. The slight indentation in the shore line upon which they do front is San Pedro Bay, and, as has been said, it will be assumed that this bay is used for purposes of navigation, so as to bring the lands within the purview of the language of the Constitution.

[2] The Legislature, by its general validating act, as has been said, admittedly confirmed the lease made by the city of Long Beach. Stats. 1907, p. 987. If this confirmatory act is valid, it, of course, cures any defects in the lease from the town of San Pedro which may be thought to exist by reason of the lack of power in that municipality. Against the validity of the act, it is contended that it is special legislation. But this contention is completely answered by Upham v. Hosking, 62 Cal. 250, Baird v. Monroe, 150 Cal. 560, 89 Pac. 352, and Redlands v. Brook, 151 Cal. 474, 91 Pac. 150. The principle of decision is that such curative acts do not come within the constitutional inhibition against special legislation. Elsewhere the same principle of decision is uniformly applied. Read v. Plattsmouth, 107 U. S. 568, 2 Sup. Ct. 208, 27 L. Ed. 414; State v. Brown, 97 Minn. 402, 106 N. W. 477, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 327; State v. Squires, 26 Iowa, 340.

[3] This conclusion, then, is a declaration that the Legislature did not violate this particular constitutional inhibition against special legislation in the passage of the curative act, and thus clears the way for the consideration of the ultimate question first above stated. In passing, it may be said that it is, of course, recognized that the legislative department of the state, like the Congress of our national government, has plenary power over the management and disposition of state lands, subject, of course, in the case of lands under navigable waters, to the paramount right of the national government to exercise a control in the interest of commerce and navigation, and subject, also, to the trust for the whole public upon which these lands are held by the state—a trust which would forbid the alienation into private ownership of any such considerable part of them as would interfere with the proper exercise of the public trust upon which they are all held. But with none of these questions does this case concern itself. The question before us is a much narrower one. It is the question of the extent of the limitation of this general power imposed upon the Legislature by the constitutional mandate. The Constitution has clearly forbidden the Legislature from granting or selling lands of the character of those here in controversy. The question is: Did the Constitution by this language mean to forbid the Legislature from leasing, as contradistinguished from disposing of the fee, any such lands?

Over the meaning of these words "grant or sale," as thus employed in the Constitution, many niceties of reasoning are indulged in, and many authorities upon either side are cited. Thus it is pointed out that section 1053, Civil Code, provides that a transfer in writing is called a "grant," or "conveyance," or "bill of sale," and that the term "grant" in that section and in the succeeding articles includes all these instruments. Again, it is pointed out that section 1091, relating to the transfer of real property, provides that an estate in real property, other than an estate at will or for a term not exceeding one year, can be transferred only by operation of law, or by an instrument in writing; that section 1092 provides that a "grant of an estate in real property may be made in substance as follows"; and that this contemplates a leasehold interest exceeding one year. Again, section 1105 provides that a fee-simple title is presumed to be intended to pass by a grant of real property, unless it appears from the grant that a lesser estate was intended, and that by this section the lesser estate referred to must be a life estate or a leasehold estate for years. Again, section 1108 deals with "a grant made by the owner of an estate for life or years." Still further it is pointed out that in S. F. & O. R. R. Co. v. City of Oakland, 43 Cal. 502, it is declared that at the present day the word "grant" is effectual to convey an estate in a corporeal hereditament; that the word has now become a generic term, applicable to the transfer of all classes of real property; and that in Commercial Bank v. Pritchard, 126 Cal. 600, 59 Pac. 130, a lease of land for a term of five years is construed to be a conveyance of real property, within the meaning of section 1215, Civil Code. Upon the other hand, respondent points out that these interpretations have to do generally with recordation acts, and that, while section 1053, as above set forth, declares that "a transfer in writing is called a grant or conveyance or bill of sale," a transfer, itself defined by section 1039 of the same Code, is "an act of the parties or of the law by which the title to property is conveyed from one living person to another," and that in the case of leases the title is not transferred. Attention is directed to such cases as Simonson v. Burr, 121 Cal. 582, 54 Pac. 87, where it was contended that the lease of the homestead was an abandonment of the homestead right, under section 1243 of the Civil Code, which declares that a homestead is abandoned "by a grant thereof," and this court held that a lease was not embraced within the meaning of "grant," as there employed; and Mott v. Ruckman, 3 Blatchf. 71, Fed. Cas. No. 9,881, where the statute provided that no conveyance of a vessel should be valid, unless recorded, and the vessel had been leased, the United States Circuit Court held that a lease was not included in the word "conveyance"; and Des Moines Co., etc., v. Tubbessing, 87 Iowa, 138, 54 N. W. 68, where the court declared: "We are unable to find a single instance where the word 'grant' is construed as a 'lease,' without other words to control its meaning." And, finally, the American & English Encyclopedia of the Law (2d Ed.) vol. 7, p. 487, is cited to the following effect: "Blackstone enumerates leases as among the primary 'conveyances' at common law, and in several cases the term 'conveyance' has been held to include a 'lease'; but the weight of authority is to the effect that in its ordinary significance the term does not embrace a chattel interest in realty."

Enough has been said to show that the meaning of the word "grant" has by judicial interpretation been narrowed or enlarged to meet the exigencies of specific cases and the spirit of the law in which the word is employed. We are still left to determine the specific meaning as employed in the Constitution. And here resort first must be had to the rule of construction that, in interpreting the Constitution, as in construing a legislative statute, unless a special definition has been given to a word, the word shall be taken in its ordinary and generally accepted sense. Harris v. Reynolds, 13 Cal. 514, 73 Am. Dec. 600; Houghton's Appeal, 42 Cal. 35. These cases have to do with the construction of statutes. The applicability of the same rule in constitutional interpretation is declared in Oakland, etc., Co. v. Hilton, 69 Cal. 491, 11 Pac. 3. Indeed, even if the word have a technical, as well as popular, meaning, the latter will be given it, unless the context forces the conclusion that it was otherwise used. Weill v. Kenfield, 54 Cal. 111. It cannot be gainsaid but that in the ordinary and general acceptation of the word "grant" and of the word "sale," and particularly where the two are used in conjunction, as here, they convey the idea of parting with the fee for a monetary or other consideration, and do not embrace the concept of a lease. It would require no explanation if a man declared that he had granted his farm. But it would require explanation if he desired to be understood thereby that he had merely leased it. It would require no explanation if a man should desire to convey the idea that he had sold his horse or his house, but it would require much explanation if he said that by the use of the word "sold" he meant to convey the idea that he had leased his house or let his horse. Only by a resort to meanings given to the words in extreme cases, and not to their generally accepted meaning, can they be stretched to cover and include the idea of leasing.

A resort to the constitutional debates to which we are invited throws no light upon the question. An amendment to the provision as it now stands was offered, authorizing boards of supervisors to lease for a limited period of years, excepting from this provision the board of supervisors and the water front of the city and county of San Francisco. In the debate which followed, little light is thrown upon the question, because the attack was directed principally to the whole section, with or without its amendment. It cannot be determined from the debates, under any consensus of opinion expressed by the debators, why the amendment was stricken out, and, for aught that appears to the contrary, it might have been under the view that the section as it now appears authorized leases without the amendment. It might have been because the term of leasing in the proposed amendment was deemed too great or too small; or it might have been because the city and county of San Francisco was excluded from the operation of the provision. It might have been for any of these or for a multitude of other reasons.

Much more light, however, is thrown upon the question by the interpretation put upon it by the body which first declared it, and which, saving for the constitutional restrictions, has supreme charge and control over the public lands, namely, the Legislature. The constitutional provision itself was originally a legislative enactment. It will be found in the early statutes (see Pol. Code, § 3488), which, making provision for the sale of swamp, marsh, and tide lands, excluded from the operation of the law all such lands within five miles of the corporate limits of either San Francisco or the city of Oakland, or within two miles of any other incorporated city or town. The advocates of the constitutional amendment declared in debate that by subdivision 3 they were merely putting into the Constitution what for years had been upon the statute books of the state. As this provision originated with the Legislature, its interpretation of its own enactment is peculiarly persuasive. Throughout it will be found that the Legislature has never regarded its provision or the constitutional declaration as forbidding the leasing of such lands. The act of the Legislature ratifying this lease does not stand alone. An act of the Legislature in 1889 (Stats. 1889, p. 305) creates a board of state harbor commissioners for the bay of San Diego. By this act certain sections were added to the Political Code, and one of them (section 2605) declares: "The commission shall have the right to lease said lands under such established rules and regulations as it may adopt." In 1901 (Stats. 1901, p. 601) the lease of China Basin in the bay of San Francisco was ratified and confirmed by the state. By act of March 26, 1895 (Stats. 1895, p. 194), the state board of harbor commissioners of San Francisco was authorized "to lease such portion or portions of the sea wall as they may deem expedient for such purposes solely, as will be most advantageous to the commerce of the port." The Legislature of 1909 ratified and approved amendments to the charter of the city of Los Angeles. Stats. 1909, p. 1289. And herein was the provision that the city may "lease by ordinance from the water front in excess of said 10,000 feet so owned by the city * * * alternate frontages," etc. While in an act granting to the city of Los Angeles the tidelands and submerged lands of the state within the boundaries of the city (Stats. 1911, p. 1256), it is declared "that said city or its successors may grant franchises thereon for limited periods for wharves and other public uses and purposes, and may lease said lands or any part thereof for limited periods for purposes consistent with the trusts upon which said lands are held by the state of California." And prior to the adoption of the Constitution of 1879 authority to make leases of the tidelands had been frequently granted by the Legislature to the harbor commissioners of San Francisco. Stats. 1863, p. 406; Stats. 1865–66, p. 853; Stats. 1867–68, p. 408; Stats. 1869–70, pp. 799–800. Finally, it may be said that by this court there has been a judicial acceptance of the soundness of this interpretation expressed in Pac. Coast Steamship Co. v. Kimball, 114 Cal. 414, 46 Pac. 275, where the city of Monterey had leased land to a steamshhip company, which had erected thereon its private wharf; the land being within the corporate limits of the city. In discussing the power of the municipality to make such a lease, the court, speaking through Justice Temple, said: "Wharves are often appropriated to the use of an individual or a company, and it cannot be doubted that Monterey could lease small portions of its water front for bathing grounds, or for any lawful purpose, not injurious to the harbor or an inconvenience to commerce. This being so, I see no reason why it might not lease a small portion to a steamship company for its special use."

But if, after all this, doubt can be entertained, that doubt must be resolved in favor of the power of the state so to lease, from the manifest benefits which will follow such construction, as contrasted with the most obvious detriments to commercial development which would attend the other. The purpose of the constitutional provision was not to blight commercial development, but to foster it. It designed to foster it by preventing the alienation into private ownership of the fee of such lands, whereby all might be acquired and held in private ownership to the destruction of the public use. But it did not mean to abort commerce in embryo or to strangle it in its infancy by putting a ban upon the activities of private commercial enterprises. Saving in San Francisco, most of the improvements of our harbors have been made by private capital. The case last referred to in 114 Cal. 414, 46 Pac. 275, is typical of it, where the sole wharf of the town of Monterey, at which five steamers a week landed, was due wholly to private enterprise and private capital. To hold that the state, or that municipalities acting as its mandatories, may not lease, with proper restrictions of time and proper regard to public and quasi public use, lands such as these, so that private enterprise and capital may build up the commerce of our seaport cities, is to declare that all such commerce must await the slow and frequently incompetent initiative of the municipalities themselves—municipalities which frequently are unwilling to incur the expense and risk which would be accepted under reasonable terms by private enterprise. If municipalities may not so lease these lands, they may not even grant franchises in connection with them; for, notwithstanding the well-recognized legal distinctions existing between a lease of land and a franchise involving the use of land for specific purposes, in practical effect the franchise is nothing other than a lease, with a right of possession and use for the indicated purposes. Pol. Code, § 2911. Nor need the slightest apprehension be felt that the power so to lease may result in a monopoly comparable to that which might follow the power to sell. In the case of sale, the title and control over the land are gone. In the case of leases, all proper restrictions may be cast about the use. An entry by the lessor may be had for breach of covenant; possession of the land, with its improvements, after the term of years, returns to the municipality and state, and in the meantime the interests of navigation and commerce are not impaired, but are in the highest degree stimulated and fostered. The lease in this instance is typical. Vast expenditures were made which the lessor would never have made, and to a portion of land—a mere fragment of all of the like water front lands—access is given to a transcontinental railroad for all purposes of inland and marine commerce, while at the expiration of the term of the lease the possession of the lands returns to the state. What policy more beneficial to the state itself than this, it would not be easy to point out. No other matters call for special mention.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgments and orders appealed from are affirmed.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company against Gussie Nelson and others. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying defendants a new trial, they appeal. Affirmed.

Dian R. Gardner, for appellants. A. S. Halsted, Miner P. Goodrich, and S. M. Johnstone, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from the judgment and from an order denying the defendants' motion for a new trial. The case is in all essential particulars identical with the cases entitled San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company v. Hamilton et al. (L. A. No. 2,539), and Hamilton et al. v. San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company (L. A. No. 2,540), 119 Pac. 1073, which have been this day decided in bank upon an opinion filed.

Upon the authority of those cases, and for the reasons given in the opinion aforesaid, the judgment and order herein appealed from are affirmed.

McPHEE v. RECLAMATION DIST. NO. 765 et al. (Sac. 1,930.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 432*) — ENFORCEMENT — INJUNCTION.

Where a defense existed in favor of a party, but could not be interposed in the action in which a judgment complained of was rendered, equity would restrain the enforcement of the judgment until such proceeding could be taken to render the defense available.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 816–819; Dec. Dig. § 432.*]

2. DRAINS (§ 91*) — JUDGMENT — ENFORCEMENT.

In an action to enforce an assessment levied by a reclamation district, a landowner denied that the district was legally created; but on appeal it was held that the validity of the organization of the district could not be questioned in an action on the assessment, if, when the assessment was levied, the district had a de facto existence. The court then decided that the validity of the organization of the district could be tested only on quo warranto, and that at the time the assessment was levied it had a de facto existence. The landowner immediately instituted quo warranto proceedings to test the validity of the organization of the district, and while these proceedings were pending other proceedings were instituted to sell her land for nonpayment of the assessments. Held, that such owner was not entitled to an injunction restraining the prosecution of such proceedings until the quo warranto case was determined, since, even if a judgment of ouster against the district was rendered, it would not annul or affect the acts performed by the district prior to the judgment; such judgment of ouster not being retroactive so as to affect or destroy acts or contracts made prior to its rendition.

3. JUDGMENT (§ 713*) — RES JUDICATA — DEFENSES—ESTOPPEL.

A suit having been instituted by a reclamation district to sell a landowner's property for nonpayment of an assessment, she defended on the ground that the district was without legal organization. On appeal, it was held that the district was a de facto corporation, and the assessment therefore enforceable. The owner thereafter brought quo warranto to test the validity of the district. Held, that the landowner in such prior action either litigated the question of the district's de facto existence and was defeated thereon, or had an opportunity to show want of de facto existence and failed to do so; in either of which events, the prior judgment, finding that the district had a de facto existence, was res judicata.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; N. A. Hawkins, Judge.

Action by Anna McPhee against Reclamation District No. 765 and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 13 Cal. App. 382, 109 Pac. 1106.

Hudson Grant and U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen. (E. A. Bridgford, of counsel), for appellant. A. L. Shinn and Shinn & Shinn, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. Plaintiff is the owner of certain lands in Yolo county. She is seeking to free these lands from the lien of assessments levied by the defendant Reclamation District No. 765. Her contention is that the proceedings leading up to the attempted formation of said district were void for want of jurisdictional prerequisites. A proceeding in quo warranto has been instituted in the name of the people of the state against said district to test its right to corporate existence. The present action is one in equity, and is brought to enjoin the enforcement of the assessment liens until the conclusion of the quo warranto proceedings shall have determined whether or not there is a reclamation district authorized to levy assessments. The court below sustained a demurrer to the amended complaint, and, the plaintiff declining to amend further, judgment was entered in favor of defendants. From this judgment the plaintiff appeals.

The amended complaint begins by setting forth the steps taken in the attempt to form Reclamation District No. 765. We need not undertake to state these matters in detail. It is enough to say that there was a failure to publish the petition for the organization of the district for the period required by the statute (Pol. Code, § 3447), and that this failure, as is conceded by the respondents, went to the jurisdiction of the board of supervisors to form the district, and is fatal to the de jure existence of such district.

The pleading then goes on to describe the various steps leading up to the levy of an assessment on the lands within the district (including the lands of plaintiff) to pay the cost of reclamation work. All of this was done without the knowledge of the plaintiff. Upon her refusal to pay, an action was begun against her in the name of said Reclamation District No. 765, to enforce said assessment. In that action said defendant (plaintiff herein) attempted to defend by denying the allegation, contained in the complaint therein, that said pretended district was duly organized and existing as a reclamation district and constituted a public corporation and agency, and relied, in support of such denial, upon the facts above stated, showing that there never had been a valid organization of the district. But the superior court refused to entertain the defense, and gave judgment for the plaintiff in said action. On appeal, the judgment was affirmed by the District Court of Appeal for the Third Appellate District, on the ground that in that action the corporate existence of the plaintiff therein could not be questioned, but such existence could only be questioned in proceedings in quo warranto, at the suit of the state. A petition to have the cause heard in the Supreme Court was denied and the judgment in favor of the district became final. Thereafter the defendant in that action, and plaintiff herein, Anna McPhee, applied to the Attorney General for leave to institute proceedings in quo warranto against the said district. Such leave was granted, and an action, entitled "People of the State of California, on the relation of Anna McPhee v. Reclamation District No. 765 et al.," was instituted and is now pending. In that action the right of the defendant to exist as a corporation or public agency is involved. After the commencement of such proceedings in the name of the people, and notwithstanding the pendency thereof, the defendants caused execution to be issued upon the judgment theretofore obtained against the plaintiff, and pursuant thereto the sheriff of Yolo county gave notice that plaintiff's lands would be sold on such execution on the 14th day of January, 1911. This action was commenced on the 13th day of January, 1911, for the purpose of obtaining an injunction restraining the district and the sheriff from selling plaintiff's lands under said execution until the proceeding in quo warranto could be heard and final judgment therein be rendered. The court below denied a temporary restraining order, and on the day set for the sale the sheriff offered plaintiff's lands for sale under the execution. and said property was struck off to Lizzie H. Glide, one of the defendants herein, for the amount of the judgment, interest, and costs. A certificate of sale was executed and delivered by the sheriff to said purchaser. After such sale, the plaintiff, with leave of court, filed her amended complaint, in which she set forth, in addition to the foregoing facts, the commencement of a second action against her by the defendants to enforce a second assessment against her lands. The prayer of the amended complaint is for an injunction restraining the execution of a sheriff's deed under the sale made, and the prosecution of the action on the second amendment, until the determination of the proceeding in quo warranto.

The position of the appellant is that inasmuch as she was, in the litigation instituted by the district to foreclose the alleged lien, precluded from showing in defense that the district was never legally organized, but was remitted to the remedy of quo warranto, she should in equity and justice be entitled to protect her land from forced sale under such assessment until the question of the legality of the existence of the district can be determined in the only proceeding by which she may have it tested. The effect of the decision in the action brought by the district against the plaintiff was, it is argued, to hold that any set of persons acting without authority of the statute may assume to be a reclamation district, may levy assessments upon land, and then enforce such assessments by actions in which their want of power to proceed cannot be questioned. Unless the property owner can, by some other form of proceeding, litigate the question of the right of such persons to so proceed, he is, says the appellant, deprived of his property without due process of law. If the only opportunity of the landowner to raise this question is in quo warranto, and he diligently proceeds to seek this remedy, he must be protected in the possession of his land until the quo warranto proceedings can be brought to a determination.

The opinion of the District Court of Appeal affirming the judgment against plaintiff is reported in 13 Cal. App. at page 382, 109 Pac. 1106, under the title of "Reclamation District No. 765 v. Anna McPhee." If it were true that, in that case, the Court of Appeal had held that, in an action brought in the name of a pretended reclamation district, the landowner could not defend upon the ground that there was no such district, and that the only way in which the existence of the district could be questioned was by quo warranto, the position of the appellant would be unanswerable, for certainly, as was said in Piper v. Rhodes, 30 Ind. 309, "there must be a corporation to authorize the collection of assessments," and the law must, in some form of proceeding, give to such appellant an opportunity to deny the existence of a district authorized to levy assessments before her land is finally taken from her. If her only remedy against an attempt to burden her land with assessments levied by unauthorized persons assuming without right to act as a reclamation district is by quo warranto, and she is proceeding as diligently as may be to assert this remedy, she is entitled in the interim to the protection of a court of equity.

[1] The fact that the judgment foreclosing the lien has gone against her would not affect her right, if the facts entitling her to attack the assessment were of such a nature that she was, by reason of some rule of law, precluded from asserting them in defense to the foreclosure suit. Where a defense existed in favor of a party defendant, but could not be interposed in the action in which the judgment complained of was rendered, equity will restrain the enforcement of that judgment. N. Y. & H. R. Co. v. Haws, 56 N. Y. 175; Scott v. Shreeve, 12 Wheat. 607, 6 L. Ed. 744; Hibbard v. Eastman, 47 N. H. 507, 93 Am. Dec. 467; Ferrell v. Allen, 5 W. Va. 43.

[2] But an examination of the opinion in Reclamation District v. McPhee shows that the court did not lay down the rule as broadly as the appellant claims. What was held was that the validity of the organization of the district could not be questioned by the defendant in an action on the assessment, if at the time of levying the assessment the district had a de facto existence. As appears by that opinion, the court decided that the reclamation district, plaintiff herein, although not validly organized, was a de facto corporation, and it was for this reason that it was held that its de jure existence could not be collaterally questioned in a proceeding brought by it to enforce its assessments. It was not held that in an action on an assessment, brought by a pretended reclamation district, the landowner could not show in defense that the body or persons assuming to assess his land and to bring an action to enforce the assessment had no existence, either de jure or de facto, as a corporation. On the contrary, it was stated that, if the pretended corporation had had no de facto existence, its right to exist might have been attacked collaterally in an action on the assessment. But, concluding that the district was shown to have had a de facto existence, the court held that the legality of the steps taken for its formation could not be attacked in the action to enforce the assessment. This was based upon the rule that the validity of an assessment levied by a de facto corporation of this character does not depend upon the fact of the de jure character of the corporation. Anything contrary to this rule that may have been said in Reclamation District v. Burger, 122 Cal. 442, 55 Pac. 156, must be disregarded as conflicting with a long line of earlier and later decisions, many of which are cited by the District Court of Appeal in its opinion (13 Cal. App. at page 388, 109 Pac. 1106).

Under these circumstances it is difficult to see how an injunction restraining the execution of a sheriff's deed until the determination of the quo warranto proceedings would be of any benefit to plaintiff. If the reclamation district was a de facto corporation, a judgment in quo warranto, even though it should determine that the district had not been legally organized, would not annul or affect the acts performed by it before the judgment in quo warranto. People v. Flint, 64 Cal. 49, 28 Pac. 495; 23 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 628, 629; Gaff v. Flesher, 33 Ohio St. 115; Schaefer v. People, 20 Ill. App. 605. "A judgment of ouster is not retroactive so as to affect or destroy acts done or contracts made prior to its rendition." 23 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 629. If the assessments when levied were valid because of the de facto character of the corporation, their validity could not be destroyed by a subsequent adjudication, in an action at the suit of the state, that the alleged district had no legal right to corporate existence.

[3] But, argues the appellant, the facts alleged by her in the present complaint show that the reclamation district never had even a de facto existence. We need not enter into any discussion of this point. The supposed de facto existence of the district was the only ground upon which this plaintiff as defendant in the action to enforce the assessment was precluded from showing the want of legal authority of the assumed district. Under the law laid down by the Court of Appeal, it was certainly open to her to show in defense that there was neither a de jure nor a de facto corporation. One of two things must then be true: Either she litigated in that action the question of the de facto existence of the district, and, having been defeated on this issue, is estopped by the final judgment from again raising the same question in this action; or else, having had the opportunity to show the want of de facto (in addition to de jure) existence in defense to the former action, she failed to show it. If the court in the suit on the assessment did actually determine that the plaintiff therein was a de facto corporation, and the question was in issue, the plaintiff cannot now urge that the determination on this point was erroneous. When a judgment has once become final, its conclusive effect upon the parties with respect to the matters adjudicated does not depend in any degree upon the correctness of the adjudication. On the other hand, if the plaintiff failed, in the former action, to plead and show that there was no de facto corporation, she is equally precluded from raising the point now. Equity will not relieve against a final judgment upon any ground which might have been asserted as a defense in the action in which the judgment complained of was rendered. 25 Cyc. 1006; Agard v. Valencia, 39 Cal. 292; Ede v. Hazen, 61 Cal. 360.

In what we have said, we have confined ourselves to a discussion of the plaintiff's prayer for an injunction restraining the enforcement of the judgment obtained on the first assessment. If the grounds for sustaining the denial of this relief be sound, the plaintiff is in no better position to restrain the prosecution of the action to enforce the second assessment. The want of de facto existence is available to the appellant in defense of that action, unless she is estopped by the judgment in the first action. We express no opinion as to which of these alternatives be correct; but, in either view, there is no ground for the interposition of equity. Furthermore, the granting of an injunction to stay proceedings in the pending action on the second assessment would be directly contrary to the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 3423 of the Civil Code. Spreckels v. Hawaiian C. & S. Co., 117 Cal. 377, 49 Pac. 353; Wright v. Superior Court, 139 Cal. 469, 73 Pac. 145.

It would seem, therefore, that the court below rightly sustained the demurrer.

The judgment is affirmed.

(S. F. 5,629.)

1. WOODS AND FORESTS (§ 7*)—COUNTY FIRE WARDENS—POWER OF COUNTY SUPERVISORS.

Under St. 1905, p. 235, authorizing the state forester to appoint county fire wardens, who may receive payment from the county or from private sources, an order of the board of supervisors removing as "fire, fish and game warden" one who held both offices of fire warden and fish and game warden, while invalid so far as it attempts to remove him as fire warden, does operate to deprive him of right to any compensation from the county.

Petition by Walter R. Welch for writ of mandate against Willett Ware, Auditor of the County of Santa Cruz. Judgment granting a peremptory writ, and respondent appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Benj. K. Knight, Dist. Atty., for appellant. Charles B. Younger, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment granting petitioner a peremptory writ of mandate.

[1] On April 30, 1907, petitioner was appointed by the state forester of the state of California a voluntary fire warden for Santa Cruz county. He qualified as such, and has since continued to perform the duties of such fire warden. On January 4, 1909, he was by a single order of the board of supervisors of Santa Cruz county appointed the fish and game warden of said county and also fire warden thereof for the ensuing two years with a general salary fixed at $100 a month, and he duly qualified as such fish and game warden under said appointment. On May 18, 1909, the members of said board of supervisors called a special meeting of said board for that same date, setting forth in the call, among other business to be transacted at such special meeting, "to take action in reference to the appointment of W. R. Welch [petitioner] as the fire, fish, and game warden of the county of Santa Cruz," and at said called meeting an order of the board was made and entered reciting that "it appearing to the board that W. R. Welch, the fire, fish, and game warden of Santa Cruz county has not been acting for the best interests of this county for the protection of fish and game, and good and sufficient cause appearing therefor, * * * it is by unanimous vote ordered that the office of fire, fish, and game warden of the county of Santa Cruz be declared vacant on and after June 1, 1909," and about June 7, 1909, appointed one Al Malott as fire, fish, and game warden of the county. No notice was given petitioner by the board that it contemplated his removal from the said office or offices; and no charges were ever preferred against said petitioner by or before the board for violation or alleged violation of the duties of said offices or any of them, and after said attempted removal petitioner continued to perform and discharge the duties of fire, fish, and game warden for said county. On July 3, 1909, petitioner demanded of the appellant, auditor of the county, that he draw a warrant upon the treasurer thereof for the sum of $100 or any other sum in payment of the salary of petitioner as fire, fish, and game warden of the county for the month of June, 1909, but appellant declined to draw said warrant for said sum or any other sum, and on his refusal petitioner brought this proceeding in mandamus in the superior court of Santa Cruz county to compel the auditor to draw said warrant, alleging the above facts as a basis therefor. After answer by appellant, which substantially admitted all the allegations of the petition, and a hearing thereon, the superior court awarded the petitioner a peremptory writ against appellant as prayed for, directing him to issue a warrant in favor of respondent for $100 as salary for the said month of June as fire, fish, and game warden.

The main question involved on this appeal is the validity of the order of the board of supervisors of May 18, 1909, removing the respondent from office. In considering this question it will have to be borne in mind that the respondent while appointed by the board of supervisors on January 4, 1909, generally as fire, fish, and game warden of the county for the ensuing two years, was in effect appointed to two different offices, one as fire warden of the county, the other as fish and game warden thereof, if it really can be said that the order of the board of supervisors appointing him fire warden had even that effect. There is nothing in the statutes authorizing the appointment by a board of supervisors of a fire warden. Under the act "providing for the regulation of fires" (Stats. 1905, p. 235), it is provided that "the state forester shall appoint in such number and localities as he deems wise, public spirited citizens to act as public fire wardens, who may receive payment for their services from the county or from private sources." Under this provision of the act, it is conceded by appellant that the board of supervisors of Santa Cruz county had authority to provide for the payment of compensation for respondent as the appointee of the state forester as fire warden of Santa Cruz county, but this is the only authority given the board; hence, as far as the order of the board appointing respondent fire warden is concerned, it can only be taken as evidencing an election on the part of the board under the forestry act to pay him as the appointee of the state forester for his services in the discharge of his duties under such appointment. There is no provision of the law, however, which requires the board to make compensation to him in any given amount or if compensation is allowed him by the board, that it shall continue for any given time or term.

[2] The situation, however, is different as to the appointment of a fish and game warden. Section 4149b of the Political Code provides that "the board of supervisors of each county may in the discretion of the board * * * appoint a suitable person to serve for the period of two years from the date of his appointment as fish and game warden of the county. Such fish and game warden may be removed by the board of supervisors for intemperance, neglect of duty or other good and sufficient reasons." And section 4149d provides that the salary of the fish and game warden shall be in counties of the thirteenth class (to which Santa Cruz county belongs) the sum of $50 per month. In addition, he shall be allowed a sum not to exceed $25 a month for expenses incurred by him in the performance of his duties. "Said salary and expenses must be paid monthly from the county treasury." Having directed attention to these provisions of the law respecting the dual offices held by respondent, we proceed to a consideration of the merits of the appeal.

The claim of the appellant is that, as far as the appointment of respondent as fire warden is concerned (treating the order of January 4, 1909, as an appointment), the board had authority to remove him at any time, as no term for his appointment is provided by law, and the provisions of section 4149d of the Political Code have no application, and that this latter provision of the Code relating to the removal of the fish and game warden for certain causes or any good or sufficient reason left it entirely to the board of supervisors to remove him summarily for any reason satisfactory to itself without any charges made or hearing thereon, and that the contrary view taken by the trial court was erroneous. In support of this latter position appellant relies on the Matter of Carter, 141 Cal. 316, 74 Pac. 997.

As far as the attempted removal of respondent from the office to which he was appointed as fish and game warden is concerned, we are satisfied that the conclusion of the trial court was correct. This point is thoroughly settled by the recent decision of this court in Bannerman v. Boyle, 116 Pac. 732. In that case the charter of the city and county of San Francisco provided that the board of education shall be composed of four school directors appointed by the mayor whose term of office shall be four years, so classified that the term of one of them should expire each year. Bannerman was appointed in 1909 to hold for the remainder of an unexpired term ending January 8, 1911. On February 15, 1910, the mayor without any notice or hearing removed or attempted to remove him from office and attempted to appoint another to fill the assumed vacancy. Bannerman refused to vacate the office, denied the validity of the action of the mayor in attempting to remove him, and in due time brought an original proceeding in mandamus in this court to compel the auditor to pay his monthly salary which had accrued subsequent to the attempted removal. The charter of the city of San Francisco (section 18) provides that "any elected officer except supervisors may be suspended by the mayor and removed by the supervisors for cause; and any appointed officer may be removed by the mayor for cause. The mayor shall appoint some person to discharge the duties of the office during the period of such suspension." It was sought to sustain the action of the mayor under this provision of the charter; that it conferred upon him authority to summarily remove any appointive officer without the formulation of any charges or notice or a hearing thereon. On the other hand, it was contended that the mayor had no power to proceed against such appointive officer without charges preferred against him constituting "cause" and giving the officer notice and an opportunity to be heard in defense before conviction and removal. In disposing of this question this court said: "Upon this question, the great weight of authority is to the effect that where an officer is appointed for a fixed term, and it is provided that he may be removed during the term 'for cause,' without other qualifying words, such removal cannot be made except after notice and a hearing. Mr. Throop states it thus: 'The doctrine that an officer can be removed only upon notice, and after a hearing, where the tenure of his office is during good behavior, or until removal for cause or for a definite term, subject to be removed for cause, * * * may be regarded as settled law in this country.' Throop on Public Officers, § 364. Mr. Mechem says: 'Where the appointment or election is made for a definite term or during good behavior, and the removal is to be for cause, it is now clearly established by the great weight of authority that the power of removal cannot, except by clear statutory authority, be exercised without notice and hearing, but that the existence of the cause, for which the power is to be exercised, must first be determined after notice has been given to the officer of the charges made against him and he has been given an opportunity to be heard in his defense.' Mechem on Officers, § 454. The same is said to be the rule by Mr. Dillon. Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 250. A large number of decisions are cited in support of this doctrine. The following apply the doctrine to cases like the present one, where the tenure is for a fixed term." Here a number of cases are cited by the court sustaining the doctrine. "Many of these are cases where the power to remove was qualified, as here, simply by the words, 'for cause'; in others particular causes are specified, such as 'official misconduct,' 'inability or misbehavior,' and the like. The distinction is not material. The words 'for cause,' without more, imply good cause; the existence of some facts which would constitute a reasonable cause for the removal." There is no difference between the terms of the charter provision construed in the foregoing decision and the terms of the provision of section 4149b allowing the removal of a fish and game warden appointed for a fixed term under the law only for cause. Under such provision of the Code, the respondent could only be legally removed after an opportunity to be heard on charges preferred against him. Nor is it necessary to discuss the Carter Case because it is fully considered in the Bannerman Case and the doctrine announced there is shown to have no application to a provision of law with reference to the removal of officers for cause such as is involved here.

It therefore follows under the foregoing decision that the action of the board of supervisors in as far as it attempted to remove plaintiff from the office of fish and game warden, without charges made and notice thereof and an opportunity to be heard, was void, and petitioner still held the office of fish and game warden during the month of June, was entitled to whatever amount his salary as such was, and to a writ compelling the auditor to draw a warrant on the treasurer therefor. But, while the attempt of the board to remove him as fish and game warden was void, we are satisfied that the order of the board, in as far as it was directed against him as fire warden, was valid. Of course, the board of supervisors could not revoke his appointment as fire warden because that came officially from the state forester. The board had, however, on January 4, 1909, when it made the order appointing him fish and game warden also formally appointed him fire warden for two years at an aggregate salary in his dual capacities of $100 a month. The only purpose of designating him an appointee of the board as fire warden for the county of Santa Cruz was to authorize payment for his services as such from the county, which was all the board was authorized to do. It was a matter of volition with the board, however, whether in the first instance it would compensate a fire warden at all and in what amount and for how long. It might provide for it at pleasure and revoke it at any time it saw fit, and all that the order of the board of May 18, 1909, amounted to, as far as it affected petitioner's office as fire warden, was to withdraw any further compensation to him as such warden after June 1, 1909, and this the board had undoubtedly the right to do. Even treating respondent as an appointee of the board to the office of fire warden, as the law does not fix any term for which such appointment is to be made, he could hold it only during the pleasure of the board, as he would come within the general rule that, where no definite time of appointment is fixed by law for which an appointee shall hold, the board or officer who makes it may revoke the appointment at pleasure without notice or charge; that the pleasure of the appointing officer or board is the measure of the appointee's term. Throop on Pub. Officers, § 354; Mechem on Officers, § 445.

Now as to the validity of the judgment requiring the auditor to draw a warrant in the amount of $100 in favor of petitioner for the month of June, 1909.

It is quite obvious from the conclusion that we have reached that the court should not have ordered the warrant drawn for that amount. The office of the fish and game warden is a county office (Pol. Code, § 4013), having a fixed term and a definite salary of $50 a month, with the additional proviso that the board may further allow the expenses of the said fish and game warden in an amount not exceeding $25 monthly. As a county officer petitioner was entitled to have a warrant drawn for his salary for each month, as a warrant for the salary of other county officers is drawn. Any amount claimed by him as expenses must be presented to the board of supervisors for allowance, which it is conceded in the case at bar was not done by the petitioner. In fixing the compensation of petitioner at $100 a month, the board of supervisors, as the salary of fish and game warden could only be $50 a month, must have allowed the additional sum of $50 for his compensation as fire warden. But as the order revoking his allowance as such fire warden, which was the practical effect of the order of May 18, 1909, was valid, and the order revoking his appointment as fish and game warden void, he was only entitled to have drawn in his favor a warrant for $50 for the month of June, 1909, for the salary fixed by law as fish and game warden, and a warrant for that sum is all that the court should in its judgment have directed the auditor to draw.

The judgment is therefore reversed, with instructions to the superior court to modify its judgment by directing the auditor to draw a warrant on the treasurer in favor of petitioner for $50 only for his salary as fish and game warden for the month of June, 1909, and as so modified the judgment is affirmed. The appellant to recover his costs.

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 404*)—EVIDENCE—INSTRUMENT USED—IDENTIFICATION.

Evidence in a homicide case held sufficient prima facie evidence of the identity of a revolver as that with which the killing was done to authorize its admission in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 404.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 656*)—TRIAL—REMARKS OF COURT.

After the court had suggested to defendant's counsel the proper method of impeaching witness, by her statements at the preliminary examination, and, on his claiming the right to pursue the method he was following, because of the incompetency of the interpreter, had stated that another interpreter would be provided, said counsel expressed a desire to make a statement to the court, whereon it said: "Never mind what your statement is. This is a small matter. I want to straighten it out, I don't want any dilly-dallying about small matters." Held, this remark of the court was not a comment on the weight of any evidence of the witness, but referred to useless discussion of the incompetency of the interpreter.

3. WITNESSES (§ 246*)—INTERROGATING BY COURT.

The interrogating by the court of witnesses on behalf of the people, being for the purpose of bringing out more clearly some facts which their testimony on the subject had left rather indefinite, cannot be complained of as showing an active sympathy with the prosecution.

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1166½*)—TRIAL—ABRUPTNESS OF COURT TO DEFENDANT'S COUNSEL.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Alex Szafcsur was convicted of murder, and, denied a new trial, appeals. Affirmed.

Henry F. Marshall, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., C. M. Fickert, Dist. Atty., James F. Brennan, Asst. Dist. Atty., and E. A. Lane, Asst. Dist. Atty., for the People.

LORIGAN, J. Appellant was convicted of the murder of his wife and sentenced to death, and from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial he appeals.

Trouble had occurred between appellant and his wife, and she had instituted divorce proceedings. The evidence shows that prior to the killing appellant had contemplated the death of his wife and his own suicide. The parties lived on Frederick street in the city of San Francisco near Golden Gate Park. On the morning of April 4, 1910, appellant purchased a pistol and ammunition, and about 7:30 in the evening went home and deliberately fired three shots therefrom into the body of his wife causing her instant death. He immediately ran from the house to Golden Gate Park and there shot himself in the head, inflicting, however, a scalp wound from which he readily recovered. A police officer, immediately notified of appellant's attempted suicide, found him lying in the park, wounded as stated, but conscious, and with a five-chamber revolver in his hand, three chambers being empty and the other two containing shells—one exploded, the other intact. On the trial the appellant did not take the stand. The killing of his wife by him was not denied; the sole defense interposed in his behalf being that he was insane at the time he killed her.

On this appeal the following points are made for a reversal: That the court erred in admitting in evidence the revolver found in the possession of the defendant in the park and which was taken from him by the police officer, because it was not sufficiently identified as the weapon with which he killed his wife; that for the same reason it erroneously allowed testimony by the same officer of statements by defendant concerning the purchase of a revolver and ammunition on the morning of the killing; that the court erred in commenting before the jury on the weight of certain evidence; and that both the court and the district attorney were guilty of misconduct prejudicial to the cause of the defendant. None of these points have any merit and in ordinary cases might be disposed of with short notice. As, however, this is a capital case, we will consider them separately.

[1] That the deceased was killed by shots fired from a revolver by appellant there can be no question. There is no room for dispute in the case on that subject, and this being true, under ordinary circumstances, whether the court erred in admitting on insufficient proof of identity a particular revolver with which it was claimed a killing took place could work no prejudice. Appellant's claim of prejudicial error, is based, however, on the nature of his defense—insanity. He insists that admitting the revolver in evidence which was found in possession of appellant in the park, together with the showing of its condition as to the absence and presence of shells, afforded a basis for an argument by the district attorney to the jury, and which was in fact made, that appellant on his way to the park after the firing of the three shots at his wife had extracted that number of empty shells from the revolver, and that this action hardly comported with the act of an insane man. We simply state the reasoning of counsel for appellant to show that if the court erred there might be some plausibility in his claim that the error was prejudicial. But we think there was sufficient proof tending to show that the revolver which was found in the hand of appellant by the officer was the same weapon with which the killing had been done, and its admission in evidence was proper for the very reason which appellant now assigns against its admissibility. That appellant killed his wife with a revolver was, as we have said, at no time in the case open to question. Immediately after shooting her, he ran to the park, and within a short interval of time after the killing of his wife attempted suicide, and is found in the possession of a revolver with three chambers emptied which would represent the chambers discharged at his wife, if it was the same weapon he had used on her, with an exploded shell used in his attempted suicide and an unexploded shell. The police officer took him to the county jail and seated together there on a bench the officer interrogated him about the revolver and the killing of his wife. The officer was not inquiring about an indefinite revolver, but about the very one he had taken from him and in connection with the killing of his wife. He admitted killing her. About the revolver he was asked, "Did you purchase it (the revolver) previous to that time of the shooting (referring to the shooting of his wife)?" and defendant answered that he had purchased the revolver the same day; that he had gone downtown and purchased it and the ammunition at a pawnshop. This evidence on the part of the police officer, while it does not point with clearness or certainty to the identity of the revolver as the one with which the killing was done, was sufficient prima facie evidence to warrant its admission in evidence as the revolver with which it was accomplished. Nowhere in the case was there any effort to overcome this showing.

[2] Now, as to the other points: There is no merit in the claim of appellant that the court commented on the weight of the evidence. During the cross-examination, through an interpreter, by counsel for defendant of a witness produced on behalf of the prosecution, the court said: "Never mind what your statement is. This is a small matter. I want to straighten it out. I don't want any dilly-dallying about small matters." Counsel for defendant was endeavoring to impeach the witness by calling her attention to what purported to be testimony given by her on the preliminary examination of the defendant as appeared in the printed record thereof which counsel had. Counsel and the court had some discussion as to the proper method of proceeding to do so. The court suggested that the proper method for counsel to pursue was to read the question and answer to the witness, as counsel claimed it had been given at the preliminary examination and then ask the witness if the question so purporting to have been asked and answered by her was so asked and answered by her. Counsel for defendant claimed that he was entitled to pursue the method he was following on account of the incompetency of the interpreter not permitting the proper method. The court then remarked that another interpreter would be provided, and, counsel for defendant expressing a desire to make a statement to the court, the judge used the language complained of. This remark by the court was not a comment on the weight of any evidence given by the witness then being examined. The "dilly-dallying" had reference to further discussion by counsel of his inability to proceed in the method suggested by the court, which was undoubtedly the correct one, on account of the incompetency of the interpreter, after the court had announced that another interpreter would be called so that the difficulty could be obviated. It had reference to frittering away time in useless discussion about the incompetency of the present interpreter, when another one was to be procured, and had no relation to the testimony of the witness.

Assignments are made of misconduct on the part of the court and district attorney to the prejudice of the rights of the defendant. Only one assignment is made of misconduct on the part of the district attorney in asking a question to which an objection of counsel for defendant was sustained. This assignment is entirely without merit.

[3, 4] It is claimed that the court interrogated witnesses on the part of the people, thereby showing an active sympathy with the prosecution, that it entered into unnecessary controversy with counsel for defendant, was abrupt in its rulings against him, and in several instances unreasonably reproved counsel and showed hostility to the position of counsel for the defendant in the method of presenting his client's case, all of which tended to embarrass and humiliate counsel and prejudice the cause of his client before the jury. But none of these points is well taken. The interrogation of witnesses by the court was for the purpose of bringing out more clearly some facts which the testimony of the witnesses upon the subject had left rather indefinite. As to the other matters complained of, when the record is examined, it is found that they do not amount in any degree to misconduct on the part of the court or show any hostility to either counsel, his client, or his cause. While in some instances the rulings of the court were abrupt and its remarks to counsel emphatic, they were directed to matters respecting testimony and procedure, and directed solely to points and propositions of law involved, and the discussion between court and counsel had reference to the orderly method of procedure in which the court was right. It is true the court might in some respects have been more urbane and proceeded with a nicer regard to the sensibilities of counsel, who was respectful and courteous to the court throughout the trial, and was defending the accused under appointment by the court. This, however, is a temperamental and ethical matter addressed to the court's own sense of propriety, and its conduct in that respect is not subject to review by the appellate court save to consider whether it has tended to prejudice the defendant. People v. Oliveria, 127 Cal. 383, 59 Pac. 772; People v. Modina, 146 Cal. 142, 79 Pac. 842. The court was insisting, when the rulings and remarks complained of were made, on having certain proceedings conducted in what it deemed a proper and orderly way, and, while somewhat brusque and emphatic in insisting that counsel should proceed as directed by the court, these rulings were proper, and made without any intention of injuring counsel or the cause of his client, and cannot be said to have had any such effect.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

DULEY v. PEACOCK. (Civ. 859.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 8, 1911.)

1. COSTS (§ 12*)—NATURE AND GROUND OF RIGHT—DEPENDENT ON STATUTE—DISCRETION OF COURT.

The right to recover costs is purely statutory, and whether a court can exercise any discretion in the awarding of costs depends on whether the Legislature has committed such discretion to the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. § 20; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

2. ELECTIONS (§ 307*)—CONTEST—CONSOLIDATION—COSTS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1125, provides that if the proceedings in election contests are dismissed for insufficiency or want of prosecution, or the election is confirmed, a judgment for costs must be rendered against contestant, and, if the election is annulled or set aside, judgment for costs must be rendered in favor of contestant, and that, where two or more contested elections are joined for the purpose of recounting votes, "the costs shall be apportioned among the parties in the discretion of the court." Actions to contest elections for supervisor of a district of a county and for county clerk were consolidated under authority of the statute. In an order granting a nonsuit in the contest of the election for supervisor, the court decreed that each party to the action pay his own costs. Held, in a contest to but one office, the statute clearly makes it the duty to award costs to the victorious party, and, as the reason for the legislative authorization of consolidation was merely to decrease the expense to the parties and the trouble to the court by the clause vesting the court with discretion to apportion the costs, the Legislature evidently intended to fix no new rule, but merely contemplated that costs in such cases would be different in each case consolidated, and intended to provide the court with power to adjust the costs equitably among the unsuccessful parties, and, as any other construction would permit the court to determine whether it would tax an unsuccessful party, the division of the costs between the parties to the contest was erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. § 333; Dec. Dig. § 307.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Del Norte County; J. L. Childs, Judge.

Election contest by West Duley against Thomas E. Peacock. From a decree entered upon a nonsuit requiring each party to pay his own costs, defendant appeals. Reversed, with directions to modify.

James F. Quinn and James McNulty, for appellant. Geo. W. Howe, for respondent.

HART, J. The contestant and contestee were rival candidates for the office of supervisor for the Fourth supervisor district of Del Norte county at the general election held on November 8, 1910. The official canvass of the ballots cast in the several precincts of said supervisor district disclosed the election of the contestee to said office, and his election thereto was thereupon officially declared by the board of supervisors of said county, sitting as a board of canvassers. On December 17, 1910, the contestant filed his complaint, contesting the election of the contestee. At the same election one Ashley Cooper and one W. L. Nichols were opposing candidates for the office of county clerk of Del Norte county, and the latter, upon the official canvassing of the ballots by the board of supervisors of said county, was officially declared to have been elected to said office. Later and in due time Cooper filed a contest against Nichols for the said office of clerk.

The court, having been duly notified by the clerk of the filing of the contests in the two cases mentioned, ordered a special session of the court to be held on the 27th day of December, 1910, for the opening and recounting of the ballots cast for the respective offices so contested. On the day on which the contests came up for hearing, the court, on motion of the attorney for respondent, ordered a consolidation of the two contests for the purpose of counting the ballots. Section 1125, Code Civ. Proc. A motion for a nonsuit was granted by the court in the case at bar and the contest dismissed. In its judgment entered upon the order granting the nonsuit the court decreed that "each party to this action pay his own costs and disbursements incurred." The appeal here is by the contestee from that portion of the judgment binding each party to the contest to pay his own costs, etc.

The single question submitted for determination by this appeal is therefore whether the court erred in adjudging that each party should pay his own costs, etc., the contestee claiming that, having won the contest, he was entitled to judgment for his costs.

[1] The right to recover costs is purely statutory, and, in the absence of a statute, no costs could be recovered by either party. Fox v. Hale & Norcross S. M. Co., 122 Cal. 223, 54 Pac. 731. And it is equally true that, assuming that the Legislature would have the constitutional right to enact such legislation, whether the matter of awarding costs in a given case rests in the discretion of the court must depend upon whether the Legislature has committed such discretion to the court.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[2] In the case at bar, whether the court was authorized, by its judgment, to compel each party to the contest to bear his own costs, is a question which in its solution must of necessity rest upon the proposition whether there is, in the class of cases to which this case belongs, any statutory warrant for such a judgment, again assuming that such a statute would not infringe upon the provisions of the Constitution inhibitory of class and special legislation. The court below, of course, planted its judgment as to the costs on its construction of the language of section 1125 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads: "If the proceedings are dismissed for insufficiency, or for want of prosecution, or the election is by the court confirmed, judgment must be rendered against the party contesting such election, for costs, in favor of the party whose election was contested; but if the election is annulled or set aside, judgment for costs must be rendered against the party whose election was contested, in favor of the party contesting the same; provided, that where two or more contested elections are joined for the purpose of recounting votes as in this title provided, the costs shall be apportioned among the parties in the discretion of the court. Primarily each party is liable for the costs created by himself, to the officers and witnesses entitled thereto, which may be collected in the same manner as similar costs are collected in other cases" The language of the foregoing section italicized by us was added to said section by the Legislature of 1907 (Stats. 1907, p. 643), there having been previously to said amendment no specific provision as to costs in cases where two or more contested elections were joined. And it was undoubtedly upon that particular language that the court founded its conclusion that it is in its discretion to apportion the costs where two or more election contests are consolidated among the parties, contestants and contestees.

We think the court's construction of the language of the amendment of that section is erroneous. It is not disputed, nor could it be, that in a single contest or a contest wherein the right to but one office was contested it would be the duty of the court, under the plain mandates of the section, to award costs to the victorious party. Campbell v. Free, 7 Cal. App. 151, 93 Pac. 1060. In the case at bar, in other words, if the contest had not been joined with another election contest, it would have been the duty of the court to have "rendered judgment against the party contesting such election, for costs, in favor of the party whose election was contested." The principle of which this provision of the section is predicated is equitable and just. When the board of canvassers, after an official canvass of the ballots cast at an election officially declares a certain person to have received the highest number of votes cast for the office for which he has been a candidate and has therefore been elected to such office, the person so declared to have been elected is at once vested with a prima facie title to the office. On the other hand, any elector, to conserve the rights of the public or the people, who are entitled to be protected against usurpation of public offices by those not legally entitled to exercise the duties thereof, may, and it is his duty, if there exist probable grounds therefor to challenge, through an appropriate proceeding, the right of a person to hold and discharge the duties of a public office. The Legislature, therefore, deemed it only just to authorize the court to which the adjudication of such differences is confided to impose upon the losing party in such a contest the burden of reimbursing the victorious party for the costs which the latter has necessarily incurred by reason of such contest. Now, then, this being clearly and unquestionably the law as to costs as the Legislature has laid it down in those cases where there is but a single office concerned in the proceeding before the court, such law obviously involving the only just rule as to the awarding of costs in such cases, the first question that suggests itself to the mind, when examining the amendment of section 1125 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is: Upon what just principle can there be founded any different rule as to costs where the proceeding involves the contest of more than one office from that prescribed in those cases where the proceeding involves but a single office? Or, to put the question in another form, why should not the victorious party in a contest of this character be equally as entitled, from a just view of the proposition, to his costs in a proceeding wherein and whereby the right to other offices has been contested as he confessedly would be had his contest been fought out in a proceeding in which the right to hold the office involved was the sole and single issue? These questions follow from the ambiguity of the language added to section 1125 by the Legislature of 1907, upon which the court below obviously based its judgment in the matter of the costs, and the meaning of which must be ascertained by construction.

There is but one answer to the questions propounded. There is no just reason why the victorious parties in a single proceeding involving the right to several offices should not be awarded their costs as they would be if their respective contests were each tried alone or not joined with other similar contests in the same proceeding. The manifest purpose of authorizing two or more contests for offices growing out of the same election to be joined in one proceeding and thus to be heard at one and the same time by the court was to minimize the expense to the parties and the trouble to the court. These contests are usually based upon propositions calling for a review or recount of the ballots cast at the election for the contested office, and where, in the same county, it is claimed that the election officers have improperly counted the ballots or so conducted their duties as that the returns made by them do not involve a true expression of the wishes of the electors with regard to several county or township offices, the investigation of a charge of that sort may just as easily be made in a single proceeding as to all the offices so contested as it may be as to one office. The bulk of the expense incurred in such contests flows from the necessity of employing special clerks to examine, count, and tally the ballots under the supervision of the court, and, as before suggested, the object the Legislature had in view in authorizing the joinder of such contests, where there were more than one arising from the same election, was to make the expense in prosecuting the same less onerous on each of the losing parties than it would be if each contest were prosecuted singly, and, furthermore, to save time and trouble to the court, which would otherwise be compelled to hear several different contests in as many different proceedings where all may just as conveniently be heard in one. This, we say, was the primary and paramount object of the amendment, and, while the language as to the apportionment of the costs "among the parties in the discretion of the court" is, upon its face, somewhat ambiguous, yet we think that, upon a fair consideration of it and the unjust result which would inevitably follow the construction given it by counsel for the respondent and the court below, it is clear that the legislature merely intended to say that, where there were several election contests joined and heard in the same proceeding, "the costs shall be apportioned among the losing parties, according as the court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, founded upon all the circumstances as disclosed, may deem fair and just as between such parties." In other words, the discretion vested in the court by the amendment was not intended to commit to the court the power or right to require the victorious parties to bear the necessary costs or expense to which they have been put by the contest, but to merely make an equitable and just apportionment of all the costs accruing by reason of the proceeding among those who have failed, whether the contestants or the contestees, or the contestant in the one case or the contestee in another, to sustain the grounds of contest or to refute them, it being plainly apparent that, although two contests may be joined in one proceeding, the expense attendant upon the investigation of the contest with respect to one office may be largely in excess of the expense incurred in the investigation of that of the other—as, for example, where, as here, one of the contested offices is a township and the other a county office, therefore requiring perhaps the examination and counting of more ballots to determine the contest of the right to the latter office than the contest as to the former.

The conclusion at which we have arrived is in accord with the views of the Supreme Court as expressed through Mr. Justice Shaw prior to the adoption of the amendment in question in the case of Coghlan v. Alpers, 140 Cal. 650, 74 Pac. 146, as follows: "Costs would be allowed and judgment given therefor in the same manner as if the cases had not been consolidated, except that if any item should be incurred by two or more parties jointly the court should either apportion the amount equitably among them, or provide in the judgment that there should be but one payment by the party held liable in case separate judgments were given, for the same sum in favor of different parties. In either event, the consolidation would not be prejudicial to the appellant." Any other construction of the amendment than that with which we are in accord would place it in the power of the court in cases where there were several different contests originating out of the same election to deny to the victorious parties, who would be as of right entitled to their costs if their respective contests were heard independently of and separately from the others, reimbursement at the hands of the vanquished parties for the costs which have accrued against them by reason of the contests. In other words, the effect of respondent's contention, if sustained, would be to leave it entirely in the discretion of the court to say whether the parties winning their contests should or should not have their costs, since the right to consolidate the contests rests wholly in the court's discretion, upon the manner of the exercise of which would necessarily hinge the determination of the question whether the prevailing parties would or would not be entitled to reimbursement for their costs.

There is much force in the contention of the appellant (though the point need not be decided here) that, if the construction of the statute in question by respondent be tenable and should be sustained, the result would be that the enactment would be in violation of several provisions of the Constitution. Section 11, art. 1; subdivision 33, § 25, art. 4; Bloss v. Lewis, 109 Cal. 496, 41 Pac. 1081; Darcy v. Mayor, etc., 104 Cal. 645, 38 Pac. 500.

It follows from the foregoing views that the judgment, in so far as it undertakes to adjudicate the matter of costs by apportioning them among all the parties to the contest, is erroneous. The part of the judgment appealed from is therefore reversed, with directions to the court below to so modify it as to allow to the contestee the costs legitmately accruing against him by reason of the contest.

PEOPLE ex rel. SPIERS v. LAWLEY et al.

(Civ. 866.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 30, 1911. On Petition for Rehearing, Nov. 29, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 29, 1911.)

1. Turnpikes and Toll Roads (§ 30*)—Duration of Franchise—Construction.

While a franchise for a toll road is to be strictly construed, where there are no express words of limitation or law fixing the duration of franchises, a court will not, except in a very clear case, declare as the result of a mere construction that such a franchise had terminated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Turnpikes and Toll Roads, Cent. Dig. § 19; Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

2. Turnpikes and Toll Roads (§ 23*)—Franchises as "Property."

A franchise to one and to such persons as he might associate with him to construct and maintain a turnpike road and to collect tolls thereon, subject to supervision by county officers, granting a right of way, and fixing a time for the completion of the road, is "property" within Civ. Code, § 1044, providing that "property of any kind may be transferred except as otherwise provided by this article," and as such is transferable by assignment or in any other authorized mode of transferring real property.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5693–5728; vol. 8, pp. 7768–7770.]

3. Turnpikes and Toll Roads (§ 23*)—Franchise—Right of Assignment—"Associate With."

Under a franchise to one "and such persons as he may associate with him" to construct and maintain a turnpike and toll road with a grant of a right of way, and the requirement that the road should be constructed within two years, the grantee named had an implied right to transfer or assign certain interests in the franchise, since he could not otherwise associate persons with him; the term "and such persons as he may associate with him" not meaning persons employed to assist in the construction and maintenance of the road, but persons in whom he might vest an interest and franchise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Turnpikes and Toll Roads, Cent. Dig. §§ 67–70; Dec. Dig. § 23.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, p. 584.]

4. Execution (§ 27*)—Property Subject—Toll Road—Franchise.

In the absence of any provision therefor, a toll road franchise may be levied upon and sold under execution for the satisfaction of any judgment against its owners, and Civ. Code, § 388, expressly so provides.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. § 64; Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

5. Turnpikes and Toll Roads (§ 23*)—Interest of Grantee—Property in Fee—Statutes.

In view of Civ. Code, § 1072, providing that words of inheritance or succession are not requisite to transfer the fee in real property, and section 1105, providing that a fee-simple title is presumed to be intended to pass by a grant of real property, unless it appears from the grant that a lesser estate was intended, the grant of a toll road franchise not expressly limited by the grant itself vests in the grantee named and his associates an estate in fee in the real property so granted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Turnpikes and Toll Roads, Cent. Dig. §§ 67–70; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

6. Turnpikes and Toll Roads (§ 23*)—Franchise—Transfers—Consent of State.

Where a grant of a franchise to construct and maintain a toll road contained in itself no provision requiring that the consent of the state should first be obtained before the right to sell or transfer the franchise could be exercised, or any statute to that effect, it might be transferred without the consent of the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Turnpikes and Toll Roads, Cent. Dig. §§ 67–70; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

7. Turnpikes and Toll Roads (§ 33*)—Power to Control and Regulate.

The state always retains or reserves the power to regulate and control toll road franchises wherever they may be or to whomsoever's hands or ownership they may be transmitted, and to see that they shall not only be used for the purposes which they were created to subserve, but so used as not to injure the public.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Turnpikes and Toll Roads, Dec. Dig. § 33.*]

8. Turnpikes and Toll Roads (§ 31*)—Forfeiture of Franchise.

The state may forfeit a toll road franchise and all the rights acquired thereby, where it is not used or where it is misused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Turnpikes and Toll Roads, Cent. Dig. §§ 79–89; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

9. Trial (§ 404*)—Finding—Construction.

A finding that defendants' predecessor "never associated with him in the construction and maintenance of said toll road any person or persons whatsoever," as he was authorized by his grant to do, involves a conclusion of law as well as a finding of fact; since it is necessarily founded on a construction of the legal effect of the language of the grant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 957–962; Dec. Dig. § 404.*]

10. Turnpikes and Toll Roads (§ 9*)—Transfer—"Such Persons as He May Associate with Him.

Defendants' predecessor and "such persons as he may associate with him" were authorized by grant to construct and maintain a turnpike road, and to collect tolls thereon with the requirement that the road be constructed within two years, but he never associated any one with him in the construction of the road. Defendants' rights therein rested upon a promise of the original grantee to devise to a part of them an interest in the franchise if they would help maintain the road, and upon a decree of distribution in the estate of the widow of the original grantee. Held, that defendants were, within the terms of the grant, "such persons as he may associate with him," since it was requisite that such persons be associated with the grantee both in the construction and in the maintenance of the road.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Turnpikes and Toll Roads, Cent. Dig. §§ 12–18; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

11. Turnpikes and Toll Roads (§ 38*)—Constitutional Provisions.

Civ. Code, § 516, enacted in 1872, which required the owner of a toll road to post up at or over each gate or in some conspicuous place a printed list of the rates of toll levied and demanded, was amended by Acts 1900–01, p. 5, to require that the printed list show the date when the franchise or privilege under which the right to collect tolls was claimed as granted, and the term of duration of such franchise, and the date upon which the rates of toll were last fixed by the board of supervisors. Held, that the requirements of the amendment were not intended to apply to perpetual franchises, or those as to which no limit as to duration have been prescribed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lake County; Thos. J. Lennon, Judge.

Action by the People by U. S. Webb, Attorney General, on the relation of William Spiers against Charles A. Lawley and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Chas. H. Shurtliff, John T. York, and Theo. A. Bell, for appellants. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., F. E. Johnston, and E. J. Talbott, for respondent.

HART, J. This is a proceeding in quo warranto.

The complaint charges that the defendants have "usurped, intruded into and unlawfully held and exercised," and so continue wrongfully and without right to exercise, a certain franchise for the construction and maintenance of a toll road starting from a certain point in Napa county, and extending into and terminating at a certain point in Lake county, and for the collection of tolls thereon, and asks the judgment of the court that said franchise be declared to have ceased and terminated on the death of the original grantee, "that the defendants herein be adjudged as usurping and intruding into and unlawfully holding said franchise," and that they be excluded therefrom, etc. Judgment passed for the plaintiff, and this appeal is prosecuted by the defendants from said judgment and from the order denying them a new trial.

The franchise involved here was granted to one "John Lawley and his associates" by an act of the Legislature of 1865–66. Said act reads as follows:

"Section 1. John Lawley, and such persons as he may associate with him, are hereby authorized to construct and maintain a turnpike road from Edward Ebey's residence, in the county of Napa, through St. Helena Cañon, and over the St. Helena range of mountains, to Sigler Valley, by Sigler Cañon, in Lake county, a distance of about twenty miles.

"Sec. 2. That said grantees, upon the construction and completion of said road, are hereby authorized to charge and collect such rates of toll for travel and passage upon the same, in the county of Lake, as the board of supervisors of said county may fix and establish, and in the county of Napa, as the board of supervisors of Napa county may fix and establish; and the said boards of supervisors shall have authority to regulate and charge such rates of toll annually.

"Sec. 3. The right of way for said road is hereby granted to John Lawley and his associates; provided, that in case the lands of private persons are taken for said road, the right of way may be obtained in the same manner and by the same mode of proceeding as is provided by law for railroad companies.

"Sec. 4. After the expiration of five years from the time of the completion of said road, the said counties of Napa and Lake shall have the right to take, possess, and own said road, by payment to said grantees such sum as three appraisers, one to be selected by the board of supervisors of Napa county, one by the board of supervisors of Lake county, and one by said grantees aforesaid, may determine the value thereof to be; and in case one of said parties should fail to select such appraiser after reasonable notice so to do by the other parties, then such valuation as may be made by the two appraisers chosen as aforesaid.

"Sec. 5. The rights herein granted are conferred upon the express condition that said road shall be completed, with requisite and proper bridges, culverts and embankments, in good order, within two years from the passage of this act." Stats. of Cal. 1865–66, p. 277.

The Legislature of 1867–68 amended section 1 of said act so as to read as follows: "Section 1. John Lawley and his associates are hereby authorized to construct and maintain a turnpike road from Edward Ebey's residence, in the county of Napa, through St. Helena Cañon and over the St. Helena range of mountains, to a point in Loconoma Valley, where the road leading from Calistoga to Lower Lake intersects the road from Calistoga to Lakeport via Cobb Valley." St. 1867–68, p. 138.

Lawley, the grantee, alone completed the construction of the road during the year 1868, and operated it alone, according to the findings, until March, 1871, when John Lawley, in consideration of the indebtedness owing by him to one William Patterson, executed and conveyed to the latter an undivided one-quarter interest in said toll road "and all the franchises and rights granted to him by the aforesaid acts of the Legislature." On the 6th day of January, 1877, John Lawley executed a conveyance purporting to transfer all his right, title, and interest in and to the said toll road and the right to collect tolls thereon to one W. C. Watson, then cashier of the bank of Napa. The purpose of this conveyance was to secure said bank in a large indebtedness due from said John Lawley to said bank. Watson subsequently conveyed to the bank. In the year 1880, so the court finds, "the defendants, Harry B. Lawley and Charles A. Lawley, who were then of the ages of 21 and 23 years, respectively, declared to their father, the said John Lawley, that they intended to leave home and work for themselves, and thereupon the said John Lawley, who was then insolvent, stated to said defendants that if they would continue to assist him in the conduct and operation of said toll road, and other properties then owned by said John Lawley, and assist him in paying off certain indebtedness existing against said toll road and the other properties, he would give to each of them an undivided one-fourth of his interest in said toll road and franchises, whereupon the said defendants accepted said proposal, and from 1880 to the time of the death of the said John Lawley they each contributed their labor and certain moneys toward the maintenance and operation of said toll road, and the other said properties, and assisted in paying off all indebtedness against the same." In the year 1884 "William Patterson by deed of conveyance transferred all his interest in and to said toll road and the right to collect tolls thereon, to Cynthia A. Lawley, wife of said John Lawley," and thereafter said Cynthia A. Lawley died, administration was duly had upon her estate, and, under the decree of distribution therein entered, all her interest in and to said toll road and the right to collect tolls thereon was distributed to Charles A. Lawley, Harry B. Lawley, Ada W. Neal, and Mary F. Patton, children of said John Lawley and Cynthia A. Lawley. On the 17th day of August, 1889, John Lawley executed a conveyance purporting to transfer all his right, title and interest in and to the said toll road, and right to collect tolls thereon, to his four children above named. There were some subsequent conveyances involving said franchise—one by the bank of Napa and one by a referee appointed by the superior court of Napa county in a certain action in that court between the children of John Lawley—but these are of no material importance in their bearing upon the questions presented here for decision. John Lawley, the father of defendants, died some time prior to January, 1906.

The main contention of the respondent is that the life of said franchise was coextensive only with the lives of John Lawley and his associates, if any he had within the contemplation of the terms of the grant from the state, and that, John Lawley having never had any associate or associates, said franchise ceased to exist immediately upon his death. It is further contended that the franchise was forfeited by reason of the transfer of the same by John Lawley without the consent of the state, and also by reason of noncompliance with the requirements of section 516 of the Civil Code. The court found as a matter of fact, as well as a conclusion of law, that "John Lawley never at any time associated with himself in the construction and maintenance of said toll road any person or persons whatsoever." The court further found that while the defendants Harry B. and Charles A. Lawley "did affix, and at all times kept up, at or near the said toll gate on said toll road, a list showing the rates of toll last theretofore duly fixed and determined by the said board of supervisors of the county of Napa," they failed to comply with the provisions of said section 516 of the Civil Code, "other than as specified in this paragraph." The judgment, however, is founded entirely on the fact of the death of John Lawley and the asserted termination of the franchise by reason thereof.

The appellants contend that the franchise in question is property in the sense that it may be transferred the same as any other kind of property; that, there being no limitation provided in the franchise as to the time during which it should run, the state granted to John Lawley and his associates, if any he had, an estate in fee in said franchise and toll road; that, consequently, the franchise did not cease to exist or terminate with the death of John Lawley.

It is further contended that the grant, properly construed, contemplates that the "associates" of John Lawley are such persons as he might associate with him either in the construction or the maintenance of the toll road or both.

As to the claim that the franchise was forfeited by the failure of the appellants to comply with certain of the provisions of section 516 of the Civil Code, the position of appellants is that those particular requirements of said section with which the court found that they had omitted to comply, having been added to the section subsequently to the granting of the franchise, are, as applied to the toll road in question, in the nature of legislation impairing the obligations of a contract, and are therefore void. The theory upon which the issues were decided by the court below is predicated of the assumption that the franchise granted by the acts of the Legislature referred to is a mere license or personal privilege to collect tolls; but it is very clear to my mind that such a construction of such franchises as the one here involved would result in working the rankest sort of injustice in many cases. It would certainly open up opportunity for the destruction of valuable rights acquired thereby and thereunder, and this no rational or well-poised system of laws ought to tolerate in any case or under any circumstances. If, for example, the life of the franchise here were intended to be determinable upon the death of John Lawley, assuming that he had no associates within the meaning of the grant, then obviously it would cease to exist, however soon after the completion of the toll road—whether a year, a month, or a day would be immaterial—that he might die. Thus it may readily be seen, that, after he had expended thousands of dollars in the construction of the road and perhaps created an indebtedness against it in necessarily borrowing large sums of money to build it, the franchise would cease to exist immediately upon his death, the rights acquired thereby would become vested in the counties through which the road traversed, and Lawley's creditors whose money had been employed in the construction of the road perhaps left without resources from which they might recoup themselves.

It is a proposition within the compass of the common history of California that in the infancy of the state the only means of transportation either of freight or passengers or as a means of traveling from point to point were over the wagon roads constructed and maintained either by the taxpayers or private individuals or corporations organized for the purpose of building and maintaining such thoroughfares. Railroad transportation, as a financially feasible scheme, had, at the time of the granting of the franchise in question, scarcely more than entered the minds of the people of California as a serious proposition, and even now, in many of the mountainous regions of the state, it appears to be regarded as financially impracticable to build and maintain railroads. It goes without saying that the general prosperity of a state, if such prosperity would be developed and maintained up to the full measure of its capacity in resources, must depend very largely on whether all the sections of the commonwealth are brought into reasonably close touch with commercial, industrial, and financial centers. Without wagon roads in the earlier periods of the state's history commercial intercourse to any important extent between the people of the various sections of the state would have been impossible. In fact, public roads, even with all the facilities for railroad transportation which later years have brought to California, are an absolute necessity to the general welfare and prosperity. The building and maintenance of public highways is, under the most favorable conditions, a very heavy burden on the taxpayers, and it is safe to say that few, if any, of the roads originally established and maintained under a toll road franchise, would ever have been constructed if the taxpayers had been required to bear the cost of their construction. In other words, to encourage and promote the building of highways, particularly in the earlier history of the state, it was necessary to grant toll road franchises vesting the grantees with the right to build and maintain public highways, and to enjoy the right to claim and appropriate to themselves the emoluments thereof as rewards or compensation for performing those public duties which it is the essential part of government to perform, but which it is often financially impracticable for the latter to execute. It was therefore in the pioneer days of the state, as, indeed, it is now as to counties to which that power has been committed, where the necessity therefor is found to exist, only in line with an enlightened and necessary policy of the state to grant these franchises and thus minimize the difficulties of general commercial and business intercourse between the inhabitants thereof.

[1] The state should not, therefore, be deemed to have intended to so restrict or hamper the rights of its grantees under such franchises as to permit the destruction of those rights except upon very substantial reasons or for very material causes. In other words, while the general rule is that such grants are to be strictly construed, it should be a very clear case—one admitting of little, if any, doubt of the correctness of such a construction—of an intention on the part of the granting power to limit the life of such a franchise upon an event which may happen at any moment, where, as here, there are no express words of limitation and no law, as now, expressly fixing the period of time during which it shall run, before a court should feel justified in declaring, as the result of a mere process of construction, that such a franchise has ceased to exist.

There is, as will be observed, no limit fixed by the grant upon the time during which the franchise involved here shall run, and the conclusion reached by the learned court below that it ceased to exist synchronously with the death of John Lawley proceeds from the theory that the franchise is a personal trust, and therefore could not survive after the death of the person to whom the same had been specially granted.

[2] In my opinion the question whether franchises of the character of the one involved here are assignable must depend upon the proposition whether they are property within the meaning of that term as used in section 1044 of the Civil Code, which provides that "property of any kind, may be transferred, except as otherwise provided by this article." If the word "property" as so used was not intended to be broad enough to include franchises of the sort involved here, then manifestly the franchise under attack in this case would have to be construed and held to be a mere personal privilege or trust, and, assuming that John Lawley left no associate or associates within the meaning of the term, "associate," as employed in the grant, the same expired and passed out of existence coincidentally with his death. If, on the other hand, the franchise is property within the purview of section 1044 of the Civil Code, then obviously it is, like any other species of property, subject to transfer, and may be, even in the absence of an express provision of law to that effect, sold on execution in satisfaction of any judgment which might be obtained against the owner thereof.

That the franchise in question is property within the meaning of section 1044 of the Civil Code, is a proposition concerning which I entertain no kind or degree of doubt. While there are some early cases which seem to hold that ferry franchises are nothing more than a personal trust, and not the subject of levy, sale or delivery under execution (Munroe v. Thomas, 5 Cal. 470; Thomas v. Armstrong, 7 Cal. 286; Wood v. Truckee Turnpike Co., 24 Cal. 474; People v. Duncan, 41 Cal. 507; and Gregory v. Blanchard, 98 Cal. 313, 33 Pac. 199), still, I think, there are other California authorities which support the view that they are real property, to be governed by the same rules by which other real property is regulated. Indeed, I know of no principle or reason why they should be regarded in any other light. There are many reasons why they should be so classified and treated. While the government ought always to subject the exercise of such rights—rights flowing from the bestowal of certain functions of government upon corporations or natural persons—to such restrictions and regulations as will prevent their abuse or their use against the interests of the public, which they are created to serve, it will not render them practically worthless or undesirable by placing such unreasonable restrictions upon their exercise as to make it possible that rights acquired thereby and thereunder may be unjustly destroyed. To do so would inevitably result in greatly handicapping the government in the execution of its paramount end, viz.: The promotion of the safety, comfort, convenience, the prosperity, and happiness of the inhabitants of the state; for who would ask for a franchise, the execution of the purpose of which would necessitate the outlay of a vast sum of money, if the privilege or right so granted could, upon the merest pretext, deduced entirely through construction, be divested, and the property acquired thereby and thereunder practically confiscated?

[3] It seems to me that the power or right in John Lawley to transfer or assign certain interests in the franchise here is clearly implied from the language of the grant itself. The person or persons whom John Lawley is thus authorized to associate with himself in the construction and maintenance of the road are not specifically named in the grant. Who they are or may be is a matter left solely to the determination or election of John Lawley. It is obviously true that John Lawley could not associate with himself another person or other persons in the construction and maintenance of the road without assigning to such person or persons some interest in the franchise. This would, of course, be just as true before the construction of the road as after its completion, and, if thus it is necessarily to be implied that he may assign certain interests in the franchise before the road is constructed, what language is there in the grant that may reasonably be so construed as to justify the conclusion that he was without right to assign such interests after the completion of the road? Of course, it will not be contended that the language, "and such persons as he may associate with him," means anything less than persons in whom he might vest an interest in the franchise. In other words, no one will say that the mere employment of persons to assist in the construction and maintenance of the road would amount to an association of such persons with Lawley within the contemplation of the grant. But there are cases which sustain my position, and I will now refer to a few thereof.

Although, as I have shown, some of the California cases have declared that franchises of the character of the one concerned here involve mere personal trusts and others that they are real property, yet the question as it is presented in its present form has never before been urged before and decided by the higher courts of this state. The precise question submitted here is, therefore, new in California. But, as I have already indicated, I am in accord with those cases which hold that such franchises constitute property. In the case of Powell v. Maguire, 43 Cal. 11, speaking of a ferry franchise, Justice Rhodes, in a concurring opinion, said: "I am of the opinion that the franchise in question is real estate; that in its transfer it is to be governed by the rules applicable to the transfer of title to other real estate." It is held in the case of Stockton Gas, etc., Co. v. San Joaquin County, 148 Cal. 319, 83 Pac. 56, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174, that franchises authorized by section 19 of article 11 of the Constitution to lay pipes and conduits, or erect poles and supply the inhabitants of a city with artificial light, are incorporeal hereditaments appurtenant to the land. The court says: "The principle that franchises of the character here involved are treated as incorporeal hereditaments finds ready support from the authorities." And in support of this announcement it quotes approvingly from Bowman v. Wathen, 2 McLean, 376, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,740, in which it is decided that a ferry franchise is real property and passes by deed; that it "is assets in the hands of heirs, and in all respects is subject to the laws which regulate real estate"; that "there would seem to be no doubt that the ferry franchise, with all that belongs to it, may be taken by descent or by conveyance the same as other interests which pertain to realty. * * * In this respect no difference is perceived between a ferry franchise, the franchise of a toll bridge, a turnpike or railroad, or any other franchise of the same nature." In many of the other jurisdictions of this country the same rule is firmly established. In Wilmington & R. A.

Co. v. Downward (Del.) 14 Atl. 721, it is said that "a franchise is property, and it cannot wantonly or of whim be taken away by legislative act and transferred to another." "A franchise," says the Supreme Court of Connecticut, Norwich Gas Light Co. v. Norwich City Gas Co., 25 Conn. 19, "is property which may be transferred by sale or devise, and it will descend to heirs like other property." "The grant was of a franchise, which had the legal character of an estate or property. 'An estate' said Chancellor Kent (3 Kent's Com. 458), 'in such a franchise and an estate in land rest upon the same principle, being equally grants of a right or privilege for an adequate consideration.'" Oakland R. Co. v. Oakland B. & F. V. R. Co., 45 Cal. 365, 373, 13 Am. Rep. 181. "A franchise," said Justice Daniel, in West River Bridge v. Dix, 6 How. 507, 534, 12 L. Ed. 535, "is property and nothing more. It is incorporeal property, and is so defined by Justice Blackstone when treating in his second volume (chapter 3, p. 20) of the rights of things. It is its character of property which imparts to it value, and alone authorizes in individuals a right of action for invasion or disturbance of its enjoyment. A franchise, therefore, to erect a bridge, to construct a road, to keep a ferry, and to collect toll upon them, granted by the authority of the state, we regard as occupying the same position, with respect to the paramount power and duty of the state, to promote and protect, as does the right of the citizen to the possession and enjoyment of his land, under his patent or contract with the state, and it can no more interpose any obstruction in the way of their just exertion." In the same case Justice McLean said: "It is objected that this bridge, being owned by a corporation, and used by the public, does not come within the designation of private property. All property, whether owned by an individual or individuals, a corporation aggregate or sole, is within the term. In short, all property not public is private." See Welch v. County of Plumas, 80 Cal. 338, 22 Pac. 254; Lippencott v. Allander, 27 Iowa, 460, 1 Am. Rep. 299; Dufour v. Stacey, 90 Ky. 288, 14 S. W. 48, 29 Am. St. Rep. 374; Johnson's Appeal, 95 Pa. 79; Evans v. Hughes County, 3 S. D. 580, 54 N. W. 603; Greer v. Haugabook, 47 Ga. 282.

I could well rest the conclusion at which I have arrived that a franchise of the kind involved in the case at bar is property—real property—within the full meaning of section 1044 of the Civil Code, upon the foregoing authorities, by which the proposition seems to be conclusively established. Still the case of Lippencott v. Allander, supra, as to the facts, so closely resembles the present case that I feel justified in quoting from the opinion therein in extenso. The Iowa Supreme Court in that case, among other things, says: But one question is presented by the record for our determination. It is this: Is a ferry license vacated or the franchise lost by the death of the party to whom it was granted? "The right acquired under a ferry license is called a franchise, and is conferred by grant from the government, and with an implied covenant, on the part of the government, not to invade the right vested, and, on the part of the grantee, to perform the duties and conditions prescribed by the grant. * * * The fact that it is conferred by grant from the government, and may be forfeited for misuser or nonuser does not argue that it is not property, or that it may be lost in a way or manner which will not deprive the owner of other property or his rights therein. * * * Hence it is thought that the death of the grantee terminates the franchise. The answer to this is: That, if the person exercising the franchise fails to perform the duties appertaining thereto, the license, by proper proceedings, may be revoked. Rev. § 1212. And that this position of appellee is not in accordance with the policy of our statutes is made very plain by the provisions permitting and regulating the sales of the franchise upon execution. In such case the purchaser, by substitution, assumes the duties of the original grantee, and acquires all his rights. No reason can be given why the law will permit this, and yet prohibit the exercise of the franchise, in case of the death of the grantee, by his representatives. The doctrine contended for leads to another inconsistency, namely, the franchise may be subjected to the payment of the debts of the grantee in his lifetime, but is not assets for the payment of the same debts after his death. The grant of a ferry franchise is made for a specified time, not less than three nor more than ten years, with no reservation that it shall terminate upon the death of the grantee. Being, as we have seen, property, it would not, upon every analogy of the law, be lost by the death of the grantee. At common law it was granted as other real property, in estates for years, for life, or in perpetuity, and was so held. Under our statute, it is granted in an estate for years only; and the death of the grantee can no more terminate it than the death of a tenant can terminate a like estate in lands. The above hardship, and injustice of the rule contended for, support a powerful argument against it. These franchises often require great outlays for boats, improvement of roads, etc., in order to render them remunerative to the owners, and useful to the public. The property thus acquired is valuable only in connection with the franchises; and, if they are forfeited by the death of the grantees, great loss and gross injustice would thus be wrought their estates. The doctrine contended for by defendant's counsel is not supported by the authorities they cite, viz., Munroe v. Thomas, 5 Cal. 470, and Thomas v. Armstrong, 7 Cal. 286. These cases hold that ferry franchises are not the subjects of levy and sale under execution. The decisions appear to be based upon the grounds that a ferry franchise involves a personal trust, granted by the sovereign, upon conditions imposed upon the grantee, alone; and his liability cannot be removed by substitutions. Such sales, as we have seen, are recognized by our statutes, and the ground of these decisions seems to be unsupported by reason and principles of law."

[4] It thus being clearly established that the franchise involved here is property in the sense of that term as it is used in section 1044 of the Civil Code, it follows, of course, that, under the provision of said section, it is subject to all the rights and burdens of property of any other kind, and that it may be transferred by assignment or by any other authorized mode of transferring real property; or, under section 388 of the same Code, or, as stated even in the absence of any such a provision, it may be levied upon and sold under execution, for the satisfaction of any judgment against the owner or owners thereof, "in the same manner, and with the same effect, as any other property."

[5] The conclusion to which the foregoing views irresistibly lead is that, the time to which the franchise here shall run not being expressly limited by the grant itself, the effect of said franchise was to vest in John Lawley and his associates an estate in fee in the franchise and the toll road; in other words, an estate in fee in the real property so granted to them by the state. Sections 1072, 1105, Civ. Code.

[6] This being true, and since there is no provision in the grant itself or of any statute to which my attention has been directed expressly requiring that the consent of the state shall first be obtained before the right to sell or transfer the franchise may be exercised, manifestly said franchise may be transferred without the consent of the granting power. I do not, however, intend to be understood as holding that the state could not have made the procurement of its consent a prerequisite or a condition precedent to the exercise of the right by the grantee to transfer the franchise; but the state has not done so in this case by express language or by language reasonably capable of the construction that such was its intention.

[7] The state always retains or reserves the power to regulate and control such franchises wherever they may go or to whomsoever's hands or ownership they may be transmitted, and its chief, and, indeed, only, concern with regard to such grants is that they shall not only be used for the purpose which they are created to subserve, but so used as not to injure the public or trespass upon its rights.

[8] Having this power of supervision or control over such grants, the state may forfeit them and all rights acquired thereby where they are not used or where they are misused. There is, therefore, no necessity for imposing restraints upon or in any way fettering the power of alienation as to estates thus created and thus rendering their value as property exceedingly precarious.

[9] While the result at which I have arrived is manifestly decisive of this case, still I can conceive no impropriety in saying that in my opinion the court erred in finding that John Lawley "never associated with himself in the construction and maintenance of said toll road any person or persons whatsoever." This finding obviously involves a conclusion of law as well as a finding of fact, since necessarily it is founded on a construction of the legal effect of the language of the grant.

[10] The act, as we have seen, provides that "John Lawley, and such persons as he may associate with him, are hereby authorized to construct and maintain a turnpike road," etc.

The respondent contends, as we have seen, that the term "associate," as it appears in the act, contemplates only such persons as John Lawley might have associated with himself in the construction as well as the maintenance of the road. In other words, it is insisted that unless John Lawley associated with himself some person or persons in the construction of the turnpike, but constructed it himself without associates in that work, then he could not associate others with himself, within the meaning of the grant, in the maintenance of the road or after the completion of its construction.

Of course, the Legislature had some material or important purpose in view when authorizing John Lawley, if he chose to do so, to associate others with himself in the execution of the terms of the grant, and I can conceive of no other object intended thus to be effected than that of clothing Lawley with the right to invoke assistance in the building and operation of the road in the event that he found himself unable financially to carry out the purposes of the franchise himself. The purposes of the franchise were twofold, viz.: (1) To construct the road; (2) To operate it. The contingency to meet which the provision was inserted in the grant authorizing Lawley to associate with himself other persons in the prosecution of the enterprise was just as likely to happen in the matter of the maintenance of the road as it was in the matter of its construction, and, the state being equally as interested in its maintenance as in its construction, it would hardly be reasonable to hold that the Legislature intended to say that Lawley could not take associates, within the contemplation of the grant, in the maintenance of the turnpike after its completion by him alone. A contrary view of this proposition would, it seems to me, necessarily involve an imputation to the Legislature of a design to lay a trap by which the forfeiture of the franchise for nonuser might happen long before the grantee named in the franchise had been given an opportunity to reimburse himself for the financial outlay requisite to build the road.

Apart, therefore, from the consideration that the franchise and its essential concomitants are transferable the same as any other character of property and that Lawley, the named grantee, could consequently have taken in associates either in the construction or maintenance of the road or in both or have sold and transferred it altogether, even in the absence of a provision in the grant authorizing him to do so, it is clear to my mind that the Legislature intended to clothe Lawley with the right to take in associates in the prosecution of the enterprise at any time—after as well as before the completion of the turnpike. It follows, of course, that the appellants, although associated with John Lawley in the maintenance of the road after its construction, are, nevertheless, within the purview of the act granting the franchise in question, "such persons as he may associate with him," etc.

I am not prepared to say that the amendment by the Legislature of 1901 (Stats. 1901, p. 5) of section 516 of the Civil Code would involve, if applicable to the franchise in question, legislation whose effect as so applied would impair the obligations of a contract. The Legislature has the undoubted right to subject the exercise of rights under all such franchises to reasonable regulation in order that the interests of the public may be fully safeguarded and protected, and such franchises are granted subject not alone to existing regulations, but to such additional regulations as the granting power may deem proper and reasonable to impose subsequently to the granting of such privileges. I see nothing in the additional requirements prescribed by the amendment of section 516 of the Civil Code which is unreasonable or which could not be complied with without impairing in the slightest measure any rights which might have been acquired under the franchise involved here.

[11] But I am of the opinion that the requirements of the amendment were not intended to apply to perpetual franchises or those as to which no limitation is prescribed as to their term of duration. By said amendment, the owner of a toll road is required, in addition to affixing and keeping up, "at or over each gate, or in some conspicuous place, so as to be conveniently read, a printed list of the rates of toll levied and demanded," as said section formerly read, to show in and by such printed list, "the date when the franchise or privilege under which the right to collect tolls is claimed was granted and the term of duration of said franchise," and "the date upon which rates of toll were last fixed by the board of supervisors." Said section further provides that "failure to comply with the provisions of this act shall work an immediate forfeiture of the franchise." The court found, as we have seen, that the defendants "did affix and at all times kept up at or near the said toll gate on said toll road a list showing the rates of toll last theretofore duly fixed and determined by the said board of supervisors," etc., but that they failed to show in said printed list the date when the franchise was granted or the term of duration of said franchise, and concluded, as a matter of law, that the defendants did not comply with the provisions of the section named.

The obvious object of the requirements of section 516 of the Civil Code is to prevent the public from being fraudulently imposed upon or deceived by persons claiming the right without authority to collect tolls, or, having such authority, claiming the right to collect tolls in excess of the rates established by the board of supervisors. The importance in all cases of the provision as to the posting of the rates of toll fixed by the authorities is plainly apparent, but with respect to the posting of a notice showing the date when the franchise was granted and the term of its duration is important only in those cases where the term of duration of the franchise is limited to a specified number of years. In a case like the present, where the franchise is granted to exist perpetually, the public could not be imposed upon or deceived by the mere failure to publish, as required by the statute, the date the franchise was granted or the time during which it is to run. I am therefore of the opinion that the Legislature did not intend that those provisions which have been added since the granting of the franchise in question should apply to such franchises as were granted by the state itself to exist for an indefinite period prior to the enactment of the amendment, but were inspired solely by the policy, since adopted, of limiting the life of all franchises to a definite number of years. In any event, the vital requirements of the section, so far as this franchise is concerned, having been observed by the defendants, it would certainly be a gross injustice to declare the franchise forfeited for the reason suggested, and particularly would this be true in view of the fact that no possible injury can result to the public from the omission to comply with the requirements referred to.

The summary of my conclusion is: That the franchise in question is property in the sense of that term as it is used in section 1044 of the Civil Code, and is therefore subject to all the rights and burdens of any other species of property; that the appellants are not only the surviving associates of John Lawley within the meaning of the grant, but acquired title to the property—the franchise and the right to collect toll thereunder—through various mesne conveyances, assignments, and other instruments in writing; that the franchise was not forfeited by reason of the noncompliance with the requirements of the amendment of section 516 of the Civil Code.

The judgment and order are therefore reversed.

On Petition for a Rehearing.

HART, J. The respondents have petitioned this court for the reopening of this cause and a reconsideration of the points originally urged by them in favor of the judgment. After an extended consultation, the justices of this court have reached the conclusion that, upon a rehearing, there would be no likelihood of a recession from the result arrived at in the original opinion filed herein. We may remark, however, that we keenly appreciate the gravity and importance of the ultimate question submitted for decision in this cause, both in its legal aspect and in its effect upon the parties to the action, whatever may be the final decision; but we may further observe it is a source of much comfort to us to know that, if we have conceived erroneous views upon the legal questions, upon the solution of which the ultimate result must depend, there is another court that can correct the errors of our judgment.

It is said in the petition that "for over 40 years these defendants have exacted tolls on this road," that "at the present time appellants are bleeding the public and the public has no redress," and that, "if the time has not come, it will soon come when the profits from this toll road will amount to more in one year than the whole cost of construction and repair." It must readily be admitted that these are considerations which should make it most desirable that the public should own the road, or that it should not remain in private hands, a consummation not at all adverse to our sentiments, if the conditions be as they are depicted in the petition, but learned counsel will not, of course, undertake to maintain that such considerations constitute a legal argument in favor or in support of the confiscation of private property or the destruction of vested rights, or that will justify the establishment of a principle or precedent that must of necessity operate most disastrously to the owners generally of such franchises. If the appellants are "bleeding the public"—a phrase that can imply nothing short of an accusation that they are exacting unauthorized and illegal tolls—the plain, ready, and effectual remedy lies in a proceeding looking to a forfeiture of the franchise for a misuser of the right granted to them by the state. The boards of supervisors of the two counties into which the road extends have the power, and it is their bounden duty not only to regulate the rates of toll, but to establish such rates only as are reasonable and just both to the owners of the franchise and the public. The owner of the franchise is entitled to only a reasonable return on his investment, and, if the appellants in this case are now charging such rates as will make the profits of the venture in one year equal to the sum total of the original cost of the construction of the road and the cost of maintaining it, the fault lies with the rate-fixing body in such cases and with no one else.

But counsel declare that our construction of section 1044 of the Civil Code is entirely too broad, "because it does not include or provide for the transfer of a franchise such as this"; that "the term 'property' as used in this section refers to private property, and not to grants of public functions." We are unable to follow the argument that franchises such as the one involved in this controversy do not constitute private property. What are they if not private property? They are as much private property as franchises authorizing the construction and maintenance of railroads. There can be no distinction in principle between the two classes of franchises. It is true that they are charged with a public use and subject to the control, for the purposes of necessary and proper regulation, of the granting power and may be forfeited for misuser or nonuser, but, subject to these necessary restraints, they are as much private property in the hands of the grantees as is any other species of property.

[12] As stated in our former opinion, the state undoubtedly has the right to annex as a condition to the transfer of such franchises the procurement of its consent, but it did not do so in the case of the present franchise, and, in the absence of a provision expressly requiring that its consent shall first be obtained before said franchise may be transferred, there was, in our opinion, no necessity for such course to be pursued.

But, having fully presented in the original opinion filed herein our views on the questions discussed in the petition, there is no necessity for further consideration of them now.

As stated, feeling that further consideration of the cause or the points passed upon by us would not have the effect of changing or modifying our views, it will certainly save time to the parties and hasten a final decision, if the judgment of this court does not stand, by denying the petition and thus affording the earliest opportunity of getting the cause before the Supreme Court, if counsel choose to adopt that course.

The petition is denied.

Ex parte LA DUE. (Cr. 1,658.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 20, 1911.)

1. Arrest (§ 19*) — Civil Action — Order— Jurisdiction.

An order of arrest in a civil action may be issued by a justice of the peace when the defendant has been guilty of fraud in contracting the debt or incurring the obligation for which the action is brought, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 861, subd. 3, and the party applying for the order proves to the satisfaction of the justice, on his own affidavit or that of another, the facts necessary to authorize the order, as prescribed by section 862.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Arrest, Cent. Dig. § 48; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

2. ARREST (§ 35*)—CIVIL ACTION—PROCEEDINGS.

That an order of arrest may be issued in a civil action, there must be a complaint on file, showing that plaintiff has a cause of action against the defendant on a debt or obligation, in the contracting or incurring of which the fraud has been committed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Arrest, Cent. Dig. §§ 84–87; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

3. ARREST (§ 35*) — DEBT FRAUDULENTLY CONTRACTED—COMPLAINT—AFFIDAVIT.

A complaint alleged that A. paid defendant $175 in money, which was plaintiff's property; that defendant received it in a fiduciary capacity, and did not deliver it to plaintiff, but, without plaintiff's consent, converted it to his own use, and, on demand, refused and failed to deliver the same, or any part thereof, to plaintiff. An affidavit for an order of arrest showed that defendant received the money as trustee for plaintiff, and, without plaintiff's consent, converted the same, and refused to deliver it. Held, that such allegations were sufficient to show that the debt was fraudulently contracted, and to authorize an order of arrest as provided by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 861–865.

4. HABEAS CORPUS (§ 1*)—SCOPE OF WRIT—JURISDICTION.

Where a complaint and affidavit for an order of arrest in a civil action was sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the justice to make the order, defendant could not secure his release on habeas corpus; that writ being unavailable to serve the office of a demurrer or appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

5. HABEAS CORPUS (§ 92*) — CIVIL ACTION—COMPLAINT AND AFFIDAVIT — CONCLUSIVENESS.

Where a complaint to recover a debt and an affidavit for an order of arrest alleged positively that the debt was fraudulently contracted, importing that affiants had personal knowledge of the facts stated, such positive statement, under oath, was evidence which the justice might consider and accept as proof of the facts, on application for the order of arrest; and hence another court, on habeas corpus, could not revise the justice's determination, on the theory that the facts were such that the affidavits must have been made on information and belief; it not being certain that the affiants could not have had positive knowledge thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent.Dig. §§ 81, 83, 87–96; Dec.Dig. § 92.*]

6. ARREST (§ 35*) — CIVIL ACTION — DEBT FRAUDULENTLY CONTRACTED—COMPLAINT—AFFIDAVIT.

Where a complaint and affidavit for warrant of arrest in a civil action alleged that defendant had received plaintiff's money as plaintiff's trustee, and, on demand, had failed and refused to deliver the same, it sufficiently alleged that the sum was due on demand, so as to support an order of arrest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Arrest, Cent. Dig. §§ 84–87; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

7. HABEAS CORPUS (§ 92*)—HEARING—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

On habeas corpus to secure petitioner's release from arrest in a civil action, the court cannot consider conflicting evidence as to the merits of the case.

In Bank. Application by Stanley S. La Due for writ of habeas corpus. Writ denied, and petitioner remanded.

See, also, 117 Pac. 586.

T. E. De la Matyr and Hugh J. Crawford, for petitioner. F. E. Davis and Paul W. Schenck, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The petitioner, being in the custody of the sheriff of Los Angeles county upon two orders of arrest made by the justice's court of said county in civil actions pending in said court, obtained from this court a writ of habeas corpus to inquire into the validity of said orders. He claims that the justice's court was without jurisdiction to make said orders.

[1, 2] An order of arrest in a civil action may be issued by a justice of the peace in the manner and upon the conditions prescribed in sections 861 to 865 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It may issue "when the defendant has been guilty of a fraud in contracting the debt or incurring the obligation for which the action was brought." Section 861, subd. 3. The party applying for the order must prove to the satisfaction of the justice, upon his own affidavit or that of another person, the facts necessary to authorize the order. Section 862. There must, of course, be on file a complaint showing that plaintiff has a cause of action against the defendant upon the debt or obligation, in the contracting or incurring of which the fraud was committed. The two actions here involved being in all respects alike, a statement of one will be sufficient.

In the first case, the complaint alleged that on November 10, 1910, one Allen paid into the hands of the defendant $175, in money, which was the property of the plaintiff, and that defendant received it in a fiduciary capacity; that defendant did not deliver it to plaintiff, but, without plaintiff's consent wrongfully converted it to his own use, and, upon demand, fails and refuses to deliver the same, or any part thereof, to the plaintiff. In support of the application for the order of arrest, the plaintiff filed his own affidavit, stating that on November 10, 1910, Allen paid into defendant's hands $175, the property of plaintiff, to be turned over to plaintiff; that defendant represented plaintiff in a fiduciary capacity in receiving said money; that defendant, without cause or legal right, converted the same to his own use, without plaintiff's consent, and that plaintiff had demanded the same of defendant, who thereupon refused to deliver the same.

[3, 4] The complaint may not be as full and specific as might be necessary to make a good pleading in the superior court, if attacked by a demurrer for uncertainty. But it is sufficient as a statement of a cause of action to recover money, under the liberal rules applicable to pleadings in a justice's court. The affidavit, which is the foundation of the order, is more specific and certain. It shows that defendant received the money as trustee of plaintiff; that his specific duty as trustee was to deliver it to plaintiff; that, instead of doing so, he converted it to his own use, and, upon demand, had refused to make delivery to plaintiff. Upon these facts, he was personally liable to plaintiff for the sum so converted, and his conduct in thus violating his trust was fraudulent. This was sufficient to make a case, within the terms of the statute, and, as the justice thereupon made the order of arrest, we must presume that the facts were proved to his satisfaction. Nothing more is required to confer jurisdiction to make such an order. Habeas corpus proceedings cannot be made to serve the office of a demurrer or appeal. If jurisdiction is shown, in cases like the present, the inquiry into the cause of the custody ceases, and the petitioner must be remanded to abide the orders of the court in which the jurisdiction reposes. Ex parte Williams, 121 Cal. 330, 53 Pac. 706; Ex parte Ah Men, 77 Cal. 201, 19 Pac. 380, 11 Am. St. Rep. 263.

[5] There is nothing in the record which supports the petitioner's claim that the facts stated in the affidavit are made on information and belief, and therefore, as he claims, not sufficient as a basis for the order. The statements are in positive language, which imports the affiants' personal knowledge of the facts stated. Petitioner argues that these facts are of such a nature that the plaintiff could not have had personal knowledge thereof; and hence that this court must declare them to be made on information and belief, notwithstanding the positive language used in the affidavit. Whether or not any court would be justified in thus disregarding positive averments as to facts of this character is a question we need not consider. At all events, it is beyond the power of this court in this case to do such a thing. It would be a usurpation by this court of the powers and functions of the court to which the evidence was addressed. It cannot be said that the facts stated could not have been within the personal knowledge of the plaintiff. It is clearly possible that he may have been present at the time the money was delivered, so that he could hear and see what took place. The positive statement, under oath, was evidence which the justice had power to consider, weigh, and accept as proof of the facts stated. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002, 1844, 1845. Another court cannot, in habeas corpus, revise the determination of the justice's court as to the credibility and weight of such evidence. The justice was acting within his jurisdiction in accepting it as sufficient, and his order made thereon is not void.

[6, 7] It is further insisted that the complaint and affidavit does not show that the money sued for was then due. It is not so alleged in terms, but the facts stated show that the money was due on demand. The demand and the refusal are also set forth. From this the legal conclusion follows that it was then due. Legal conclusions need not be, and should not be, averred, either in pleadings or affidavits. There were opposing affidavits, contradicting the essential facts above stated. No authority is necessary for the proposition that we cannot consider conflicting evidence upon habeas corpus proceedings instituted to test the validity of an order made upon such evidence, produced in another court having jurisdiction of the cause. Whatever may be the facts upon the merits of the case, they are beyond the reach of any inquiry which we can make in this proceeding.

The petitioner is remanded to the custody of the sheriff of Los Angeles county.

1. Corporations (§ 298*)—Board of Directors—Meetings—Legality—"Office."

Where a majority of the board of directors of a corporation met pursuant to a regular call for a special meeting of the board, and were unable to obtain access to the office of the corporation, and convened as a board in the hallway of the building just outside of the office, and then adjourned the meeting to a designated date, the meeting of the board was valid as against the objection that the board did not meet at the office, within Civ. Code, § 319, requiring the holding of meetings of boards of directors at the corporation's office.

3. Corporations (§ 298*)—Meetings of Officers—Fraud.

Where a meeting of the board of directors of a corporation had been regularly called and all the directors had been duly notified, the mere fact that a director told another director that he would not attend the meeting, and that in consequence thereof the latter director believing that a quorum would not be present remained away, did not amount to fraud for a majority of the board, including the director who had stated that he would be absent, to meet pursuant to the call and transact proper business.

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 298*)—BOARD OF DIRECTORS—MEETINGS—NOTICE.

Under the by-laws of a corporation authorizing a quorum of the board of directors to adjourn a meeting from time to time, and providing that all the acts regularly done at meetings regularly adjourned from meetings called shall be valid, as if done at meetings regularly called and held, a director receiving notice of a meeting is not entitled to notice of an adjournment of the meeting, but he is bound to know that a quorum may adjourn, and that business may be transacted at the adjourned meeting.

7. CORPORATIONS (§ 295*)—OFFICERS—RESIGNATION—FILLING VACANCY.

Under Civ. Code, § 305, authorizing the board of directors of a corporation to fill a vacancy in the office of a director, etc., the board of directors of a corporation may accept the resignation of a director and elect his successor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1206; Dec. Dig. § 295.*]

8. CORPORATIONS (§ 297*)—BOARD OF DIRECTORS—POWERS—LOCATION AND REMOVAL OF OFFICE OF CORPORATION—"OFFICE."

Under Civ. Code, § 305, authorizing the board of directors of a corporation to exercise corporate powers and control the business and property of the corporation, the board of directors may remove the office of the corporation from one location to another in the same city, notwithstanding section 321a, declaring that the principal place of business of a corporation can be changed only with the consent of the holders of two-thirds of the stock, though the word "office" is deemed equivalent to the words "principal place of business."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1274–1291; Dec. Dig. § 297.*]

9. CORPORATIONS (§ 398*)—BOARD OF DIRECTORS—QUALIFICATIONS—TRANSFER OF CORPORATE STOCK—EFFECT.

The acts of a director of a corporation who continues to act as such, notwithstanding the transfer of his stock, are valid as to third persons dealing with the corporation, and his title to office cannot be impeached collaterally.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1592–1594; Dec. Dig. § 398.*]

10. CORPORATIONS (§ 298*) — MEETINGS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS—NOTICE.

Where the time of meeting of a board of directors of a corporation is prescribed by the by-laws of the corporation, it is not necessary to notify directors of the time of meeting; but directors receiving due notice of the changed location in the same city of the office of the corporation have due notice of the time and place of meetings of the board, and acts taken by the board at such a meeting are valid if within the power of the board.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1292–1319; Dec. Dig. § 298.*]

11. WORDS AND PHRASES — "CONVEYED" — "CONVEYANCE."

The term "conveyed" or "conveyance" in its strict legal sense imports a transfer of legal title to land, but it is also habitually used to define any transfer of title legal or equitable, and the meaning of the term in any particular case must be ascertained from the context.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1570–1584; vol. 8, pp. 7618, 7619.]

12. CORPORATIONS (§ 409*)—BY-LAWS—CONSTRUCTION — "CONVEYANCE" — LEASE OF PROPERTY.

The word "conveyance" in the by-laws of a corporation, declaring that no mortgage or conveyance shall be made without the consent of the holders of at least two-thirds of the stock of the corporation, is used in its more restricted sense as importing an act whereby the legal and equitable title to real property of the corporation is transferred, and a lease of a part of the property of the corporation for a term of five years is not a conveyance, and the board of directors may execute such a lease under their power to manage and control the affairs and property of the corporation.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by the Seal of Gold Mining Company against H. B. Slater and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

M. E. C. Munday, Chas. S. McKelvey, Curtis & McNab, Ward Chapman, and McNutt, McNutt & Hannon, for appellant. Purington & Adair, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff, claiming to be the owner and entitled to the possession of certain mining claims in San Bernardino county, brought this action, alleging in its complaint that the defendants had entered into the possession of said premises, ousting plaintiff therefrom, had destroyed buildings on said properties, and extracted gold-bearing ores therefrom. It was alleged that the defendants were still in possession, and would, unless restrained, continue to extract ore, and would destroy the value of the property. The prayer of the complaint was for damages and for a temporary injunction restraining waste. The defendant Slater answered, averring that neither of his codefendants claimed any interest in the property. For himself he admitted plaintiff's ownership of the property, but asserted that he was in possession and entitled to possession by virtue of a lease of the mining claims, made by the plaintiff corporation to him. The destruction of buildings was denied, and the taking of ore was justified under the lease. The findings of the court were in support of the allegations and denials of the answer, and judgment in favor of defendants followed. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

The one question in the case is whether the lease, which was the sole foundation for Slater's claim of a right to enter and work the property, was valid and binding upon the plaintiff. The Seal of Gold Mining Company was a California corporation. It had a board of seven directors. Prior to September 18, 1908, H. A. Landwehr was president of the corporation and one of its directors, and the other directors were George H. Moore, Edgar Sharp, C. F. Huse, Alex Strachan, A. N. Younglove, and P. T. Evans. The office of the corporation was room 306 of the Douglas building, in the city of Los Angeles. A special meeting of the board of directors was regularly called for the 18th day of September, 1908. At the time set four of the above-named persons, to wit, Sharp, Strachan, Younglove, and Evans, came to the Douglas building, but were unable to obtain access to room 306, the office of the corporation; the door to said room, which was also the office of Landwehr, being locked. They convened as a board in the hall of the building, "just outside of the office of the company," and adjourned the meeting to the 21st day of September, 1908, at 11 o'clock a. m. The same four met at the office of the company, at the time to which the meeting of the 18th had been adjourned, and after accepting the resignation of George H. Moore as director elected W. L. Peters to succeed him. Peters, who was present, at once took his seat as director. A resolution was then adopted removing Landwehr from the office of president and electing Strachan in his place. A further resolution, moving the office of the company to room 459 of the Pacific Electric building, was adopted.

The by-laws of the corporation provided for a regular meeting of the board of directors, without notice, on the 10th of each month, at noon. On October 10th, at noon, Younglove, Evans, Strachan, and Peters met as a board of directors at room 459 of the Pacific Electric building, and adopted a resolution authorizing the president and secretary to execute and deliver to Slater the lease under which he claims, and the instrument was accordingly executed. The various objections to this transaction urged by appellant are based in part on the facts stated above, and in part on further facts that will be set forth in discussing the particular points upon which they bear. While the lease in question was authorized at the regular meeting of October 10th, the validity of the acts done on that occasion depends upon the regularity of the two prior meetings. The meeting of October 10th was participated in by a director elected at, and was held at a place fixed by, the meeting of September 21st, which was itself an adjournment of the meeting of September 18th.

[1] 1. The validity of the meeting of September 18th is assailed on the ground that the directors did not meet at the office of the corporation. Section 319 of the Civil Code provides that "the meetings of the stockholders and board of directors must be held at its office or principal place of business." We need not inquire what is meant by the phrase "principal place of business" in this section. Apparently it is not used in a sense synonymous with that of "office." Its precise significance is unimportant here, for the reason that the notice of the meeting in question specified the office of the company as the place of meeting. Doubtless, therefore, the board was required to convene at such office. We think, however, that the facts above set forth show a substantial compliance with the requirement that the meeting be held at the office of the corporation. A majority of the directors, attempting to assemble pursuant to a regular notice, found the door of the office locked. They convened in the hall, outside of the door. No other director could have been thereby deprived of the opportunity to attend had he desired to do so. The place was in immediate proximity to the office, and was the only place available under the circumstances. The provision relied upon is that the meeting must be held "at," not "in," the office. It cannot be under any reasonable construction of the statute that any person who happens to be in possession of the office of the corporation has the power by excluding the directors and members to absolutely prevent the holding of meetings.

[2] 2. It is claimed that Sharp, who participated in the meeting of September 18th, and whose presence was necessary to constitute a quorum, had resigned, and so ceased to be a director. He had, in a writing addressed to the board, tendered his resignation, but the resignation was, by the terms of the writing, "to take effect upon acceptance"; and there was evidence sufficient to warrant the trial court in believing that it was not accepted until the 21st day of September.

[3] 3. We see no force in the contention that it was a fraud upon the corporation to hold the meeting of September 18th. The facts relied upon in this regard are that Sharp, after informing Landwehr that he would not go to the meeting, did nevertheless, at the request of other directors, attend and participate. But the meeting had been regularly called, and all of the directors had had notice. The mere circumstance that one of them was told that another would not attend, and believed that a quorum would not be present, is not enough to make it a fraud for a majority of the board, including the director who had stated that he would be absent, to meet pursuant to proper call and notice.

[4] 4. The meeting of September 18, 1908, transacted no business other than the taking of an adjournment to September 21st. Under the by-laws, a quorum had power to adjourn a meeting from time to time, not exceeding a period beyond the next regular meeting. The by-laws further provided that "all acts and proceedings regularly had and done at meetings regularly adjourned from meetings called or held, shall be valid and binding as if had and done at meetings otherwise regularly called and held." No notice of the adjournment was given to the directors who had not been present on September 18th. But, under the provision of the by-laws just quoted, no such notice was required. A director receiving notice of a meeting was bound to know that a quorum might adjourn, and that business might be transacted at the adjourned meeting. And this is in accordance with the general rule, which is that no notice of adjournment of a meeting regularly called need be given. 3 Clark & Marsh. Corp. §§ 649, 680; Smith v. Law, 21 N. Y. 296; Western I. Co. v. D. M. Nat. Bank, 103 Iowa, 455, 72 N. W. 657. Thompson v. Williams, 76 Cal. 153, 18 Pac. 153, 9 Am. St. Rep. 187, has been cited (see 10 Cyc. 786; 3 Thomp. Corp. § 3937) as authority for the contrary doctrine, but that case went off on the ground that the hour to which the adjournment was taken was not fixed at the original meeting, and that a new notice was therefore required.

[5] The board at the meeting of September 21st had power, therefore, to transact any business which they might have transacted at the meeting of September 18th. There is nothing to the contrary decided in Bank of National City v. Johnston, 133 Cal. 185, 65 Pac. 383, cited by appellant. In that case a resolution adopted at an adjourned meeting was held invalid for the reason that it was one that the directors could not lawfully have passed at the original meeting.

5. Of the things done at the meeting of September 21st, the only ones having any bearing on the present controversy are the acceptance of the resignation of Moore as director, the election of Peters in his place, and the removal of the office of the corporation to room 459 of the Pacific Electric building. Could the resolutions seeking the accomplishment of these purposes have been adopted at the first meeting, that of September 18th? It is argued that they could not, because they were not specified in the notice which was given to the directors prior to such meeting.

[6] But it appears to be settled in this state that a notice of a special meeting of the board of directors need not specify the purpose of the meeting. Granger v. Orig. Emp. M. & M. Co., 59 Cal. 678; Bell v. Standard Q. Co., 146 Cal. 699, 705, 81 Pac. 17. All that is required by the statute (Civ. Code, § 320) is a "written notice sufficient to inform the directors that a special meeting of the directors is called, and of the exact time and place where it is to be held." See cases last cited. The notice here given contained all these requirements, and it was, therefore effective to confer upon the board jurisdiction to transact any business properly within the scope of its powers at the time of the meeting.

[7] It cannot be questioned that the board had power to accept the resignation of a director, and to elect his successor. Civ. Code, § 305.

[8] And the location and removal of the office of the corporation was equally a matter committed to the discretion of the directors. Under section 321a of the Civil Code, the principal place of business of a corporation can be changed only with the consent of the holders of two-thirds of the stock, and upon publication of a notice of the intended change. But, even if the "office" be treated as equivalent to the "principal place of business," these requirements of consent, notice, and publication do not, by the express terms of the section, apply to a removal from one location to another in the same city.

[9] 6. On the morning of September 18th, before the meeting of that day, Sharp indorsed in blank and delivered to Landwehr the certificate representing all the stock owned by him. On the 19th the stock was transferred on the books of the corporation to a person designated by Landwehr. It is claimed that, inasmuch as the directors must be "elected from among the holders of stock" (Civ. Code, § 305), Sharp, upon the transfer of his shares on September 19th, at once ceased to be a director, and so could not participate in the meeting of September 21st. His participation was necessary to constitute a quorum at that meeting, and the contention is that the election of Peters as successor to Moore, and the subsequent removal of the office, were void. There seems to be abundant authority in other jurisdictions to the effect that, where the charter or a statute requires a director to be a stockholder, a director who parts with all his shares ipso facto divests himself of his title to his office. 3 Clark & Marsh. Priv. Corp. § 661; 3 Cook, Corp. § 623, and cas. cit. But at least in this state it is thoroughly settled that if the director continues to act as such, notwithstanding the transfer of his stock, his acts are valid as to third persons dealing with the corporation, and his title to office cannot be impeached collaterally. San Jose Sav. Bank v. Sierra L. Co., 63 Cal. 181; Robinson v. Blood, 151 Cal. 504, 91 Pac. 258; Sherwood v. Wallin, 154 Cal. 735, 742, 99 Pac. 191. Speaking of a director whose position was similar to that of Sharp here, the court said, in San Jose Sav. Bank v. Sierra L. Co., supra: "Until he was ousted on a direct proceeding he was a director de facto, and his acts as director would be valid as to third persons. This, in our judgment, is settled beyond controversy. To hold otherwise would be to render insecure all the operations of corporations."

[10] 7. If the foregoing views be sound, the objections to the meeting of October 10th fall to the ground. The persons participating were three of the old directors, together with Peters, whose election, as we have seen, was regular and proper. There was evidence that notice of the meeting was given. But, if it had not been, there was no necessity for notifying the absent directors of the time of meeting, as the time was prescribed by the by-laws. Notice of the change of the company's office to the Pacific Electric building had been given to all of the directors shortly after such change had been ordered, so that each director in fact had notice, through the by-laws, that a meeting would be held on October 10th, and had been advised of the place where the meeting would be held.

[11] 8. The final argument against the validity of the lease is based on the following provision of plaintiff's by-laws: "No mortgage or conveyance shall be made without the consent of the holders of at least two-thirds of the outstanding capital stock of the corporation." There was no such consent to the making of the lease here in question.

The instrument in question was in form a lease, whereby the plaintiff let to Slater certain mining claims for the term of five years, in consideration of Slater's agreement to work the claims and to pay to plaintiff a certain percentage of the net proceeds. (It did not cover the whole of plaintiff's property, and there is no question, therefore, of the application of section 361a of the Civil Code.) Such a lease is not, of course, a mortgage. Is it a "conveyance" within the meaning of the by-law? "The term 'conveyed,' or 'conveyance' is used in several senses. In the strict legal sense the latter term imports a transfer of legal title to land; but it is also habitually used by lawyers to denote any transfer of title, legal or equitable; and the last is also the popular sense of the term." Adams v. Hopkins, 144 Cal. 19, 37, 77 Pac. 712. Not being a word exclusively technical, it is not necessarily to be given a technical sense, unless shown to have been used in that sense. Id.; Civ. Code, § 1645. The meaning is to be ascertained from the context. The accompanying language may, to be sure, be such as to show that leases are included in the term "conveyances." For example, the sections of the Civil Code (1213, 1214, 1215) dealing with the recording of "conveyances" of real property define the term in such manner as clearly to embrace within it leases for a term exceeding one year. See Odd Fellows' Sav. Bank v. Banton, 46 Cal. 603, 7; Jones v. Marks, 47 Cal. 243. But the definition contained in section 1215 is limited to the term conveyance "as used" in the sections just preceding. Stewart v. Powers, 98 Cal. 514, 518, 33 Pac. 486. It does not purport to fix the meaning of the word when employed in different statutes or in contracts or other instruments executed by private parties. Thus is has been held that a lease is not a conveyance within the meaning of a statute authorizing an appeal from a probate order against or in favor of directing the conveyance of real property (In re Tuohy's Estate, 23 Mont. 305, 58 Pac. 722) or of a statute providing that a married woman cannot incumber or convey her lands except by deed in which her husband shall join (Heal v. Niagara Oil Co., 150 Ind. 483, 50 N. E. 482) or of one providing that no covenant shall be implied in any conveyance of real estate (City of New York v. Mabie, 13 N. Y. 151, 64 Am. Dec. 538). While the term "conveyance" has often been defined in such manner as to include leases of terms for years (see Chandler v. Hart, 119 Pac. 516), it is generally held that, in its ordinary significance the term does not include such leases (7 A. & E. Enc. Law [2d Ed.] 487; Des Moines C. A. Soc. v. Tubbessing, 87 Iowa, 138, 54 N. W. 68; Perkins v. Morse, 78 Me. 17, 2 Atl. 130, 57 Am. Rep. 780; Sullivan v. Barry, 46 N. J. Law 1, 5; Edwards v. Perkins, 7 Or. 149).

[12] In construing the by-laws above quoted, we think the word "conveyance" should be read in its more restricted sense, as importing an act whereby the legal or equitable title to real property is transferred. Not only is this in accord with the usual understanding of the term, but it gives to the by-law a more reasonable operation and effect. The purpose of the provision probably was to protect the stockholders against the loss of the corporate property by improvident acts of the directors. Such loss might result either from an executed or executory sale, or from the making of a mortgage with its necessary incident of the possibility of forced sale on foreclosure. But it is not to be supposed that the stockholders in framing their by-laws were seeking to take control of the corporate property from the directors to such an extent as to hamper the board in dealing effectively with the property in ways that would not lead to a parting with the ownership.

In addition to their contention that the lease is not within the terms of the by-law, the respondents make the points that the by-law is not binding upon Slater, who does not appear to have had notice of its restrictions, and that the by-law is void as being in conflict with the law (Civ. Code, §§ 305, 308) vesting the exercise, conduct, and control of the corporate powers, business, and property in the board of directors. A consideration of these points is rendered unnecessary by the construction we have given to the attempted limitation upon the powers of the board.

The judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.

PEOPLE v. RICHARDSON. (Cr. 1,683.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 13, 1911.)

1. ABORTION (§ 1*)—OFFENSES—ELEMENTS.

The state, on a trial of accused for supplying to a pregnant woman medicine with intent to procure her miscarriage, must show that accused furnished medicine with intent to thereby procure the woman's miscarriage, and that she was pregnant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Abortion, Cent. Dig. §§ 1–5; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

2. ABORTION (§ 1*)—OFFENSES—ELEMENTS—INTENT.

The intent to produce a miscarriage within Pen. Code, § 274, may exist on the part of accused without absolute knowledge of the woman's pregnancy; a supposition of the existence of pregnancy and the furnishing of medicine with the intention to thereby procure the woman's miscarriage, if pregnancy exists, being sufficient.

3. ABORTION (§ 11*)—EVIDENCE—INTENT.

On a trial of accused for supplying medicine to a pregnant woman with intent to procure her miscarriage, in violation of Pen. Code, § 274, evidence held to support a finding of accused's criminal intent, in view of section 21, declaring that the intent is manifested by the circumstances connected with the offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Abortion, Cent. Dig. § 22; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

4. ABORTION (§ 11*) — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY.

On a trial of accused for supplying medicine to a pregnant woman with intent to produce her miscarriage, evidence held to support a finding that she was pregnant at the time accused furnished her with the medicine, justifying a conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Abortion, Cent. Dig. § 22; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

5. ABORTION (§ 9*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

On a trial of accused for supplying medicine to a pregnant woman with intent to procure her miscarriage, the testimony of the woman, after her marriage to a third person, that she was pregnant prior to the marriage, and that accused supplied medicine, was admissible, though the child was born after marriage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Abortion, Cent. Dig. §§ 17–20; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

6. ABORTION (§ 9*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where, on a trial of accused for supplying medicine to a pregnant woman with intent to procure her miscarriage, the woman testified without objection that during a specified period she did not have intercourse with any other man than accused, and that she first became acquainted with a third person, who subsequently married her, after she became pregnant, and that her child was born subsequent to her marriage, it was not error to permit her to testify that accused was the father of the child to show motive and an inducement for the crime.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Abortion, Cent. Dig. §§ 17–20; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 404*)—EVIDENCE—EXHIBITION OF CHILD.

The exhibition by the woman of the child about 5½ months old at the time of the trial was admissible for the purpose of comparison with accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 891; Dec. Dig. § 404.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 404*)—EVIDENCE—EXHIBITION OF CHILD.

The exhibition of the child was admissible as corroborative of the testimony that it was born fully matured and perfect, to aid in determining whether it was conceived prior to the time that accused furnished the medicine to her.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 891; Dec. Dig. § 404.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ERRONEOUS ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where prosecutrix, on a trial of accused for supplying her with medicine with intent to procure her miscarriage, testified without objection that accused, in soliciting her consent to sexual intercourse, told her that he had done the same thing to other girls in his school and mentioned their names, her subsequent testimony that she knew that such girls attended accused's school was not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3137–3143; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

10. ABORTION (§ 9*) — EVIDENCE — ADMISSIBILITY.

Where prosecutrix, on a trial of accused for supplying medicine to her with intent to procure her miscarriage, testified that accused told her that another girl was pregnant and was taking the same medicine, and that he had given it to her for the same purpose, evidence that accused told prosecutrix, shortly after he had given her the medicine, that he had sexual intercourse with such other girl, was admissible to show an admission on the part of accused as to knowledge of the character of the medicine and its tendency to produce a miscarriage, and the motive and intent with which he had furnished the medicine.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Abortion, Cent. Dig. §§ 17–20; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

11. ABORTION (§ 9*) — EVIDENCE — ADMISSIBILITY—"CORROBORATE."

The testimony of prosecutrix, on a trial of accused for supplying her with medicine with intent to produce her miscarriage, that accused had intercourse with her, that she had informed him of her fear that she was pregnant, and that he furnished her medicine with the statement that it was for suppressed menses, established the corpus delicti and warranted proof of admissions by accused to corroborate the testimony of prosecutrix within Pen. Code, § 1108, declaring that accused cannot be convicted on the testimony of a woman unless she is corroborated.

12. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 778*)—INSTRUCTIONS—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where, on a trial of accused for supplying to a pregnant woman medicine with intent to procure her abortion, the evidence showed that 280 days constituted the average and normal period of gestation, and one of the issues in the case was whether the birth of the woman's child had come about in the ordinary course of nature, an instruction in the language of Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 28, that there is a presumption that things have happened according to the ordinary course of nature, but such presumption may be controverted by other evidence, was not objectionable.

13. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 823*)—INSTRUCTIONS—SUFFICIENCY AS A WHOLE.

Where, on a trial of accused for supplying medicine to a pregnant woman with intent to procure her miscarriage, the court repeatedly charged that the specific intent with which the drug was furnished was the gist of the offense, and that unless the jury were satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that it was furnished with the intent to procure a miscarriage they must acquit, an instruction that a person is presumed to intend to do that which he voluntarily does in fact do, and must be presumed to intend the natural and probable consequences of his own acts, unless there is evidence controverting the presumption, was not misleading as leading the jury to believe that they could find the intent, in the absence of evidence establishing it beyond reasonable doubt.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; J. Q. White, Judge.

F. C. Richardson was convicted of crime, and he appeals. Affirmed.

W. F. Cowan and T. J. Butts, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the State.

ANGELLOTTI, J. The defendant was convicted of the offense defined by section 274 of the Penal Code as follows: "Every person who provides, supplies or administers to any pregnant woman, or procures any such woman, to take any medicine, drug, or substance, or uses or employs any instrument or other means whatever, with intent thereby to procure the miscarriage of such woman, unless the same is necessary to preserve her life, is punishable," etc. The indictment charged that he on or about May 10, 1909, did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously provide and supply to a woman, naming her, who was then and there a pregnant woman, and procure her to take, a medicine, drug, or substance, to wit, certain pills (describing them), with intent thereby to procure her miscarriage; said miscarriage not being at all necessary to preserve her life. He appeals from the judgment pronounced upon such conviction and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

1. It is claimed that the evidence was insufficient to warrant a conviction. There is no good foundation for this claim. It is true that our law provides that "upon a trial for procuring or attempting to procure an abortion, or aiding or assisting therein, * * * the defendant cannot be convicted upon the testimony of the woman upon or with whom the offense was committed, unless she is corroborated by other evidence" (section 1108, Pen. Code); but there was ample corroboration of the woman in this case as to all matters essential.

[1] It was necessary for the prosecution to show, as contended by learned counsel for defendant: (a) That defendant furnished the medicine, drug, or substance to the woman; (b) that he furnished it with the intent then and there to thereby procure her miscarriage; and (c) that the woman was then and there a pregnant woman. A brief statement of some of the testimony will show substantial evidence warranting the conclusion of the jury, notwithstanding the rule requiring corroboration of the testimony of the woman.

The defendant kept a business college in the city of Santa Rosa, having therein about 35 pupils. The woman in question entered such school as a pupil in the year 1907, being then a girl between 16 and 17 years of age. She continued to be a pupil therein, with occasional periods of absence, until May or June, 1909. In 1908 defendant, who was a married man, living with his wife and children, began paying her attentions with a view to having sexual intercourse with her. In August, 1908, he commenced having sexual intercourse with her, and the sexual relations thus commenced were continued constantly until she left his school in May or June, 1909. The woman's testimony in this respect was fully corroborated by the admissions contained in the defendant's statement to the district attorney, made prior to his arrest. The woman testified that in March, 1909, she missed her usual monthly sickness and told the defendant, and also told him that she was in the "family way," and that he said that it could not be so. She also missed her sickness the following month and again told defendant, and he said he would get her some pills. He did subsequently furnish her with some pills and told her to take them. He subsequently asked her if they started the flow, and on being informed that they did not, said he would get her some other pills. He then gave her a box of these pills, telling her that they were for suppressed menses. This was in May, 1909. She took some of these, with the result that a slight flow occurred. Her menses did not return until after the birth of her child in December, 1909. Somewhere about April 1, 1909, she began to suffer from what the doctors call "morning sickness," a complaint, according to the doctors, that almost always indicates pregnancy, and this continued up to a month or so before the child was born. As to the existence of this "morning sickness" as early as April, 1909, the woman was corrorborated by the testimony of two other witnesses. On July 2, 1909, she became acquainted with her present husband, and married him on August 19, 1909. On December 19 or 20, 1909, she gave birth to a child, which was at the time of its birth fully developed and which weighed seven or eight pounds. There was absolutely nothing about the child to indicate that it was prematurely born. This child lived and was at the time of the trial five months old. In his statement to the district attorney, defendant admitted that he furnished the woman with the pills. He said he bought a box of them at a drug store in Santa Rosa and gave them to her. He further said the reason he did this was because the woman had told him her menses had stopped, and she asked for them. His statement further showed that he knew that the tendency of these pills was to produce a resumption of the menstrual flow, whenever it was interrupted for any reason, and that prior thereto he had procured the same kind of pills for use in such cases. The pills appear to have been put up by the manufacturer and sold by the retailer in boxes, containing a booklet containing statements indicating their value in the case of suppressed menses. A chemical analysis of a box of such pills showed that each five-grain pill contained about 2.88 grains of certain kinds of organic matter. The medical testimony was to the effect that pills composed to such an extent of such organic matter, if taken in sufficient quantity, would produce an abortion in 75 or 80 per cent. of the cases. There was also testimony to the effect that, as said by the District Court of Appeal in this case: "By the administering of certain drastic drugs, such as were given to the prosecutrix, to a pregnant female, a slight return of menstruation may be superinduced, and still a state of pregnancy remain; that, in other words, while the process of gestation may thus appear to be arrested, it nevertheless, still goes on, if an abortion has not been accomplished or a sufficient quantity of the specific intended to bring about that result has not been administered to cause a miscarriage." The woman further testified that defendant had proposed taking her to San Francisco to have an operation performed. Defendant admitted having talked with her about going to San Francisco with her, but claimed that the proposition was made by her, and that he refused. The woman was corroborated, however, by statements of defendant made to Mr. Wiatt. Mr. Wiatt's testimony was substantially that about the last of May or first of June, 1909, defendant told him that the woman wanted him to take her to San Francisco to get her work, that he did not want her to go, but that "they might," and that "he did not want us to be uneasy if they did go." She further testified that, shortly after giving her the pills, he acknowledged to her substantially that he had given them to her for the purpose of procuring her miscarriage, if she was in fact pregnant, and that he knew of the use of such pills in other cases for the same purpose.

The foregoing statement shows very clearly that there was sufficient evidence to justify the jury in finding every fact essential to the guilt of the defendant of the offense charged. It is not and could not reasonably be claimed that the furnishing by him to the woman of the pills described in the indictment is not amply shown.

[2] It appears equally clear that the evidence warranted the jury in concluding that they were so furnished by defendant with the intent then and there and thereby to procure the miscarriage of the woman, if she was in fact pregnant, as he had every reason to believe she might be. Of course, he could not then know absolutely whether or not she was pregnant, but such knowledge on his part was not essential to the commission of the offense. It was said by the Supreme Court of New Jersey, speaking in the light of a substantially similar statute to ours: "The language of the act is express in declaring that an intent to cause a miscarriage is an essential ingredient of the crime. There are no express words declaring that knowledge of the woman's condition is an essential ingredient of the crime. * * * But an intent to produce a miscarriage may exist without absolute knowledge of pregnancy. For example, if there exists in the mind a fully formed belief that pregnancy exists, there may evidently exist as fully formed an intent to cause a miscarriage. And if there be a mere suspicion that pregnancy exists, there may be an intent to cause a miscarriage if the suspected condition is in existence. * * * The plain and obvious meaning of the act was not to require such proof (proof of absolute knowledge of pregnancy), and the construction given it in this case conforms to the manifest intent of the Legislature." Powe v. State, 48 N. J. Law, 34, 2 Atl. 662. If defendant had only a suspicion that pregnancy existed, and furnished the pills with the intention to thereby procure the woman's miscarriage if such pregnancy existed, we have the intent required by the law which defines this offense.

[3] As to the existence of such an intent on his part, we do not see how any other conclusion than that reached by the jury could be reached in the light of the evidence. We have, in the first place, the statement made by defendant to the woman as to the purpose for which he had given them to her. Ample corroboration of the evidence of the woman as to the purpose so admitted is to be found in the facts and circumstances of the case. We do not understand it to be claimed that proof of such intent could be shown only by statements of the defendant. If such were the law, it would be practically impossible to produce any evidence of guilty intent in the great bulk of cases; for it is rare indeed that a person proposing to commit a crime makes any statement of his intention that is suspectible of proof. We have in this state the common sense rule that "the intent or intention is manifested by the circumstances connected with the offense, and the sound mind and discretion of the accused." Section 21, Pen. Code. If the circumstances connected with the offense are of such a nature as to disclose the intent, it is enough. We are at a loss to understand how, in view of the illicit relations shown to have existed between defendant and the woman, the strong motive on the part of defendant for concealing the fact of such illicit relations, the possibility, if not the probability, of a disclosure in the event of the birth of a child to the woman, the knowledge by him of symptoms in the woman that might reasonably cause suspicion that she was with child by him, and his consequent purchase of and furnishing to her to be taken by her certain pills which would in 75 or 80 per cent. of the cases produce a miscarriage, and with the character and effect of which he had knowledge, a jury could have well concluded otherwise than that defendant suspected pregnancy on the part of the woman and furnished the pills to her with the intent then and there thereby to produce her miscarriage, if in fact she was pregnant.

[4] Upon the question whether she was then a pregnant woman, there is, of course, a possibility that the conclusion of the jury was erroneous. It is possible that the conception was the result of intercourse between the woman and defendant occurring after the pills were furnished, some time in May or the early part of June. But a mere possibility that this may be so does not preclude a conclusion to the contrary. It is enough if the evidence was of such a nature as to warrant the jury in concluding that there was no reasonable doubt that the woman was pregnant at that time. The jury was warranted by the evidence in concluding that her menses ceased in March and did not reappear until after the birth of her child nine months later, and that she suffered from a complaint existing in 75 to 80 per cent. of cases of pregnant women, from the early part of April until shortly before the birth of her child. She gave birth to a fully developed and perfect child in December, 1909, at the end of what would be the natural and ordinary period of pregnancy if conception occurred in March, 1909. We are satisfied that it must be held that these facts were sufficient to warrant the jury in concluding that the woman was pregnant at the time defendant furnished her with the pills. There is no pretense that a miscarriage was necessary to preserve the life of the woman. We conclude, therefore, that the verdict was fully warranted by the evidence.

[5] It appears to be claimed that no evidence given by the woman tending to show pregnancy commencing in March or April, 1909, and terminating in December, 1909, although received without objection, can be considered, in view of the fact that the child was born after her marriage to another and in lawful wedlock; the theory being that evidence of the husband or wife tending to show the illegitimacy of a child so born is incompetent. Passing all other possible answers to this claim, it does not seem to us that the rule invoked can properly have any application to a case of this character. The question of the legitimacy or illegitimacy of the child is in no way directly involved in this case, and, of course, the legal rights of the child can be in no way affected by any conclusion that may be reached herein. It is not even essential to the offense here charged, as it is in bastardy proceedings, that defendant is the father of the child. The object of such testimony was simply to show that the woman was pregnant at a time prior to her marriage when the defendant furnished her with a substance designed to procure her miscarriage if she was in that condition, and it was material and necessary testimony upon that point. That it may incidentally tend to show that the child was not begotten by the man who subsequently met and married the mother, the legal rights of such child being in no way affected thereby, should not require its exclusion, and we do not think that the authorities require any such conclusion. In Ratcliff v. Wales, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 65, approvingly cited and followed in Chamberlain v. People, 23 N. Y. 85, 80 Am. Dec. 255, it was said that it has been uniformly held, in bastardy cases where the mother is a married woman, that, "from the necessity of the thing, she has been constantly permitted to prove the criminal intercourse by which the child was begotten." None of the testimony given by the woman in this case came within the inhibition as the same is declared in Estate of Mills, 137 Cal. 298, 70 Pac. 91, 92 Am. St. Rep. 175, viz., that neither husband nor wife may "testify to the fact of nonaccess during cohabitation." The rule was further stated in the case just cited as follows: "Illegitimacy may be proved; but it cannot be proved by the evidence of a husband or wife that while living together they did not have sexual intercourse." See, also, Baker v. Baker, 13 Cal. 99. It should further be noted that most of the testimony of the woman in this regard was given without objection, and that the particular objection here made does not appear to have been suggested at all in the trial court.

2. Many errors are alleged in the rulings of the trial court on questions of evidence. We shall mention such objections in this regard as appear to warrant notice.

[6] The woman, having testified that her child was born on December 19, 1909, was asked, "Who is the father of that child?" An objection interposed to this question merely on the ground that the same called for the conclusion of the witness was overruled, and the witness answered that defendant was the father. We do not deem it necessary to consider whether this ruling was technically erroneous. She testified, without objection, that never from the time she first entered defendant's school until she left it on June 20th did she have sexual intercourse with any other man than the defendant, and also that she first became acquainted with her husband on July 2, 1909. Under these circumstances, her answer that defendant was the father of the fully developed, fully matured, and perfect child born December 19, 1909, obviously could not have been prejudicial. Evidence of paternity was admissible, of course, in this case on the question of motive and as tending to show inducement for the crime.

[7, 8] The trial court, over the objection of defendant, permitted the woman to bring the child with her upon the witness stand and state that it was the child to which she referred in her testimony, thus giving the jury an opportunity to see it and compare its appearance with that of the defendant in determining the question of its paternity. The child was then about 5½ months old. There appears to be some conflict in the authorities on the question whether an alleged child may thus be exhibited to a jury for purposes of such comparison. The propriety of this practice appears to have been recognized in Estate of Jessup, 81 Cal. 418, 21 Pac. 976, 22 Pac. 742, 1028, 6 L. R. A. 594, though some doubt was there expressed whether such a comparison would go far toward establishing relationship. As is said in section 166 of Wigmore on Evidence, the propriety of an inference of relationship from similarity of corporal traits rests in the supposed physiological likelihood that traits may be transmitted by procreation, a physiological principle that is a matter of common knowledge. An examination of the authorities leads us to the conclusion that the better rule is that the objection in such cases goes only to the question of the weight to be accorded testimony of this nature, and not to its relevancy or competency. This was the conclusion of the Supreme Court of New Jersey in Gaunt v. State, 50 N. J. Law, 490, 14 Atl. 600, a prosecution for fornication. This would appear to be true regardless of the age of the child. See State v. Woodruff, 67 N. C. 89; State v. Britt, 78 N. C. 439; Crow v. Jordan, 49 Ohio St. 655, 32 N. E. 750; State v. Saidell, 70 N. H. 174, 46 Atl. 1083, 85 Am. St. Rep. 627; Gilmanton v. Ham, 38 N. H. 108; Finnegan v. Dugan, 14 Allen (Mass.) 197; Kelly v. State, 133 Ala. 195, 32 South. 56, 91 Am. St. Rep. 25. While, as said before, there is a conflict in the authorities on this proposition, we are of the opinion that there was no good objection to the course pursued in this case. Regardless, however, of what we have said on this point, we think it cannot be disputed that the exhibition of the child was proper as corroborative of the testimony that it was born fully matured and perfect, a matter material in determining whether it was conceived prior to the time that defendant furnished the pills to the woman.

[9] In view of the fact that the woman had testified without objection that defendant, in soliciting her consent to intercourse, told her that he had done the same thing to other girls in the school and mentioned their names, her subsequent testimony that she knew such girls attended the school, which was objected to, could not have prejudiced him.

[10] Subsequent testimony given by her under objection to the effect that he told her, shortly after he had given her the pills, that he had sexual relations with another girl, was admissible. This testimony was given in connection with other testimony to the effect that he told her, as a part of the same statement, that such other girl was pregnant and taking the same pills that she was, and that he had given them to her for the same purpose, viz., "to start the flow." It was proper evidence as tending to show an admission on his part as to knowledge of the character of the pills and their tendency to produce a miscarriage, and also the motive and intent with which he had furnished them to her. If evidence is material and competent, the fact that it may reflect discreditably upon a defendant is no ground for its exclusion.

[11] There was no error in receiving in evidence the statement made by the defendant to the district attorney in his office prior to his arrest. It is not claimed that this statement was not freely and voluntarily made by the defendant, without inducement or pressure of any kind on the part of the district attorney or any other officer. The point against it appears to be that it was not admissible in evidence "until after the corpus delicti in the case had been proven," and that the testimony previously given by the woman was not sufficient to prove such corpus delicti, in view of the law requiring corroboration of her testimony before a conviction could be had. There is nothing in the point. The law in regard to corroboration (section 1108, Pen. Code) is simply that the defendant "cannot be convicted upon the testimony" of the woman, unless she is corroborated by other evidence. Her evidence was sufficient proof of the corpus delicti to warrant the introduction of evidence of admissions or confessions on the part of defendant for purposes of the necessary corroboration. That the testimony of the woman may thus be sufficiently corroborated by a confession of the defendant to warrant a conviction is shown by what is said in People v. Josselyn, 39 Cal. 400.

We think that a sufficient foundation was laid to warrant the evidence based on a chemical analysis of a box of the same kind of pills which was purchased by the officers at a drug store in Santa Rosa.

The other assignments of error in the matter of rulings on evidence do not require notice here, other than the mere statement that there is nothing therein requiring a reversal.

Certain errors in the matter of instructions to the jury are alleged.

[12] The court instructed the jury as follows: "Under the law of this state, there is a presumption that things have happened according to the ordinary course of nature and the ordinary habits of life. Such presumption may be controverted or disproved by other evidence." This was in accord with subdivision 28 of section 1963 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is not disputed that this is correct as an abstract proposition of law, but the point against it appears to be that with reference to the facts of this case it makes a presumption "run backwards." We see no ground for such a claim. The authorities cited, to the effect that the presumption that a thing once proved to exist continues as long as is usual with things of that nature, does not operate retrospectively, and that there is no presumption that a fact or state of things shown to exist at a particular time was in existence prior thereto, relate to an entirely different subject-matter and have no application here. In view of the established physiological fact, testified to by the medical witnesses in this case, that 280 days constitute the average normal period of gestation in the case of human beings, the rule of law stated was applicable. One of the questions in this case was whether the birth of this fully developed and perfect child had come about in the ordinary course of nature; that is, at the end of the natural term of gestation.

The instruction advising the jury substantially that even if defendant did not know whether pregnancy on the part of the woman was the reason for the cessation of her menses when he furnished her the drug, if he did furnish it, yet if he furnished it with the intention that in case she was pregnant her miscarriage should be thereby procured, and she was in fact then pregnant, he was guilty of the offense charged, was, as we have heretofore seen, correct. See Powe v. State, 48 N. J. Law, 34, 2 Atl. 662.

[13] The court instructed the jury as follows: "A person must be presumed, and is presumed, to intend to do that which he voluntarily and willfully does in fact do, and must also be presumed to intend all the natural, probable, and usual consequences of his own acts, unless there is evidence direct or indirect to controvert this presumption." It is not disputed that this is a correct exposition of the law in ordinary cases; but it is urged that the latter part of the instruction is not applicable and is misleading where, as in this case, the intent with which an act is done is the gist of the offense. We quite agree with counsel that an intent to procure a miscarriage by the pills is not to be legally presumed from the fact of the furnishing thereof, even though the circumstances of such furnishing may be sufficient to warrant an inference as a fact of such intent, and that there was no legal presumption arising from the mere furnishing to the effect that defendant intended to thereby procure a miscarriage. This particular intent being, as said, the gist of the offense, it was incumbent on the people to establish it as a fact by such evidence as would warrant a conclusion to that effect on the part of the jury. People v. Jones, 117 Pac. 176. But we do not think that the instruction complained of was meant or could have been understood by the jury as requiring or authorizing them to find any such intent in the absence of evidence establishing it to their satisfaction beyond all reasonable doubt. This is clear when we examine the charge as a whole. The jury was repeatedly and emphatically instructed that the specific intent with which the drug was furnished was the gist of the offense, and that, unless they were satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt by the evidence that it was furnished with the intent to procure a miscarriage in the event that the woman was pregnant, they must acquit. For instance, one instruction, after stating that guilt could attach only in the event that it appeared from the evidence beyond all reasonable doubt, that such medicine was provided "with intent to produce a miscarriage," proceeded as follows: "Therefore, even though you believe from the evidence that defendant supplied said medicine to said Oma E. Stephens, still, if you cannot determine from the evidence beyond all reasonable doubt whether such medicine was provided to procure a miscarriage, or to relieve suppressed menstruation, you must find defendant not guilty." This is but an example of several instructions given by the court on the element of the intent, and the clear purport of the whole charge was that, to entitle the prosecution to a verdict, it was incumbent upon it to prove as a fact, to the satisfaction of the jury beyond all reasonable doubt, not only the furnishing of the pills, but also a specific intent on the part of the defendant to produce a miscarriage thereby, if pregnancy existed. It is inconceivable that the jury understood otherwise.

We see nothing in any of the points made as to other instructions and requested instructions that requires notice, further than to say that there was no error on the part of the trial court in regard thereto.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

COBURN v. HYNES. (S. F. 5,806.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 27, 1911.)

INSANE PERSONS (§ 33*) — APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIAN—APPEAL—EFFECT.

A guardian of an incompetent person is properly prevented by writ of supersedeas from assuming the functions of his office pending an appeal from the order appointing him, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 966, which provides that when an order appointing a guardian is reversed for error, but not for want of jurisdiction, all lawful acts performed by the guardian are valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insane Persons, Cent. Dig. §§ 48-51; Dec. Dig. § 33.*]

In Bank. Petition by Loren Coburn for writ of supersedeas against M. J. Hynes, guardian of Loren Coburn. Writ granted.

A. J. Treat and W. B. Kollmyer, for petitioner. Cullinan & Hickey, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Petitioner was duly declared by the superior court to be an incompetent person, and M. J. Hynes was appointed and qualified as guardian of his person and estate. Immediately following the order of appointment in the guardianship proceeding Loren Coburn, petitioner herein, gave notice of an appeal and within the time required by law filed in proper form his undertaking on appeal in the sum of $300. He now petitions for a writ of supersedeas, alleging that the said M. J. Hynes threatens to take possession of his property and to act as his guardian in spite of the pending appeal. This is admitted by the return. The sole question presented, therefore, is whether or not the guardian should be prevented by means of such a writ from assuming the functions of his office pending the appeal from the order appointing him.

Respondent M. J. Hynes concedes that such cases as In re Woods, 94 Cal. 566, 94 Pac. 566, and Matter of Moss, 120 Cal. 695, 53 Pac. 357, seem to sustain petitioner's position that the filing of the undertaking on appeal provided by section 941 of the Code of Civil Procedure suspends the guardian's power pending appeal, but he asks us to overrule these cases upon the grounds: (1) That section 966, Code of Civil Procedure, recognizes the right of a guardian to act during an appeal from the order appointing him; (2) that this case comes under the rule declared in Dulin v. Pacific Wood & Coal Co., 98 Cal. 305, 33 Pac. 123, and Matter of the Real Estate Associates, 58 Cal. 356; and (3) that it is contrary to sound public policy to suspend the functions of a guardian until the hearing of the appeal from the order appointing him.

Section 966, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that: "When the judgment or order appointing an executor, or administrator, or guardian, is reversed on appeal, for error, and not for want of jurisdiction of the court, all lawful acts in administration upon the estate performed by such executor, or administrator, or guardian, if he have qualified, are as valid as if such judgment or order had been affirmed." We do not see that this section fixes the right of a guardian to act during the pendency of such an appeal as the section designates. On the contrary, its language would indicate that, statutorily, he has no such right, but that if he exercise his functions of guardianship in a case where the order appointing him is not void for want of jurisdiction, his acts will not be invalid. It is just such a section as would prevent an appellant from standing by without complaint and allowing the guardian to manage his estate, and then taking advantage of a decision in appellant's favor in the higher court by refusing to recognize the guardian's acts performed in good faith during the pendency of the appeal. Dulin v. Pacific Wood & Coal Co., supra, was a case in which one who, by a court of competent jurisdiction, had been declared to be a director of a private corporation, was proceeding to act as such during the appeal from the judgment. The court held that the writ of supersedeas could not be used to restrain his codirectors from recognizing the respondent and acting with him, the court saying: "The writ itself is directed to the court whose action is sought to be restrained, or to some of its officers, and is limited to restraining any action upon the judgment appealed from. It cannot be used to perform the functions of an injunction against the parties to the action, restraining them from any act in the assertion of their rights, other than to prevent them from using the process of the court below to enforce the judgment, nor can the writ be employed for any purpose upon persons not parties to the judgment." A guardian is not like a director of a private corporation. The former is an officer of the court, whose every act must depend for its authority upon the order appointing him. If the operation of that order be stayed he is left without power to act. The opinion in Matter of Real Estate Associates, supra, held that the functions of a receiver were not suspended by an undertaking on appeal given under section 941, Code of Civil Procedure. Even if we concede that receivers are in the same category as guardians, we are confronted with the fact that years after the decision last cited and that in In re Woods, supra, were handed down, the Legislature saw fit to provide in terms that an order appointing a receiver cannot be stayed except by the filing of a special bond (section 943, Code Civ. Proc., as amended in 1897; see Stats. 1897, p. 56), while the rule with reference to guardians was left unchanged.

This brings us to respondent's argument that tying the hands of the guardian during the pendency of the appeal is opposed to sound public policy. The answer to that argument is that the Legislature has never seen fit to declare that public policy demanded a change from the doctrine of the Woods Case. This very subject is considered in Matter of Moss, supra, where Mr. Justice McFarland, speaking for the court, said: "Some difficulties are suggested by a consideration of the proposition that the appeal stays the execution of the order, and that, if the appellant be really incompetent, his property might be dissipated by designing persons during the pendency of the appeal. There is some force in this suggestion, and apprehended embarrassments might be remedied perhaps by some amendment to the Code in this regard; but more grievous consequences might follow an erroneous adjudication of guardianship, if no appeal were allowed." The following cases also support petitioner's request for supersedeas: In re Schedel, 69 Cal. 242, 10 Pac. 334; Born v. Horstmann, 80 Cal. 453, 22 Pac. 169, 338, 5 L. R. A. 577; City of Los Angeles v. Pomeroy, 132 Cal. 340, 64 Pac. 477; Rohrbacher v. Superior Court, 144 Cal. 633, 78 Pac. 22.

(Supreme Court of California. March 3, 1911.)

1. SALES (§ 442*)—"WARRANTY OF FITNESS"—EFFECT.

Where it was necessary that boxes sold under an express warranty of quality should be dry to be fit for the use intended, the express warranty was a warranty of quality and of fitness within Civ. Code, § 3314, defining the measure of damages for breach of "warranty of fitness."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1284–1301; Dec. Dig. § 442.*]

2. SALES (§ 267*)—EXPRESS WARRANTY—IMPLIED WARRANTY.

The making of an express warranty of quality does not exclude an implied warranty of fitness of the article sold, where the warranty so implied is not inconsistent with the express warranty but in harmony therewith.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 760; Dec. Dig. § 267.*]

On petition for rehearing. Denied.

For former opinion, see 113 Pac. 870.

PER CURIAM. [1] In a petition for rehearing the defendant contends that the measure of damages stated by the court below in its instructions to the jury was incorrect and inapplicable. The rule laid down in the instruction complained of was that declared in section 3314 of the Civil Code with respect to the damages for breach of warranty of fitness of an article for a particular purpose, the rule including a fair compensation for the loss incurred by an effort in good faith to use it for such purpose. The defendant's criticism is that the warranty shown was an express warranty of quality, only—that is, that the boxes should be dry—and that this by operation of law excludes an express or implied warranty of fitness. It is sufficient to say on this point that the facts alleged and proven show that in order to make the boxes fit for the use intended it was necessary that they should be dry, and that, therefore, the express warranty made was a warranty both of quality and of fitness for the purpose intended, in which case the rule stated in section 3314 would be applicable.

[2] Furthermore, the facts alleged and proven would suffice to create an implied warranty of fitness, and we do not think it is true that the making of an express warranty of quality will exclude an implied warranty of fitness, where the warranty so implied is not only not inconsistent with the express warranty, but entirely in harmony therewith. There was no conflict in the evidence regarding these warranties.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by D. C. McLaughlin and others against F. Knobloch and another, partners as the Fresno Artificial Stone Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Lewis H. Smith, for appellants. J. P. Bernhard, M. B. Harris, and E. M. Harris, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. The plaintiffs are owners of certain lots fronting on Blackstone avenue in the city of Fresno.

Their complaint alleged that defendants claimed a lien on said lots based on a certain warrant, assessment, and diagram made and issued by the superintendent of streets of the city of Fresno, on June 19, 1907, authorizing and empowering defendants to demand and receive certain assessments upon each of the lots of the plaintiffs described in the complaint; that said warrant, assessment, and diagram purported to be issued under a contract for certain sidewalk work on said Blackstone avenue in said city of Fresno fronting the lots of plaintiffs, entered into between the superintendent of streets of said city and the defendants in accordance with proceedings of the board of trustees of said city theretofore had and taken under what is known as the Vrooman act (St. 1885, p. 147), which provides for work upon streets and sidewalks, etc., within municipalities; that said lien claimed and every one of said liens claimed against said lots is void for the same reason, to wit, because the work for which said lien is claimed was not done or performed under the contract under which said warrant and assessment was issued, or performed on the sidewalks fronting the lots of plaintiffs or any of them under and by reason of the contract under which said lien is claimed; and that the act of the superintendent of streets in issuing said warrant, assessment and diagram had created a cloud upon the title to the lots of the respective plaintiffs. The purpose of the action was to enjoin defendants from collecting the said assessments or enforcing or foreclosing any lien upon the lots of plaintiffs; to have said assessment declared void and that the entire record of said warrant, assessment and diagram in the office of the superintendent of streets be canceled as far as it affected the lots of plaintiffs.

A general and special demurrer of the defendants to the complaint being overruled they answered denying the material allegations of the complaint, and set up affirmatively due proceedings taken under the Vrooman act, the award of the contract for the improvements to the defendants on April 29, 1907, alleged the completion of the work thereunder, the levy of an assessment therefor by the superintendent of streets on each lot to cover the cost of the improvement; the issuance by said superintendent of streets to the defendants of his warrant, the certificate of the city engineer, and the assessment and diagram showing each street upon which the lots assessed abutted, and prayed for a decree declaring said assessments valid and existing liens against said separate lots of plaintiffs.

On the trial the plaintiffs rested their case solely upon the testimony of three witnesses to the effect that after the 29th of April, 1907, the date of the contract upon which the assessment was based, no work of any kind had been done on said sidewalks on Blackstone avenue.

Defendants then introduced in evidence the proceedings taken by the board of trustees showing that the board had acquired jurisdiction to award the contract to the defendants for the improvement of said sidewalks, and also the contract entered into between the superintendent of streets and the defendants for the construction of said sidewalks, the regularity and legality of which was not questioned by plaintiffs. They also introduced in evidence the warrant and assessment of the superintendent of streets, the certificate of the city surveyor and diagram with affidavit of demand of assessments and their nonpayment, which under the statute (section 12, Vrooman Act, as amended Stats. 1889, p. 168, § 8) is declared shall be prima facie evidence of the regularity and correctness of the assessment and of the prior proceedings and acts of the superintendent of streets and city council upon which said warrant, assessment and diagram are based, and like evidence of the right of plaintiff to recover in the action, and thereupon moved the court to strike out the parol testimony previously introduced on behalf of plaintiffs showing that no work was done on the sidewalks after April 29, 1907, on the ground that such testimony was immaterial and irrelevant. This motion was denied and the ruling excepted to. This was practically all the evidence in the case. The court found as alleged in the complaint "that the work for which said lien is claimed was not done or performed under the contract under which said warrant and assessment were issued or by virtue of said contract; that there has been no work done on the sidewalk fronting the lots described in said complaint or any of them under or by reason of the contract by virtue of which said lien is claimed," and upon this finding based its decree in favor of the plaintiffs as prayed for in the complaint and against the defendants. Defendants moved for a new trial, which was denied, and this appeal is taken from both the order denying said motion and from the judgment. It is insisted here by appellants that the court erred in overruling their demurrer to the complaint and also in refusing to strike out the oral testimony of the witnesses above referred to, and that the evidence did not sustain the finding above quoted. There is no necessity for extended separate discussion of the various points made by appellants as the same legal proposition is involved in them all.

The proceedings for the improvements of the sidewalks on Blackstone avenue in front of the lots of plaintiffs were inaugurated by the board of trustees of the city of Fresno and proceeded with entirely under what is known as the Vrooman act and acts amendatory thereto. Under the provisions of that act it is declared that such work or improvements shall be under the direction and to the satisfaction of the superintendent of streets, and sections 8 and 9 thereof provide that "after the contractor of any street work has fulfilled his contract to the satisfaction of the street superintendent of said city, or city council on appeal, the said superintendent shall make an assessment," which, with the warrant, diagram and certificate of the city engineer, shall be recorded in the office of the superintendent of streets, thereafter delivered to the contractor, and shall constitute a lien on the lots assessed.

Section 11 of the act provides that any property owner, or any one directly interested in the work provided for, or in the assessment, who feels aggrieved by any act or determination of the superintendent of streets in relation thereto, "or having or making any objection to the correctness or legality of the assessment or other act, determination or proceeding of the superintendent of streets" shall appeal to the city council within a given time, and be entitled to a hearing thereon. On such appeal the city council is empowered to "revise and correct any of the acts or determinations of the superintendent of streets relating to said work; * * * may confirm, amend, set aside, alter, modify or correct the assessment, * * * and require the work to be completed according to the directions of the city council. All decisions and determinations of said city council * * * shall be final and conclusive upon all persons entitled to appeal * * * as to all errors, informalities and irregularities which said city council might have remedied and avoided, and no assessment shall be held invalid except upon appeal to the city council * * * for any error, informality or other defect in any of the proceedings prior to the assessment or in the assessment itself," etc.

Under the allegations of the complaint it is not attempted to question or attack any of the proceedings for any want of jurisdiction in the board to order the sidewalk improvements on Blackstone avenue made, or that a valid contract was not entered into between the superintendent of streets and the defendants to do that work or that the warrant, assessment and diagram issued by the superintendent of streets were not all valid and regular upon their face. The claim solely is that, notwithstanding the apparent regularity on their face of the warrant and assessment, their issuance by the superintendent of streets was void because the work in front of the lots of plaintiffs for which they purported to be issued was not in fact performed. The attack is made on the validity of the assessment for matters extraneous to its face.

The position of appellants is that as the sole ground of attack on the warrant and assessment is that the work certified by the superintendent of streets to have been performed under the contract, and upon which the warrant and assessment were issued, was not in fact done that, if this were true, the only remedy of the plaintiffs lay in an appeal to the city council or board of trustees under said section 11 of the Vrooman act, to have the determination of the superintendent of streets that it had been done reviewed and corrected, if erroneous, and the warrant and assessment issued by him set aside; that this is the remedy provided by said section, and is the exclusive remedy open to plaintiffs, and as the complaint failed to show that they had taken such appeal to the board they were not entitled to maintain this action in the superior court to have the assessment declared void on the grounds stated and, hence, the demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained; that independent of this, as it appeared on the trial that no such appeal to the board had been taken, and the defendants having introduced in evidence the warrant and assessment, etc., which, under section 12 of the act, showed a prima facie right in the defendants to recover in the action, the court should have stricken out the oral testimony of the witnesses for plaintiff of nonperformance of the work under the contract as irrelevant and immaterial, and wholly insufficient upon which to base the controlling finding made by the court.

We are satisfied that under the provisions of the Vrooman act and the authorities construing such provisions, particularly with reference to a failure to appeal to the board for the correction of errors committed by the superintendent of streets, that there can be no question as to the correctness of the position of appellants as to all the points urged.

Under the act it is left in the first instance to the superintendent of streets to determine whether or not work has been performed under a contract. The assessment here in question issued by the superintendent declares "all of said work having been performed and materials furnished, complying to the specification, under my direction, to my satisfaction and acceptance." Whether the work was done under the contract was a question of fact to be determined by the superintendent in the first instance. Such determination was not conclusive, but subject to review upon an appeal to the common council or board of trustees under section 11 of the act, and is the only method provided whereby such review can be had, and where a property owner fails to take such an appeal within the time allowed, the determination of the superintendent of streets that the work has been done conformably to the contract becomes conclusive of that fact, and cannot be attacked before any other tribunal. This has been uniformly held by this court. Warren v. Riddell, 106 Cal. 352, 39 Pac. 781; Diggins v. Hartshorne, 108 Cal. 154, 41 Pac. 283; Lambert v. Bates, 137 Cal. 676, 678, 70 Pac. 777. In the latter case it is said: "The rule is firmly established that, if the owner would contest an assessment upon the ground that the work contracted for has not been fully performed, he must present that question upon appeal to the city council for its determination. * * * If in fact he (the superintendent of streets) accepted the work and made the assessment before the contract was fulfilled, such determination or act was an error of that officer which the council might have remedied. It was within the functions of that body, upon the defendant's appeal, to determine whether in fact the work provided for in the contract had been fully performed or not, and, under the above provision of section 11, its action in overruling said appeal and dismissing the same is final and conclusive upon him."

On the part of respondents it is insisted that they were not required to appeal to the board of trustees for the correction of the assessment; that as no work at all was done under the contract the assessment was void, and there was nothing in the unauthorized act of the superintendent in issuing it which could be corrected or remedied by the board of trustees if the plaintiffs had taken an appeal to the board, and rely upon such cases as Manning v. Den, 90 Cal. 610, 27 Pac. 435; Capron v. Hitchcock, 98 Cal. 427, 33 Pac. 431; Frick v. Morford, 87 Cal. 576, 25 Pac. 764; Warren v. Chandos, 115 Cal. 382, 47 Pac. 132; Chase v. Treasurer of Los Angeles, etc., 122 Cal. 544, 55 Pac. 414.

There is nothing in the point made, nor do the authorities relied on support it. In all those cases it was held either that the municipal authorities had never acquired jurisdiction to order the improvement, or that no valid contract had been entered into by the superintendent of streets, and hence that there was nothing upon which a valid assessment could be based, or the assessment upon its face appeared to be absolutely void. There was lack of jurisdiction in the board to order the improvement, or want of power in the superintendent to order the work or contract for it, which rendered the assessment invalid. Where these things exist, or the assessment on its face shows that it is void, the authorities cited hold that no appeal is necessary, as it is always open to the property owner to show lack of jurisdiction or invalidity of the contract, or rely upon the apparent invalidity on the face of the assessment itself when an attempt is made to enforce or assert any right under it. But here there is no question but that the board had acquired jurisdiction to order the improvement made; that the superintendent had entered into a valid contract, and that the assessment showed that the work had been done under the contract to the satisfaction of the superintendent, and in all respects the assessment, warrant, and diagram were regular on their face. No question of law as to jurisdiction or regularity of proceedings from the passage of the resolution of intention to the final act of the issuance of the assessment was involved. The superintendent had determined, as the law made it his duty to do, that the work contracted for had been performed to his satisfaction, and issued the assessment. The plaintiffs claim that the work had not been so performed. This made purely an issue or question of fact between the superintendent and the plaintiffs on this point; an issue arising outside the assessment itself, and one which, under such circumstances could only be reviewed on an appeal to the board of trustees under section 11, and which determination of the matter is made conclusive.

Nor is there any force in the point that the board under the terms of section 11 was unable to afford the plaintiffs adequate relief on an appeal to them if the respondents had prosecuted it; that as no work was done at all under the contract and the time for performing it had expired there was nothing that the board could do to compel the performance of the work by the contractors. But the claim that there was no work done under the contract at all and that the certificate of the superintendent of streets that all the work contracted for had been done was erroneous, and the assessment based thereon improperly issued, does not affect the proposition that even under such circumstances the remedy of the property owner is solely an appeal to the city council or board of trustees. From the testimony of the witnesses for plaintiffs directed specifically to the fact that no work was done under the contract after the date of its execution on April 29, 1907, it is to be inferred that the work referred to in the certificate of the superintendent and the warrant and assessment was done prior to that date and that the proceedings had before the board of trustees eventuating in the contract for the sidewalk improvement and the issuance of the certificate and the warrant and assessment here attacked were taken to remedy some defect or imperfection in the prior proceedings for the work which was actually done. We assume this because the record does not disclose the real situation, although it is apparent therefrom that sidewalks were laid on Blackstone avenue in front of the lots of plaintiffs prior to and about that time. We merely mention this in passing because, as we have stated, it can be of no legal moment whether the attack on the validity of the assessment in this action is based on the fact that the superintendent of streets certified that the work had been completed when it had not been done at all, or whether the certificate was untrue because there had been a partial failure to substantially do the work. In either case the remedy is solely by appeal to the board of trustees because whatever the situation may be respecting the performance of the contract, the board is vested with ample power to relieve the property owner which is the purpose of providing for the appeal. Very full power is given to the board. It is authorized to revise any act or determination of the superintendent of streets relative to the work, and if it finds that the work in whole or in part has not been done pursuant to the contract, it can set aside the assessment issued by the superintendent and can require the work to be completed in accordance with the directions of the board. If, as claimed by respondents, the determination of the superintendent that the work had been done pursuant to the contract was untrue; that no work at all was done under the contract, it must be assumed that if an appeal had been made to the board upon that ground, it would either have ordered annulled the certificate of the superintendent of streets and left defendants without a basis to proceed against the property of plaintiff for the collection of the assessment, or it could have directed the completion of the contract according to its terms. It must be assumed that the board of trustees would have done their duty, and, so doing, respondents, if they had appealed, would have been afforded full and complete relief.

It necessarily follows from these views that the plaintiffs having failed to take their appeal to the board of trustees, had no standing to maintain this action. The trial court could not determine the question whether the work had or had not been done under the contract as that was a matter exclusively for the board of trustees to determine on appeal, and it was error to refuse to strike out the testimony of the witnesses on that point after the defendants had introduced in evidence the warrant, assessment, certificate, and diagram, with the affidavit of demand of payment, and nonpayment, which made a prima facie showing entitling them to a judgment sustaining their liens as they had prayed for in their answer.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

BILLESBACH v. LARKEY. (S. F. 5,543.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 22, 1911.)

1. Appeal and Error (§ 856*)—Review—Theory of Rulings Below.

The appellate court is not confined to the reasons given for the decision below, so that judgment for defendant will be affirmed if the appellate court can sustain a demurrer to the complaint upon any of the grounds of demurrer, whether on the particular ground sustained by the trial court or not.

2. Physicians and Surgeons (§ 18*)—Malpractice—Actions—Allegations of Complaint.

The complaint alleged that defendant, a physician, was employed by plaintiffs on December 22, 1907, to cure plaintiff, and that he "carelessly and negligently" gave her a written prescription for a drug known as heroin, a derivative of opium, and that after plaintiff had taken the drug for two months, the druggist refused to refill it without special authority by defendant, whereupon defendant carelessly and negligently instructed the druggist to refill the prescription for plaintiff whenever she wanted it, and did not revoke it for more than a year thereafter, and that defendant, being ignorant of its deleterious effect, continued to have the prescription refilled and take the drug for 14 months, whereby she was seriously injured. Held, that the complaint was defective on special demurrer and uncertain in failing to inform defendant of the particular act of negligence charged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Physicians and Surgeons, Cent. Dig. §§ 34–48; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

3. Appeal and Error (§ 959*)—Discretion of Trial Court.

While ordinarily the trial court should be liberal in allowing amendments of the complaint, the appellate court can only reverse for refusing such amendments where there is a manifest abuse of discretion in rendering final judgment on demurrer without leave to amend.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3825–3833; Dec. Dig. § 959.*]

4. Pleading (§ 225*)—Amendment After Demurrer—Complaint.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 472, providing that a pleading may be amended once as of course before answer or demurrer or after demurrer and before trial thereon, and that where a demurrer to the complaint is overruled and no answer is filed, the court may, upon just terms, allow an answer to be filed, plaintiff does not have a positive right to amend his complaint after a demurrer thereto has been sustained, an amendment being by grace.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 575–582; Dec. Dig. § 225.*]

5. Pleading (§ 225*)—Amendment After Demurrer—Abuse of Discretion.

The third amended complaint in an action against a physician for damages for malpractice in negligently giving a prescription for a certain drug claimed to have injured plaintiff was defective on special demurrer for not showing whether the negligence was in improperly prescribing the drug for the disease, or in prescribing it to be taken in an improper manner, or in improper quantities, or at improper times. Held, that the court's refusal to permit an amendment upon sustaining a special demurrer to the third amended complaint on those grounds was not an abuse of discretion.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by Florence Billesbach and another against A. S. Larkey. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

W. J. Donovan and Robert L. McKee, for appellants. Chickering & Gregory and Snook & Church, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a judgment given against them in the court below. A demurrer to the third amended complaint was sustained, and thereupon the judgment was rendered, leave to amend further being refused. The decision depends on the sufficiency of the complaint in the particulars pointed out by the demurrer.

The complaint alleges that the defendant is a physician and was employed by plaintiffs on December 22, 1907, to cure the plaintiff, Florence, of a malady from which she was then suffering. In the course of his professional duties toward her he gave her a written prescription for the taking of a drug known as heroin, a derivative of morphine or opium. It is alleged that he "carelessly and negligently" did this, but there is no fact alleged tending to show wherein the prescription was improperly or carelessly given in the first instance. The only negligent act set forth is that after she had been taking this drug for some two months, getting the prescription refilled at a drug store, as needed, the druggist refused to refill it again without special authority from the defendant, and that thereupon the defendant carelessly, unskillfully and negligently instructed said druggist to refill said prescription for her whenever she wanted it, without bothering the defendant each time, and that he did not revoke said instruction for more than a year thereafter, and that the defendant, being ignorant of the deleterious effect of the drug, continued to get the prescription refilled and to take said drug for 14 months thereafter, whereby she was made sick and weak and was seriously injured in body and mind. The complaint is diffuse, irrelevant matters are stated, and other unconnected acts of negligence alleged, but the foregoing is the only matter that can be considered as actionable.

The defendant in his brief has argued at great length the proposition that the action is barred by the statute of limitations. It is said that it was upon this ground that the court below sustained the demurrer.

[1] There were, however, several other causes of demurrer assigned. If we find the ruling justifiable on any of the other grounds the judgment must be affirmed. We cannot take notice of the supposed reasons of the court below and we are not confined to those reasons in considering the rights of the parties upon the appeal. The defendant also claims that the other grounds of demurrer are well taken.

[2] The tenth cause of demurrer is that the complaint is uncertain in many particulars specifically stated, among which is that it cannot be determined therefrom whether the heroin was negligently and improperly prescribed for the malady, or whether it was properly prescribed for the malady, but was directed by the prescription to be taken in an improper manner, or in improper quantities, or with improper frequency. The complaint is clearly defective in these particulars. It does not give, or attempt to state, the contents or substance of the prescription. It does not allege how often or in what quantities the drug was to be taken, nor how often or in what quantities it was taken. It does not aver that heroin was not adapted to the cure or alleviation of the disease from which plaintiff, Florence, was suffering. According to the complaint, the cause of the alleged injury was the continued taking of heroin, after the instruction of the defendant to the druggist to refill the prescription as often as she asked to have it done. This instruction was given in February, 1908. But the only allegation with respect to the taking is that said Florence thereafter "did continue to order and did order large quantities of heroin up to about the 23d day of April, 1909, which was taken and administered to her, the said Florence Billesbach, in accordance with the notification, instructions and open prescription given by said defendant to said druggist." This means that the heroin was taken by her in accordance with the original prescription. The fact that she ordered large quantities could not harm her if she did not take it. As she took it only in accordance with the prescription, the question of the carelessness or lack of skill of the defendant would depend wholly on whether he ordered it taken too often, or in too large quantities, or directed or knowingly or negligently permitted her to continue its use as prescribed for too long a period. Upon each of these propositions the complaint is silent. There is no allegation that he failed to warn her or inform her of the nature of the drug, or of the danger of continuing its use too long. It is alleged, by way of recital only, that she was ignorant of the drug and its harmful effects, but there is no averment that it was in fact harmful. It is one thing to give medicine in an improper manner, another thing to give it too often, another thing to give it in too large quantities, and still another to direct or permit its use to be too long continued. The proof which would meet one of these charges might be essentially different from that necessary to meet another. The defendant had a right to demand that the plaintiffs inform him which of these acts constituted the negligence charged against him. Admitting that the injury was caused by the conduct of the plaintiff in continuing the use of the heroin from February, 1908, to April, 1909, and that the defendant should have instructed her not to do so, it is nevertheless true that the injury may have arisen from the quantity being too large, or from too frequent repetitions of the dose, and the complaint contains no information as to which is intended to be proven. If it is claimed that the taking of the drug for 14 months in the smallest quantity, and at long intervals is necessarily injurious, the complaint should have alleged the fact. It does not aver that the defendant did not instruct her not to continue its use so long, or inform her that the long-continued use of the drug was likely to be injurious. It is only by giving a liberal construction in favor of the plaintiffs to the language of the pleading that we can say that it alleges that the injury to the plaintiff, Florence, was caused by using the drug for too long a time. The allegations as to the cause are vague and general. While the pleading might be sufficient to withstand a general demurrer, we cannot regard it as sufficient to inform the defendant of the particular act of negligence charged against him, when the objection is taken by a special demurrer pointing out the uncertainty.

[3] Ordinarily the trial court should be liberal in allowing amendments where the defect in the complaint is one of form only. This, however, is a matter which is almost entirely within the discretion of that court, and this court can reverse the case only when there is a manifest abuse of discretion in giving final judgment on demurrer without leave to amend.

[4] The plaintiff does not have a positive right to amend his pleading after a demurrer has been sustained to it. His leave to amend afterward is always of grace, not of right. Code Civ. Proc. § 472.

[5] In the present case the final pleading of the plaintiffs was the third amended complaint. It was, therefore, their fourth attempt to state a cause of action. It cannot be commended as a model, after all this effort and amendment. The refusal of leave to amend was not an abuse of discretion. The complaint being defective in this particular, and the demurrer having been properly sustained for that reason, it is unnecessary to consider the question of the statute of limitations.

The judgment is affirmed.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of John J. O'Gorman, deceased. From a decree of final distribution, the heirs at law and next akin of decedent appeal. Affirmed.

J. A. Kennedy and John J. McDonald, for appellants. P. V. Ross and Emil Pohli, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by three heirs at law and next of kin of John J. O'Gorman, deceased, they being his second cousins, from a decree of final distribution of his estate.

[1] Said deceased died testate on October 3, 1906, his will, evidently drawn by a layman, having been executed the day before his death. The question presented by this appeal is one of construction of such will, which was as follows:

"San Francisco, Oct. 2, 1906.

"I hereby make this my last Will and Testament and declare all previous wills or assignments of interest null and void. I hereby bequeath and bequest all my interest in and to my interest in the Estate of Thomas O'Gorman deceased. To be distributed as follows unto Edward O'Sullivan Two hundred and Fifty ($250) Dollars; To Mrs. Dora Singer widow, the sum of $250.00. To Mrs. Kate Cummings the sum of $250.00. To Mrs. Mary Wirtz a married woman the sum of $250.00. To Mrs. A. Klinner a married woman the sum of $250.00. To Mrs. Catherine La Grave, widow the sum of $250.00. To James O'Connor the sum of $250.00 due to him for money advanced to me, Unto Bernard P. La Grave, the rest and residue of my interest in the Estate of Thomas O'Gorman, deceased, for money previous advanced to me by said Bernard P. La Grave, in the sum of $500.

At the time of making this will and at the time of his death, the only property owned by deceased was such interest as he owned in two lots of land known as lots 7 and 15 of block 96, Central Park Homestead Association, San Francisco, which at the time of the death of his father, Thomas O'Gorman, in the year 1873, were community property of such father and his wife, Anne O'Gorman, who survived her husband. Said Thomas O'Gorman had died testate, devising these Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes lots, which constituted his whole estate, in undivided shares to his said wife, his daughter Kate O'Gorman, and deceased, John J. O'Gorman, the latter's share being one-sixth. The administration of the estate of said Thomas O'Gorman, the father, had not been completed at the time of the death of this deceased.

At the time of the making of the will of this deceased, the following events had occurred: The mother, Anne O'Gorman, had died intestate, leaving no estate except such interest as she had in these lots, and no probate proceedings had been instituted in the matter of her estate. The daughter Kate had married one James R. Burke, had conveyed all her interest in the estate of her father to her husband, and had died. Said Burke had subsequently died testate, giving all his estate, which consisted entirely of such interest in said lots as he had acquired from his wife, to deceased, John J. O'Gorman. Administration of his estate had not been completed. Another daughter, Anne O'Gorman, who was not devised any interest in these lots by the father, Thomas O'Gorman, and who survived her mother, subsequently died, leaving no estate except such interest in said lots as she succeeded to as heir of her mother (which was subsequent to the death of John J. O'Gorman, distributed in the matter of the estate of her mother, to her successor in interest, Mary C. O'Kelly, and which is in no way involved here). At the time of the making of the will, deceased, John J. O'Gorman, knew all of the facts above stated. It thus appears that at the time of the making of the will deceased was the owner not only of such interest in the lots as he acquired by the will of his father, Thomas O'Gorman, but also of such interest therein as he took under the will of James R. Burke, and such interest as he succeeded to as heir of his mother, and was the owner of no other property.

The claim of appellants is that the will must be construed as disposing only of such interest in said lots as he took under the will of his father, viz.: a one-sixth interest therein, and that as to the residue of his interest in said property, the parts to which he had succeeded as devisee of Burke and as heir of his mother, he must be held to have died intestate, and that, consequently, such residue should be distributed to them as the heirs at law of deceased.

The court below concluded that the will of deceased disposed of all his interest in the lots, both that acquired under his father's will and the interests acquired by him as devisee of Burke and heir of his mother. The lots having been sold subsequent to the death of deceased by order of the probate court in the administration of the estate of the father, for $5,175, the residue of the estate of the father, amounting to $4,129.06, was distributed as follows: To the estate of this deceased, $344.09; to the estate of Anne O'Gorman, the mother, $2,408.61, and to the estate of Burke, $1,376.26. The distributable estate of the mother, consisting entirely of her portion of the proceeds of the sale of such lots, was distributed in the matter of her estate, $1,059.66 to the estate of this deceased, and $1,059.66 to Mary C. O'Kelly, successor in interest of the daughter, Anne. The distributable estate of Burke, consisting entirely of his portion of the proceeds of the sale of such lots, and amounting to $1,168.06, was distributed in the matter of his estate to the estate of this deceased. These accessions made the value of the estate of deceased, consisting entirely of proceeds of the sale of such lots $2,571.81, and the residue for distribution, after payment of expenses of administration, etc., $1,876.42. This amount was distributed by the lower court to the seven legatees under the will of deceased, in equal shares, in payment of their respective legacies and on account of the interest due thereon.

We entertain no doubt as to the correctness of the conclusion of the learned judge of the lower court to the effect that the will must be construed as disposing of all the interest of deceased in such lots. Appellants rely upon certain well-known rules of construction, such as, that the intention of the testator is to be ascertained from the will itself, that parol evidence is not admissible to modify, change, or vary the expressed intent (Estate of Young, 123 Cal. 337, 55 Pac. 1011), and that the words of a will are to be taken in their ordinary grammatical sense, unless a clear intention to use them in another sense can be collected, and which other can be ascertained. Section 1324, Civ. Code. But these rules do not preclude the conclusion reached by the lower court.

The word "estate" is used in various senses, one of its most common uses being to denote and describe in the most general manner the property composing the assets of a decedent. The words "all my interest in the estate of Thomas O'Gorman, deceased," may very well mean "all the interest that I have in the particular property that is being administered on as the estate of Thomas O'Gorman, deceased, however acquired." There is nothing in the words used to necessarily limit the interest intended to be disposed of to any particular portion of the whole interest of the testator in such property. The words are "all my interest." Taking into view the circumstances under which the will was made, it seems certain that this was the sense in which the words were used in the will before us; in other words that the testator intended by the language used to dispose of all his then interest in the property left by Thomas O'Gorman. The administration of the property left by Thomas O'Gorman was still pending, and no distribution thereof had been had. The testator was the owner of certain undivided interests in said property, comprising nearly the whole thereof, acquired in part directly under the terms of the will of said Thomas and in part from others who succeeded at the death of Thomas to such interests. These undivided interests in this particular property constituted the whole of the property of the testator. What more natural under such circumstances than that he should describe all his property by the use of the language contained in this will? And what other meaning can reasonably be given to such language in view of the circumstances set forth?

[2] It is well settled that the presumption is that a testator intended to dispose of all his property by his will (O'Connor v. Murphy, 147 Cal. 153, 81 Pac. 406), and "that a construction of a will favorable to testacy will always obtain when the language used reasonably admits of such construction" (Estate of Dunphy, 147 Cal. 99, 81 Pac. 315. See, also, Estate of Heywood, 148 Cal. 188, 82 Pac. 755; Estate of Heberle, 153 Cal. 277, 95 Pac. 41). "Constructions which lead to intestacy, total or partial, are not favored; and therefore, such an interpretation should, if reasonably possible, be placed upon the provisions of the will as will prevent that result." Le Breton v. Cook, 107 Cal. 416, 40 Pac. 552. This presumption appears peculiarly applicable here. It is inconceivable that this testator making this instrument which he called his last will, intended that the same should be operative only as to about one-sixth of the property of which he knew himself to be the owner, and intended that he should die intestate as to the remaining five-sixths of his property, especially when he had no nearer relative or next of kin than second cousins. No such construction is required by the language of this will. We think it clear, in the light of all the circumstances existing and known to the testator at the time of the making of the will, that the language used shows an intent on his part to dispose by his will of all his then interest in the real property left by Thomas O'Gorman, deceased.

The decree of final distribution is affirmed.

CARR v. STERN et al. (Civ. 845.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 8, 1911.)

1. Appeal and Error (§§ 396, 373*)—Notice of Appeal—Undertaking—Necessity.

The service of notice of appeal on respondent's attorneys and the filing by appellant of an undertaking for costs on appeal are essential to the perfection of an appeal under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 940, 941, authorizing appeals and providing for service of notice of appeal and the filing of an undertaking.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2099, 2001; Dec. Dig. §§ 396, 373.*]

2. Appeal and Error (§ 417*)—Manner of Perfecting Appeal—Statutory Provisions.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 953a, 953b, 953c, authorizing an appeal by filing a notice of intention and request that a transcript be made up and the reporter to transcribe a report of the proceedings, etc., an appeal from an order denying a change of venue is perfected without requiring the reporter to transcribe the proceedings, where the record consists of the pleadings and affidavits committed in the first instance to longhand writing and without embracing in the notice a request that a transcript of the testimony be made up and prepared, where such record was made up and approved by the judge and appears in the record.

3. Appeal and Error (§ 937*)—Record—Presumptions.

The court on appeal may, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, assume, from the fact that the judge's approval of the transcript is made to appear in the record, that the clerk gave the attorneys notice of the filing of the transcript, and that within a time specified the same would be presented to the judge for approval.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3788–3794; Dec. Dig. § 937.*]

4. Appeal and Error (§ 373*)—Manner of Taking Appeal—Undertaking.

An appeal taken under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 953a, 953b, 953c, is perfected without the filing by appellant of an undertaking on appeal for costs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2001–2004; Dec. Dig. § 373.*]

5. Appeal and Error (§ 2*)—Statutes Authorizing Appeals—Construction.

Statutes in aid of appeals are liberally construed and applied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error Cent. Dig. §§ 3–7; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

6. Venue (§ 68*)—Change of Venue—Convenience of Witnesses—Opposing Affidavits.

A statement, in an affidavit by a party in opposition to a motion for a change of place of trial for the convenience of witnesses, that witnesses named are necessary and material for the party, is a mere conclusion of law and cannot be considered in opposition to the affidavits for the change.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. § 121; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

7. Venue (§ 68*)—Change of Venue—Convenience of Witnesses—Opposing Affidavits.

An allegation, in an affidavit of a party in opposition to a motion for a change of place of trial for the convenience of witnesses, that the party expects to disprove the statements contained in the affidavit of the adverse party alleging the infliction by the party of injuries to the adverse party through negligence, and to prove that the accident was caused by the negligence of the adverse party, is a mere conclusion of the party and cannot be considered on the merits of the application.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. § 121; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

8. EVIDENCE (§ 477*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—NONEXPERT WITNESSES—PERSONAL INJURIES.

The opinion of a nonexpert witness on the physical condition of a person who has sustained injury is not admissible, unless the injury is such that its nature, extent, and effect will be obvious to the common mind, and the apparent condition of an injured person may not be the real condition, and testimony thereof by a nonexpert on the essential effect of appearances has very little, if any, tendency to disclose that the person injured was not injured as he claims to have been.

9. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 706*)—NEGLIGENT USE OF STREET—EVIDENCE.

In an action for injuries to a traveler on a street struck by an automobile negligently operated by defendant's chauffeur, evidence of the skill of the chauffeur and of the care with which he ordinarily drove automobiles is inadmissible; the issue being whether at the time of the accident he was negligent, and whether such negligence proximately caused the accident.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1518; Dec. Dig. § 706.*]

10. VENUE (§ 70*)—CHANGE OF PLACE OF TRIAL—CONVENIENCE OF WITNESSES—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to show that a change of place of trial of an action was demanded for convenience of material witnesses.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. §§ 122-126; Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

11. VENUE (§ 52*)—CHANGE OF PLACE OF TRIAL—PROMOTION OF JUSTICE.

Where the material witnesses for plaintiff cannot under Code Civ. Proc. § 1899, be compelled to attend as witnesses at the trial of an action if tried in the county where pending, but can be compelled to attend if the place of trial is changed to another county, and such witnesses are the only material witnesses as disclosed on the hearing of an application for a change of place of trial, the ends of justice will be promoted by a change, and it is error to refuse to change the place of trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. §§ 76, 77; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

12. VENUE (§ 72*)—CHANGE OF PLACE OF TRIAL—PRIMA FACIE RIGHTS.

A defendant, in an action for negligently injuring plaintiff, has a prima facie right to have the action tried in the county in which he resides, and the burden of showing that the convenience of witnesses will be subserved and the ends of justice promoted by a change of the place of trial is on plaintiff asking for a change.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. § 127; Dec. Dig. § 72.*]

13. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 965*)—CHANGE OF PLACE OF TRIAL—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Though the refusal or granting of a change of place of trial on the ground of convenience of witnesses and the promotion of justice rests in the discretion of the trial court, where no reason appears against a change, the order refusing a change will be reviewed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3836; Dec. Dig. § 965.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by Theron F. Carr against Abraham Stern and others. From an order denying an application of plaintiff for a change of the place of trial, he appeals. Reversed.

S. W. Charles, Fredrick Schneider, and Willard, Swart, Ferrell & McGovern, for appellant. Henry Ach, for respondents.

HART, J. This is an appeal from an order denying plaintiff's application for a change of the place of trial of this action. The action was brought to recover the sum of $25,060 for personal injuries alleged by the complaint to have been inflicted upon plaintiff through the carelessness and negligence of defendants. According to the averments of the complaint, on the morning of the 9th day of July, 1909, the plaintiff, while riding a bicycle on and over a certain highway in the city of Palo Alto, in Santa Clara county, the automobile of defendants, driven by their chauffeur behind and to the rear of plaintiff, ran down the latter, "thereby mashing the sciatic nerve in plaintiff's left leg and mashing the muscles and flesh of plaintiff's left hip, and rupturing him, the said plaintiff, and inflicting upon him injuries both external and internal." The complaint was filed originally in the superior court in and for the county of San Mateo; but, as disclosed during the course of the oral argument, was, on motion of defendants, removed to the city and county of San Francisco on the ground and a showing that they were residents of said city and county at the time of the commencement of the action. Section 395, Code Civ. Proc.; Schilling v. Buhne, 139 Cal. 611, 613, 73 Pac. 431. The motion, the denial of which is the cause of the present appeal, was based upon the ground of the convenience of witnesses and the promotion of the ends of justice. Section 397, subd. 3, Code Civ. Proc. A preliminary objection is, however, made by counsel for the respondents to a review of the record before us for the alleged reason that the appeal is futile under either the old or the new method of taking appeals in civil cases.

It does not appear that the notice of appeal was served on the defendants or their attorneys, or that an undertaking on appeal "to the effect that the appellant will pay all damages and costs which may be awarded against him on appeal" was filed. Sections 940 and 941, Code Civ. Proc. Hence it is contended that the appeal, if sought to be taken under the older system, is abortive.

On the other hand, it is insisted that, if appellant intended to take his appeal under the new or alternative method, he has not succeeded, because of an omission to comply with the provisions of sections 953a, 953b, and 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure in the preparation of the record to be used on appeal.

The first-mentioned of the foregoing sections provides that, where a vanquished party intends to take an appeal from any judgment or order, he must file a notice with the clerk of the court of such intention and therein request that a transcript of the testimony, instructions, rulings of the court, etc., be made up and prepared, and that thereupon the court shall require the stenographic reporter to transcribe fully and completely a phonographic report of all the proceedings had at the trial.

Section 953b provides for the execution and filing of an undertaking at the time said notice is filed, in an amount to be fixed by the clerk, by which the party giving such notice shall undertake and agree to pay the clerk the cost of preparing the transcript.

The last-mentioned section makes it the duty of the clerk to transmit said record, within 10 days after the preparation of the same in the manner prescribed by the two preceding sections, to the clerk of the court to which the appeal is taken.

[1] As a matter of fact, neither method of taking appeals in civil actions was strictly pursued by the appellant. As seen, the notice of appeal was not served on the defendants or their attorneys, nor did the appellant file an undertaking as indemnity for the costs on appeal. These prerequisites were indispensably essential to the perfection of an appeal before the adoption of the new or alternative method.

Nor does the notice contain a request that a transcript of the proceedings be made up and prepared by the clerk; neither was there filed an undertaking by which the appellant undertook and agreed to pay to the clerk the cost of preparing said transcript.

[2] But, with all these omissions in the preparation of the record, we perceive no substantial legal reason why we should not review it and so determine the merits of the controversy which it presents on the present appeal.

We think it is clear, and we shall assume, that the appellant sought to take this appeal under the alternative method, and, so viewing the appeal, it is to be observed that there was practically no necessity for the reporter to transcribe the proceedings, for the record on the motion which is the foundation for this appeal consists wholly of the pleadings and affidavits which were already, or in the first instance, committed to longhand writing, and it was therefore not necessary that they should be "transcribed." As to the omission to embrace in the notice a request that a transcript of the testimony offered or taken and evidence offered or received be made up and prepared, the reply is that such record was made up, was approved by the judge, and as so prepared and approved is now before us.

[3] We may assume, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, from the fact that the judge's approval of the transcript is made to appear in the record, that the clerk gave "the attorneys appearing in said cause notice that said transcript has been filed, and that within five days after the receipt of said notice the same will be presented to the judge for approval."

[4] As to the matter of the requirement of a bond for costs on appeal, we have only to refer to the case of Estate of McPhee, 154 Cal. 385, 392, 97 Pac. 878, 881, to show that that requirement of the statute, since the adoption of the new method of taking appeals, is regarded as a nonessential. The court in that case says: "Nor is there any merit in the point that the appeal should be dismissed for failure of appellant to file an undertaking on appeal for costs. The act under which this appeal is taken does not require the filing of any such bond. It was a matter solely for the Legislature to determine whether it would require such a bond to be given, and it has dispensed with it." To the same effect is Mitchell v. California, etc., S. S. Co., 154 Cal. 731, 733, 99 Pac. 202.

It is not provided by section 953b, as it is by section 940 of the Code with reference to the undertaking on appeal required by the last-mentioned section, that the appeal is ineffectual unless the undertaking referred to by said section 953b is filed. Indeed, by the terms of section 941c of said Code, the appeal is fully perfected upon following the provisions of section 941b, which requires no notice to the adverse party and no undertaking of any character. As is said in Mitchell v. California, etc., S. S. Co., supra: "When, upon examining the transcript, it is found that it shows a notice of appeal properly filed, which is sufficient ipso facto under the new and alternative method to perfect the appeal, the court will look no further, but will treat a failure to serve the notice or give a cost bond, or an error in attempting to do so, which might have been fatal to the appeal under the old method, as a matter of no legal consequence."

[5] In the same case it is said that "all statutes making provisions in aid of appeals are to be liberally construed and applied." The record here is duly authenticated by the trial judge and certified by the clerk of the court below, and contains all the evidence and proceedings upon which the order appealed from was made. As before stated, we know of no sound reason why we should not review the merits of the controversy.

As to the merits, we think that it is very evident that the trial court abused its discretion in disallowing the motion for the change of the place of trial to San Mateo county.

The plaintiff, by his affidavit, deposes that he has 16 witnesses, who reside in San Mateo county, and by whom he can prove certain stated facts material to the issues made by the complaint; that the residences of all said witnesses, with the exception of that of Charles M. and Ida M. Carr, are located in the city of Palo Alto, a distance of 6 miles from Redwood City, the county seat of San Mateo county, and are situated a distance of more than 32 miles from the city and county of San Francisco and a distance of 16 miles from San Jose, the seat of the county of Santa Clara; that Charles M. and Ida M. Carr reside within a distance of 6 miles from said Redwood City and more than 30 miles from the city and county of San Francisco. It will not be necessary to detail here the testimony which plaintiff alleges that the witnesses named in his affidavit will give at the trial. It will be sufficient to say generally that some of them, so the affidavit affirms, will testify to the circumstances by which the accident resulting in the injury to plaintiff happened; others will testify to the physical condition of the plaintiff following the accident and as the result thereof; certain witnesses will give testimony with respect to the condition and width of the highway on which the accident occurred; and the physicians will testify as to the nature of the injuries received by the plaintiff and the effect of such injuries upon him.

Plaintiff further deposes that all the male witnesses whom he has named and whose testimony will be material to his case are professional and business men whose professional and business duties require their personal attention, and that it would cause each and all of plaintiff's witnesses great inconvenience to attend said trial in the city of San Francisco, "owing to the distance to be traveled as above set forth, and owing to the crowded condition of the trial calendar" of the department of the superior court of said city and county to which this cause has been assigned, as well as of the crowded condition of the calendars of other departments of said court in which jury cases are tried; that thus the attendance of said witnesses in San Francisco for several days would be necessitated; that "were said trial held in said Redwood City, San Mateo county, none of said witnesses would suffer inconvenience, as all of said witnesses reside within a radius of six miles from said Redwood City, and the trial calendar of said superior court of Redwood City is not crowded, and said case can easily be set for trial for some definite day and time not far distant."

The counter affidavit filed by the defendants sets forth that they have some 29 witnesses, all residing in the city of San Francisco, by certain of whom they expect "to disprove the statements of the plaintiff as contained in his affidavit," etc., and "that the accident was caused by the negligence of said plaintiff, and without any negligence on the part of said chauffeur of defendants"; that they expect to and will prove by Elise Stern "that she called at the house of the plaintiff and can testify as to his apparent condition previous to the time the doctor arrived, and that plaintiff was not injured as badly as he claims to have been"; that they expect to and will prove by Abraham Stern "that he is the owner of the automobile driven by William Swain, which is alleged to have run over the said plaintiff; that said Swain had been in his employ some seven months previous to that time and was a careful, experienced, and efficient driver," and that others by whom Swain had been previously employed had told him previous to his employment of said Swain that the latter was "a capable, efficient, and careful chauffeur"; that all the other witnesses named in their affidavit are personally acquainted with Swain, have driven with him, and have been driven by him in automobiles at different times, and "know from their own personal observations as well as from the general reputation of said William Swain" that he is a careful, capable, and efficient driver, and was more than ordinarily careful in driving an automobile.

The foregoing represents a synoptical statement of the evidence produced by both sides on the motion.

It is plainly apparent, from a mere reading of the affidavit of the defendants, that there is therein practically no showing whatsoever in opposition to the showing made by plaintiff in support of his motion.

In the first place, it is to be said that the defendants, in their affidavit, do not in any manner deny the materiality of the plaintiff's witnesses, nor that their convenience requires a change of the place of trial, nor that the ends of justice would be promoted, nor is it alleged that it would cause delay in the trial, nor is the good faith of the plaintiff impugned therein. Thompson v. Brandt, 98 Cal. 156, 32 Pac. 890. Nor is there any denial in the statement in plaintiff's affidavit that the calendar of the department of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco in which this action is pending, as well as the calendars of other departments of said court that try jury cases, are so crowded and congested as to render it uncertain when this cause may be called for trial, and that by reason thereof and under the rules of that court plaintiff's witnesses might be compelled to remain in San Francisco for several days before the cause, although set for a day certain, can be reached, so as to be in immediate readiness to answer when called to testify.

In the second place, there is not contained in the affidavit of the defendants a single fact which would have any material bearing upon the questions of fact tendered by the pleadings.

[6, 7] The statement that the witnesses are "necessary and material for the defendants" involves, manifestly, a conclusion of law, while the allegation that the defendants expect to disprove the statements contained in plaintiff's affidavit and prove that the accident was caused by the negligence of plaintiff himself, and not by or through the negligence of the chauffeur of defendants, is a mere conclusion of the affiant.

[8] The statement that Elise Stern will testify that she called at the home of plaintiff after the accident and saw the latter, and "can testify as to his apparent condition previous to the time the doctor arrived, and that plaintiff was not injured as badly as he claims to have been," is the only averment that the counter affidavit contains which even approximates the statement of a material fact, and, as that statement would involve the expression of the opinion of a witness who is not shown to be an expert on the subject to which it would relate, it is most probable that the court would refuse to receive it as evidence of the plaintiff's condition or the character or extent of the injuries he sustained. We do not say that a lay witness is not competent to give testimony descriptive of the physical condition of a person who has been injured and thus disabled; but testimony relating to such matters coming from such a source must be of some material fact or facts from which the jury or the court may infer what the condition of the person was. In other words, the opinion of a nonexpert upon such subjects would hardly be admissible unless the injury is such as that its nature, extent, and effect would be obvious to the common mind —such injuries, for instance, as the loss of a limb or some other member of the body. The apparent condition of an injured or a disabled person might not be the real condition, and testimony thereof by one not an expert on the essential effect of appearances would have very little, if any, tendency to disclose that the injured party "was not injured as badly as he claims to have been."

[9] The testimony which defendants allege that they can produce of the skill and efficiency of Swain, who was the driver of the car when the accident occurred, as a chauffeur, and of the care with which he ordinarily drives and has driven automobiles is obviously immaterial. The question at issue is, not whether the chauffeur as such was capable, careful, and proficient in the driving of automobiles, and ordinarily careful when engaged in that work, but whether, on the occasion of the accident, he was negligent, and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the accident and the consequent injuries to plaintiff. "Whether the act of the defendant is actionable negligence," says Deering on Negligence, § 407, "is to be determined by the character of the act, or omission, and not by the defendant's character for care and caution. Evidence that the defendant is a careful, cautious, and prudent man is inadmissible to negative his want of ordinary care. Upon the question of the negligence of the engineer at the time of the collision of two trains, evidence of the general incapacity of the engineer, or of his being subject to fits, is immaterial. The reputation of the driver of a horse and carriage is inadmissible in an action by the owner of another horse killed by a collision therewith."

The same rule is laid down in 2 Thompson on Negligence, p. 804, where it is said: "Evidence that the plaintiff was commonly a careful and skillful driver is not admissible to show that when the accident occurred he was in the exercise of due care. The principle is that the question whether a person was at a given time in the exercise of due care is to be resolved upon evidence of what took place at the time, and not upon evidence of the general character he may sustain."

The principle as thus enunciated is approved and applied in the cases of Towle v. Pac. Imp. Co., 98 Cal. 342, 344, 33 Pac. 207, and Cunningham v. L. A. Ry. Co., 115 Cal. 561, 47 Pac. 452. In the last-named case, where the plaintiff was injured by collision with one of defendant's cars, the court, among other things, said: "The question was: Did the servant exercise ordinary care to avoid the injury? If he did, the plaintiff could not recover, no matter how wanting the servant may have been in general competency; while, if he did not exercise such care, plaintiff was entitled to recover, even if the servant possessed the utmost degree of efficiency and skill in the performance of his duty. The sole question, therefore, was: What was the conduct of the servant at the time? And this was to be unembarrassed by any consideration of his general qualifications."

[10] It will thus be observed that, as stated, the defendants have not only wholly failed to deny or contradict the showing made by plaintiff for a change of the place of trial to the county of San Mateo, but have themselves made absolutely no showing that they have necessary and material witnesses who reside in the city of San Francisco or whose convenience would be subserved by retaining the trial in said city. There is therefore no question of a conflict of evidence presented which would, under the rule as to a substantial conflict in the evidence, render the decision of the trial court conclusive upon a reviewing court. The evidence is, indeed, all one way, and very clearly discloses that the convenience of all the witnesses whose testimony, it is shown, will be material to the issues of fact, and who are, therefore, necessary witnesses, would be subserved by an order changing the place of trial as requested.

[11] That the ends of justice would be promoted by a change of the venue as prayed for by plaintiff is irresistibly inferable from the fact, which is made to appear by his affidavit and which is not denied, that all the witnesses named by plaintiff and whose testimony would be material to the issues of fact reside at a distance of over 30 miles from the city and county of San Francisco, and could not, therefore, be compelled to attend as witnesses at the trial, if held in said city and county (section 1899, Code Civ. Proc.; Naylor v. Adams, 15 Cal. App. 353, 114 Pac. 997); whereas, they reside within such distance of the county seat of the county to which it is requested that the trial of the action be removed as that they would be subject to the coercive power of the court, and consequently their attendance as witnesses at the trial compulsory. It is true, of course, that, should the trial be had in San Francisco, their depositions could be taken, if their personal attendance could not be secured, still it is manifestly always more satisfactory and desirable, in jury cases in particular, to present the testimony first hand to those who must determine the questions of fact, than to submit the same through depositions, which, in practical effect, is always a sort of hearsay way of adducing the proofs.

[12] In holding that the trial court erred in denying plaintiff's motion upon the record as made, we are not unmindful of the rule that the defendants have a prima facie right to have actions of this character tried in the superior court of the county in which they reside (Schilling v. Buhne, 139 Cal. 611, 613, 73 Pac. 431), and that the burden of showing that the convenience of witnesses will be subserved and the ends of justice promoted in the change is on the plaintiff.

[13] Likewise we are not insensible of the rule that the matter of refusing or granting a motion for a change of venue rests in the discretion of the court to which the application is made; but, as is declared in Thompson v. Brandt, 98 Cal. 155, 156, 32 Pac. 890, where no reason appears on the record against the change, the order refusing to grant such a motion cannot be justified upon the ground that granting such orders is in the discretion of the court.

For the reasons stated herein, the order is reversed.

PEOPLE v. SLIGER. (Cr. 212.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 603*)—CONTINUANCE—AFFIDAVITS.

On a motion for continuance of a prosecution for absence of witnesses, the affidavit showed the materiality of the facts to which the witnesses would testify, and that on April 26th the case was set for trial on June 12th, and on May 16th a subpœna was issued for the witnesses; that the witnesses resided in the county, but were temporarily absent from their homes, "so affiant is informed and believes." Affiant also averred that he "has exercised every diligence in his power to obtain the presence of said witnesses at this trial at this time." Held, that there was no error in denying the application, as there was nothing to show that the witnesses were not within the county and their location at all times known to affiant, nor due diligence to obtain the attendance of the witnesses; the allegation as to the exercise of diligence being a mere conclusion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

J. Horace Sliger was convicted of an offense under Pen. Code, § 288, and appeals. Affirmed.

Willedd Andrews and Tom L. Johnston, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, J. Defendant was convicted upon an information charging him with the offense defined in section 288 of the Penal Code. He appeals from the judgment and an order of the court denying his motion for a new trial.

A general demurrer was interposed to the information and by the court overruled. While the ruling is assigned as error, counsel for appellant state that they "submit it without argument or comment." We are unable to perceive wherein the court erred in the ruling. The information is in the language of the statute and free from the defects pointed out by this court in the case of People v. Grinnell, 9 Cal. App. 239, 98 Pac. 681, where the information purported to charge a like offense.

When the case was called for trial, on June 12, 1911, defendant moved for a continuance on the ground of the absence of material witnesses, and in support of his motion caused to be read and filed his own affidavit. The motion was denied, and this ruling is assigned as error. The affidavit is vague, indefinite, and not such as would justify this court in holding that there was any abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court in denying the application. While it sufficiently shows the materiality of the facts to which it was averred the absent witnesses would testify, it is wholly lacking, in that it fails to show any facts necessary to enable the court to determine that any effort, other than causing a subpœna to be issued and placed in the hands of the sheriff, had been made on the part of the defendant to procure their presence at the trial (People v. Ah Yute, 53 Cal. 613; People v. Wade, 118 Cal. 672, 50 Pac. 841), or that there was reasonable ground for believing the presence of the witnesses or their testimony could be procured at a future day. People v. Winters, 125 Cal. 325, 57 Pac. 1067. It is true the affidavit avers "that affiant has exercised every diligence in his power to obtain the presence of said witnesses at this trial at this time," but that is a mere conclusion. People v. Francis, 38 Cal. 187. Affiant should have stated the reasons upon which he based his belief. On April 26th an order was made setting the case for trial on June 12th, and the only effort, so far as shown by the affidavit, made by the defendant to procure the presence of the witnesses in court at the time when the case was set for trial was that, on May 16th, he caused the clerk of the court to issue a subpœna for the witnesses. It does not appear that the defendant personally caused any inquiry to be made as to the whereabouts of the witnesses, or made any effort whatsoever to locate them, or to enable the officer whose duty it was to serve the subpœna to find the witnesses, who, as shown by the affidavit, "reside in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, but are temporarily absent from their homes, and will be for a few weeks, so affiant is informed and believes." There is absolutely nothing in the affidavit that negatives the fact that the witnesses were in the county of Los Angeles, and that their location was at all times known to affiant. It appears that on the 6th day of June the sheriff returned the subpœna, certifying "that after diligent search and careful inquiry, I have been unable to find [the witnesses] named in within subpœna in the county of Los Angeles." When the subpœna was placed in his hands for service is not made to appear. For aught that is disclosed by the affidavit, he may have received the subpœna on or about the date of its return. From the 6th day of June, when the subpœna was returned, until June 12th, the date of the trial, no effort appears to have been made to ascertain the whereabouts of the witnesses, if it was in fact unknown, or to require their presence in court. While it is made to appear that the witnesses were absent from their homes on the date of the trial, such averment is not inconsistent with the fact that they may have been at their homes at all times prior to such date. There was no error in the ruling of the court denying the application.

BLAIR v. BROWNSTONE OIL & REFINING CO. (Civ. 1,030.)

1. Contracts (§ 354*)—Action—Findings—Construction.

In an action on a contract, by which plaintiff agreed to shut off the water, drill and complete for defendant its oil well to a certain depth, the court found that when plaintiff commenced work he knew that the casing in the well was broken, and that one of his employés carelessly handled the tools, whereby they were stuck in the well and could not be removed; that plaintiff demanded that defendant furnish him with a wire cable, which, under the contract, it was defendant's duty to do, and defendant failed to furnish such cable; and that "plaintiff's inability to shut off the water and remove the tools was due to the failure to furnish the cable, and to the careless and negligent manner in which said employé of plaintiff handled the tools in working said oil well." Held, that this implied a finding that the cable was a necessary tool which defendant was to furnish under the contract, and which, if supplied, would have enabled plaintiff to perform the contract, so that defendant could not complain of the failure, and the finding would not support a judgment for defendant.

2. Corporations (§ 432*) — Contracts — "Cancellation" — Authority of Secretary.

Evidence that plaintiff, who had entered into a written contract with a corporation, told the secretary that he wanted the contract destroyed, and the secretary had said that it was not there, but that he could get it, and plaintiff told him to do so, and destroy the signatures and send it to him, which the secretary did, did not show a valid "cancellation," within Civ. Code, § 1699; there being nothing to show any authority on the part of the secretary to release plaintiff.

Action by Charles H. Blair against the Brownstone Oil & Refining Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

William H. Fuller and Chas. E. Putnam, for appellant. Geo. E. Farrand and Leonard B. Slosson, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The complaint alleged that on October 3, 1908, plaintiff and defendant entered into a contract, whereby the former, for a stipulated price per foot of depth, agreed to shut off the water, drill, construct, and complete for defendant its oil well No. 5 from its then depth to a depth of 1,500 feet, By the express terms of this agreement, defendant was to "furnish the derrick and all machinery, tools, cordage, lights, water, fuel, casing, casing-shoes, tubing and rods necessary for the deepening and drilling of the said well No. 5 from its present depth to a depth of 1,500 feet." It was further alleged that, on October 6th, plaintiff, pursuant to the terms of the contract, commenced work on the well, and he and his employés performed 79 days labor in the prosecution of the work; that plaintiff was unable to deepen the well and complete the contract in accordance with the terms thereof; by reason of the fact that defendant failed and refused to furnish plaintiff with the necessary and proper tools for the performance of the work; that, had said defendant furnished the necessary and proper tools in accordance with the agreement, and which it had neglected and refused to furnish plaintiff, the latter could and would have been able to have drilled the well to the depth of 1,500 feet, as required by the contract; that, by reason of defendant's said failure to furnish the necessary tools, plaintiff was prevented from performing the work, to his damage in the sum of $1,912.65. There is set out in the complaint a second cause of action, whereby plaintiff sues for the value of the work, labor, services, and materials furnished defendant, the value of which is alleged to be the sum of $1,912.65. The answer denied the making of the contract, as well as other material allegations of the complaint. It also, as a separate defense, alleged an oral understanding and agreement with plaintiff, whereby said plaintiff and defendant settled and compromised all claims and demands then existing between plaintiff and defendant, by reason of any work theretofore done and performed by plaintiff for defendant. Judgment went for defendant, from which, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

[1] The court found the contract was made as alleged, and that on October 6th plaintiff entered upon the performance of the covenants on his part therein contained, and expended the sum of $1,263.65 in the performance of 79 days labor thereon. It also found that at the time when plaintiff commenced the work the casing in the well was broken and parted, which fact was known to plaintiff; that one of plaintiff's employés handled the tools in a careless and unskilled manner, by reason whereof the tools were stuck in the well and could not be removed therefrom; that on January 18, 1909, plaintiff demanded that defendant furnish him with a wire cable to be used in the performance of the work, all other necessary tools having been supplied by defendant, but which cable defendant failed to furnish; and the court finds that "plaintiff's inability to shut off the water from said well and remove the tools therefrom was due to the failure of said defendant corporation to furnish plaintiff with said cable, and to the careless and negligent manner in which said employé of plaintiff used and handled tools in working in said oil well." By implication, at least, the court finds that this cable was a proper and necessary tool to be used in doing the work called for by the contract. Had it been supplied, plaintiff could have performed the contract. Thus construed, it appears that plaintiff was prevented from performing his contract by reason of defendant's default in furnishing proper and necessary tools. Defendant was not in a position to complain of plaintiff's negligence, so long as it was in default in supplying him with the proper tools with which to perform his contract. Any interpretation of the finding, other than that here given, would render the finding wholly inconsistent with reference to the facts found. The finding does not support the judgment.

[2] The court further found that plaintiff and defendant, in September, 1909, compromised and settled between themselves all claims or demands of any nature existing between them, and did then and there each release the other from any and all claims and demands growing out of the work done by plaintiff under the said contract, and by mutual agreement canceled and destroyed said contract, together with another made between said parties upon the same date. Defendant was a corporation, and the contract made was in writing. It appears from the evidence that several months after plaintiff had ceased work upon the well he called upon the secretary of the defendant company, and, according to the testimony of the secretary, said that he did not want the contract in question, nor another contract made for the drilling of a new well, brought up against him upon a claim for damages. The secretary said: "What do you want me to do?" to which plaintiff replied: "I want the contract destroyed." The secretary then said: "The contract is not here, Mr. Blair; I have not got it, but I can get it." "Well," said the plaintiff, "you can destroy the signatures and send it to me." Later the secretary sent one copy of the contract, which was executed in duplicate, to plaintiff with the name of the president of the company cut off. Section 1699 of the Civil Code provides: "The destruction or cancellation of a written contract, or of the signatures of the parties liable thereon, with intent to extinguish the obligation thereof, extinguishes it as to all of the parties consenting to the act." Under the provisions of this section, the evidence quoted would justify the finding complained of, were it not for the fact that the record is silent, in that it fails to show any authority, either express or implied, on the part of the secretary to thus release plaintiff from his obligations under the terms of the contract, if he had in fact, without defendant's fault, failed to comply with the terms thereof. The act of the secretary was wholly without any authority on the part of the board of directors of the corporation. Nor is it made to appear from the record that the corporation had any notice of the secretary's act or proposed rescission of the contract, and no facts are shown from which a ratification thereof would follow. The effect of the attempted rescission and release was to make a new contract between the parties, and, conceding that plaintiff made the proposal, it does not appear that the corporation ever assented thereto.

For the reasons given, the judgment and order are reversed.

1. False Pretenses (§ 30*)—Indictment—Existence of Mechanic's Lien.

A mechanic's lien attaches as the material is furnished or labor performed, although, if a notice be not recorded within the time specified in the statute, the lien is not enforceable; and therefore an information for obtaining money under false pretenses, which shows that liens to the amount of $6,000 existed against certain property at the date of the representations that the property was free from liens, and that subsequently, and within the statutory time, notices of lien were recorded, sufficiently avers the falsity of the representations.

Judson Moxley was convicted of obtaining money by false pretenses, and appeals. Affirmed.

Lafayette Gill and C. L. McFarland, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

ALLEN, P. J., Defendant and appellant was informed against for the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses, and convicted. He appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

[1] The principal question presented upon this appeal relates to the sufficiency of the information. There is no question raised as to the sufficiency of this information, other than that involved in a determination of the question as to when the liens of mechanics and materialmen attach. It is the contention of appellant that, notwithstanding materialmen and mechanics had provided material and labor in the construction of houses upon the described premises, which had been unliquidated, still liens do not attach until notice of lien is filed in the recorder's office; and the information in this case clearly showing that such notices of lien were not filed until after the representations were made and the money procured upon a reliance thereon, the statements and representations, therefore, were not shown to be untrue, and that no offense was charged. We are of opinion that appellant's contention cannot be sustained. The lien of a mechanic or materialman is a constitutional right, and attaches to the structure as the material is furnished or labor performed. The statutory procedure enacted for the enforcement of such right has reference only to the remedy. It is true that, if notices of lien be not recorded within the specified time, the lien is not enforceable. The lien, however, created by the Constitution, cannot be made subordinate to or dependent upon any legislative act. It exists with all of its force at all times between the furnishing of the material or the performing of the labor and the expiration of the time within which such notices of lien may be filed. With reference to these liens, the only power the Legislature possesses is to obey the mandate of the Constitution by providing means for the enforcement of the liens existing by virtue of the provisions of the Constitution. The information, then, in this case, showing that under the Constitution liens to the amount of $6,000 existed against this property at the date of the representations, and that subsequently, and within the statutory time, notices of lien were filed and recorded, sufficiently avers the falsity of the representations. As we have before said, conceding the falsity of the representations, no other question is raised as to the sufficiency of the information, either in the matters relating to their making, or in declaring their falsity.

Appellant cites Hughes v. Hoover, 3 Cal. App. 150, 84 Pac. 681, wherein this court, in speaking of a mechanic's lien, says that the constitutional right of lien becomes perfected and enforceable only when a written claim of lien containing certain facts properly verified is filed. A reading of that case will disclose that the word "perfected" was inadvertently used in the sentence above quoted, for, just preceding that, the opinion states that the right of lien is given by the Constitution, and that section 1190, Code of Civil Procedure, which declares that liens cease to exist under certain circumstances, may be ignored, as the same exceeds legislative power; that the only effect to be given such section is to interpret it as a statute of limitations which provides the time within which an action may be brought for the enforcement of a right. It is true that, in Mills v. La Verne Land Co., 97 Cal. 254, 32 Pac. 169, 33 Am. St. Rep. 168, our Supreme Court has said that the lien is perfected by filing proper notice; that until such notice is filed it is a mere inchoate right personal to the individual; and that until so perfected it has no tangible existence as property. In Spinney v. Griffith, 98 Cal. 151, 32 Pac. 974, it is said that until notice of lien is filed the naked right is without form, and void. The later case, however, of Hampton v. Christensen, 148 Cal. 737, 84 Pac. 203, we regard as setting at rest the question as to when the lien is perfected, and when the right accrues, and by what authority it exists. The Supreme Court there says, with reference to statutory enactments: "Every provision of the laws which the Legislature may enact must be subordinate to and in consonance with this constitutional provision." And whether we say that the right of lien is personal, or inchoate, or otherwise, it is, nevertheless, a vested, constitutionally guaranteed and existing right, and when, as in this case, the constitutional right is rendered enforceable through the observance of statutory provisions, it is an enforceable right. The allegations with reference to the filing of the notices of lien were only necessary as showing that an injury was caused by the false statements, as this injury could only be worked out through a compliance with the statutory provisions requisite to the enforcement of the right of lien.

[2] There is nothing in the point made by appellant that Mr. Ryon relied upon the representations of attorneys or trust companies; the whole record disclosing that he relied upon the representations of defendant, Moxley. If the false pretenses are among the means by which defendant obtained the money, he has committed the crime, the same as though no other influence combined therewith. People v. Weir, 120 Cal. 279, 52 Pac. 656.

[3] There is no merit in the contention of appellant that the court erred in refusing to give to the jury the instruction marked "Defendant's Instruction No. 6." The language used therein could only be construed as an instruction that the jury were required to find that Ryon relied upon all of the pretenses made by the defendant. This is not necessary. It is sufficient if he relied upon some of the material misrepresentations.

[4] We see no error in the court instructing the jury that "a person is presumed to do that which he voluntarily and willfully does in fact do, and that he must be presumed to intend the natural, probable, and usual consequences of his own act." We think this is a correct statement of the law, either in this or any other character of criminal prosecution.

An examination of the record discloses to us no prejudicial error, and the judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

Code Civ. Proc. § 939, subd. 1, provides that, where the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the decision is a matter to which inquiry is pointed, the appeal must be taken within 60 days after the entry of judgment. Held that, since an appeal from a judgment may be taken within six months after judgment entered, the effect of a failure to take such an appeal within 60 days is only to prevent a consideration of the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the decision.

Action by the Union Lumber Company against the Sunset Road Oil Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. L. Foster, for appellant. W. W. Kaye (Alfred Siemon, of counsel), for respondent.

JAMES, J. Appeal is taken from a judgment entered against defendant and from an order denying a new trial. It is suggested in the brief of respondent that both appeals should be dismissed; that from the judgment because the notice of appeal was served and filed more than 60 days after the entry of the judgment; and that from the order denying the motion for a new trial because the notice of appeal was filed more than 60 days after such order was entered.

[1] The appeal from the judgment was taken within six months after the judgment was entered, and this appeal, therefore, was in time, except that in a consideration thereof the question as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the decision cannot be inquired into. Subdivision 1 of section 939, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that, where the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the decision is a matter to which inquiry is pointed, the appeal must be taken within 60 days after the entry of the judgment. However, the appeal from the judgment is effectual for the purpose of securing to appellant a review of any alleged errors of law occurring at the trial.

[2] In subdivision 3 of section 939, Code of Civil Procedure, it is provided that an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial, in order to be regular, must be taken within 60 days after the order is made and entered in the minutes of the court, or filed with the clerk. It appears without question that the notice of appeal from the order was in this case served and filed more than 60 days after the order was entered, and, if the provisions of section 939, above referred to, were the only ones to be considered in determining the sufficiency of this appeal, then it should be held that this appeal was taken too late. But our Supreme Court in the case of Foss v. Johnstone, Jr., et al., 158 Cal. 119, 110 Pac. 294, has held that the provisions of section 941b, dealing with the alternative method of appeal, are also applicable to an appeal assumed to be taken under the older method, and that, in order that the time within which an appeal must be taken shall be made to commence to run, appellant must be given notice of the entry of the judgment or order. In that case it is further held that the burden is upon the respondent, in the absence of any evidence of the fact furnished by the record, to show that a notice of entry of the judgment or order has been given, and the time thereof. In this case there is nothing in the record from which we can determine whether any notice was ever given of the order of the court denying the appellant's motion for a new trial. For that reason, the appeal must be treated as having been regularly taken, and in time.

Appellant's counsel in his brief argues only questions touching the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain certain of the findings made by the trial court, and, as an error of law, assigns the ruling of the trial judge denying defendant's motion for judgment of nonsuit, which was made at the conclusion of the introduction of testimony on behalf of plaintiff. In the second cause of action set out in plaintiff's complaint, as to which only appellant urges the objections we have referred to, it is alleged that the defendant on a day certain was indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $1,945.98 as a balance of an account for lumber sold and delivered by the plaintiff to defendant. In its answer defendant alleged that lumber was purchased by it from plaintiff for which it agreed to pay the reasonable value, and then, by express allegation, admitted an indebtedness on that account in the sum of $1,587.40.

[3] The trial court by its findings determined that lumber had been sold and delivered to defendant of the reasonable value of $2,358.58, and that defendant was entitled to a credit in the sum of $496.49, leaving a balance, found to be due at the commencement of the action, of the sum of $1,862.09, for which amount judgment was given.

The contention of appellant that there was no evidence warranting the court in finding that the reasonable value of the lumber sold was the sum of $2,358.58 cannot be sustained. From the evidence set out in the bill of exceptions, it appears that the custom of dealing between plaintiff and defendant was that which is usual and ordinary between a vendor of merchandise and his vendee; that from time to time lumber was ordered by defendant from plaintiff and statements were thereupon rendered by the plaintiff to defendant showing the prices at which the lumber was charged. If not appearing by express statement to that effect, it does appear by every reasonable inference to be drawn from all of the testimony that the understanding between plaintiff and defendant was that the merchandise furnished was to be charged for at the current market price, which, in other words, would be the reasonable value thereof, and that the account against defendant was made up upon that basis. There was ample evidence showing that the defendant by written invoices and statements of account made up from the books of the lumber company was furnished with the information as to what the indebtedness claimed to be owing by it to the plaintiff was at all times, and that, so far as the value of the lumber may be concerned, no question was raised as to its price. We feel well satisfied that the findings as made by the trial judge are amply sustained by the evidence. What has been said upon the question of the objections urged to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings applies equally in answer to the contention of appellant that the court erred in denying its motion for a judgment of nonsuit. Appellant complains that the motion should have been granted for the same reason that it questions the sufficiency of the findings in the particulars above referred to.

The appeals taken in this case appear to be without merit, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

Code, § 869, declares that the reporter's transcript of the proceedings in a case shall be regarded as prima facie correct, and section 686 provides that the accused shall be entitled to be confronted with the witnesses against him, except that where the charge has been preliminarily examined before a committing magistrate, and the testimony taken down in the presence of the accused, with opportunity to cross-examine, the deposition of such witness may be read where it is shown that he is dead, insane, or cannot with due diligence be found within the state. Held that, where a witness was examined by means of an interpreter at a preliminary examination, the statute did not require the witness' deposition to show that the interpreter was sworn, though it was the duty of the magistrate to do so; the deposition being taken as prima facie correct.

3. Criminal Law (§ 543*)—Evidence at Preliminary Examination—Absence of Witness—Diligence.

A blacksmith, who had testified at a preliminary examination before leaving the county and going to San Francisco to work, gave his address to the district attorney, who did not think it necessary to detain him, believing he was not a "wandering character." Within a month after the witness left, a sheriff went to San Francisco a few days before the trial with a subpœna to serve on the witness, and went to the address given, found it to be a blacksmith shop, but failed to find the witness. He visited several blacksmith shops in the city in search of the witness, but without avail. He made previous inquiry in the county where the witness had been living before he went to San Francisco, and subpœnas were sent to neighboring counties shortly before the trial and were returned not found, as was also a subpœna given to the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco. Held, that sufficient diligence was shown to authorize the admission of the witness' deposition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1233, 1236; Dec. Dig. § 543.*]

4. Criminal Law (§ 543*)—Appeal—Matters of Discretion—Review.

Whether a sufficient foundation was laid for the admission of the deposition of a witness taken at a preliminary examination was a matter largely within the discretion of the trial court.

5. Criminal Law (§ 1186*)—Appeal—Instruction—Reasonable Doubt—Failure to Define—Prejudice.

Proposed amendment No. 26 to the Constitution (St. 1911, p. 1798) provides that no judgment shall be set aside or new trial granted in any criminal case for misdirection of the jury or for error as to any matter of pleading or procedure, unless the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of resulted in a miscarriage of justice. The court charged that, if accused in a prosecution for robbery offered an explanation of his possession of the stolen property, it was for the jury to say, under all the evidence, whether such explanation produced in their minds a reasonable doubt, and, if it did produce a reasonable doubt of accused's guilt, then he would be entitled to an acquittal; that a reasonable doubt need not result from the testimony affirmatively produced by accused, but might arise from and be founded on a weakness or defect in the testimony introduced by the prosecution; and that the presumption of innocence remained with accused until the end of the case and until his guilt was proven to a moral certainty and beyond all reasonable doubt. Held, that accused was not prejudiced by the refusal of an instruction defining reasonable doubt.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

A. B. Kelly was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

B. F. Fowler, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of robbery, and, upon judgment of conviction, was sentenced to 12 years in the Folsom prison. He appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

In his brief defendant presents but two objections to any of the proceedings had at the trial.

First. It is claimed that the deposition of the prosecuting witness, Grunitz, taken at the preliminary examination, was improperly read in evidence by the district attorney for the following reasons: (1) Because his testimony "was taken through an interpreter in a foreign language and was not taken in conformity with section 869 of the Penal Code"; (2) Because such diligence in securing the attendance of the witness, as is required by subdivision 3, § 686, of the Penal Code, was not shown.

It appeared that the deposition was taken before the magistrate through the official reporter, reduced to longhand, and filed with the clerk with the reporter's notes, and showed that the witness was duly sworn. It did not appear that either the reporter or the interpreter was sworn. The certificate of the reporter read as follows: "I hereby certify that the within transcript numbered from 1 to 15 both inclusive is a full, true and correct transcript of my shorthand notes, and a full, true and correct statement of all the testimony given and proceedings had upon the preliminary examination in the justice's court of No. 2 township, county of Merced, state of California, in the case entitled the People of the State of California vs. A. B. Kelly, on Friday, December 10, 1910, before J. J. Griffin, Justice of the Peace in and for No. 2 Township. [Signed] J. T. Conley, Shorthand Reporter." The transcript shows as follows: "Richard Grunitz. A witness on behalf of the People, after being duly sworn testified as follows. (Through the German Interpreter L. Wagner.)" Then follows the deposition. The transcript shows that Grunitz was duly sworn.

[1] It must be presumed that the official reporter had duly qualified by taking his official oath to faithfully discharge his duties. It was not necessary that he be sworn at the preliminary hearing.

[2] The question, then, is: Could the deposition be read without proof that the interpreter was sworn? The point was distinctly raised at the time the offer was made and later by motion to strike out. Section 869 of the Penal Code declares that the transcript of the reporter, "when written out in longhand writing, and certified as being a correct statement of such testimony and proceedings in the case, shall be prima facie a correct statement of such testimony and proceedings." Section 686 of the same Code provides that the defendant is entitled to be confronted with the witness against him, "except that where the charge has been preliminarily examined before a committing magistrate and the testimony taken down by question and answer in the presence of the defendant, who has, either in person or by counsel, cross-examined or had an opportunity to cross-examine the witness; * * * the deposition of such witness may be read, upon its being satisfactorily shown to the court that he is dead or insane or cannot with due diligence be found in the state." In People v. Lewandowski, 143 Cal. 574, 577, 578, 77 Pac. 467, 469, it was held that, under these statutes, the transcript in longhand of the shorthand notes, duly certified and filed, "is placed upon the footing of a deposition." Said the court: "Whether taken through an interpreter or not, it is in each case the original testimony of the witness, in the same sense and to the same extent as is the testimony of the witness present at the trial, given through the medium of an interpreter, his original testimony on the trial, and in the cases provided by law may be read in evidence as such." It thus appears that the deposition is "prima facie a correct statement of such testimony" and "may be read," where, after due diligence, the witness cannot be found in the state. The statute does not require it to be shown at the time the deposition is offered to be read that the intrepreter was sworn at the preliminary hearing. It was, of course, the duty of the magistrate to place him under oath the same as any other witness, but the burden of proving that he was not sworn was on the defendant. Nor does the statute require proof that the reporter was sworn before taking his notes of the testimony as a prerequisite to making the deposition "prima facie correct." Was due diligence shown?

[3] Before the deposition was offered, the district attorney submitted his proof of diligence in endeavoring to secure the personal attendance of the witness. It appeared that the witness had been working in the neighborhood on a ranch, and, it may be inferred from the testimony, as a blacksmith. The case was first tried on February 23 and 24, 1911, and the prosecuting witness testified at that trial. He was then working in the neighborhood. He informed the sheriff not long after, some time in the early part of March, that he was going to San Francisco to work, and gave the number of the place on Folsom street where he could be found. The district attorney knew that he was intending to go there, but he testified that he did not think it necessary to detain him, and believed he would have no trouble in finding him; that he was not a "wandering character." The sheriff went to San Francisco a few days before the trial, which began on April 10, 1911, taking with him a subpœna to serve upon the witness. He went to the number given by the witness, and found a shop, but did not find the witness. He visited several blacksmith shops in the city in search of the witness without avail. He made previous inquiry in Merced county where witness had been living but did not find him. Subpœnas were sent to neighboring counties shortly before the trial and were returned "not found," as was also a subpœna given to the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco. We cannot see what more could reasonably have been done to find the witness.

[4] Furthermore, the question whether a sufficient foundation has been laid is largely within the discretion of the trial court. People v. Lederer, 119 Pac. 949. It should be observed that witness Grunitz testified at the first trial and defendant introduced and read to the jury his testimony given at that trial. Just why the defendant made use of this testimony after having endeavored to prevent the reading of the testimony taken at the preliminary hearing is not apparent, unless it was to point out certain conflicting statements which in fact were not very material. In substance, the testimony on both occasions was the same.

[5] The only remaining error pointed out in the brief relates to the refusal of the court to give an instruction on reasonable doubt as formulated by defendant. It follows the stereotyped instruction on that subject, and concludes thus: "But if, upon such consideration, the minds of the jury are not firmly and abidingly satisfied of the defendant's guilt if the conscientious judgment of the jurors wavers and oscillates, then the doubt of the defendant's guilt is reasonable, and you should acquit." This instruction was refused because given elsewhere. The court gave several instructions on the subject of reasonable doubt, although not distinctly defining the terms; i. e., the court told the jury that "the prosecution must prove to you to a moral certainty and beyond all reasonable doubt that the defendant and no one else committed the offense," etc. Again: "It is not sufficient that the circumstances proved coincide, account for, and therefore render probable the theory sought to be established by the prosecution, but that they exclude to a moral certainty every other reasonable hypothesis than the single one of guilt, or the jury must find the defendant not guilty."

Again, in speaking of the recent possession of stolen property, the court told the jury: "If the defendant under such circumstances offers and produces an explanation of the possession of such property, it is for you to say under all the evidence whether or not such explanatory evidence produces in your minds a reasonable doubt, and, if such evidence does produce in your minds a reasonable doubt of his guilt, then he is entitled to an acquittal at your hands." The jury were also told a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt need not result from the testimony affirmatively produced at the trial by defendant—"it may arise as well from and be founded upon a weakness or defect in the testimony introduced on the part of the prosecution"—also that the presumption of innocence remains with defendant "until the end of the case and until his guilt is proven to a moral certainty and beyond all reasonable doubt." In several other instructions the necessity for establishing facts, indicating guilt, to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt is emphasized. We are aware that trial courts usually and very properly round out their instructions on this subject by a definition of reasonable doubt. But are these terms themselves so shrouded in doubt that it is prejudicial error to refuse to define their meaning? Are the rights of a defendant prejudiced by leaving the jury to determine what the court means when they are told that they must find the facts "to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt"? Section 1096 of the Penal Code provides as follows: "A defendant in a criminal case is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is proved, and, in cases of a reasonable doubt whether his guilt is satisfactorily shown, he is entitled to an acquittal. In People v. Cohn, 76 Cal. 386, 18 Pac. 410, where the court was by the defendant asked, but refused, to instruct the jury that "the burden is upon the prosecution of establishing every element of the crime of which the defendant may be convicted, beyond a reasonable doubt," and also "omitted to give any other instruction of a like character, or stating or bearing upon the rule as to reasonable doubt in criminal cases," the Supreme Court reversed the judgment. But we have found no case holding, where the rule stated in the Penal Code is given and is emphasized in many instructions and in various forms of expression, that it would be so prejudicial as to demand a reversal, for the court to refuse to give a specific definition of reasonable doubt. We find ourselves unwilling to so hold. It will be noticed that, in the concluding paragraph of the instruction refused, the jury are told that, "if their conscientious judgment wavers and oscillates, then the doubt of the defendant's guilt is reasonable," and they should acquit. To make this statement free from objection, it should be made to apply to the judgment of the jury in their final conclusion, and not to direct them to acquit whenever they find their minds wavering or oscillating. Jurors often change their minds many times during the course of their deliberations. They may have reasonable doubts during their deliberations. Their judgment may waver and oscillate at such times. It is when they finally decide that the jurors' minds must be "abidingly satisfied of the defendant's guilt." However this may be, the rule by which we are to be guided is now that "no judgment shall be set aside or a new trial granted in any criminal case on the ground of misdirecting the jury or the improper admission or rejection of evidence, or for error as to any matter of pleading or procedure, unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice." Proposed Amendment No. 26 of the Constitution, recently adopted (St. 1911, p. 1798). It is not necessary to indicate the full scope and meaning of this amendment, or how far it will work a reformation in the examination of cases brought up for review by appeal. We are clearly of the opinion that we cannot say that the error now being considered, conceding it to have been error, "has resulted in a miscarriage of justice."

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

EHAT v. SCHEIDT. (Civ. 878.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 10, 1911.)

1. Evidence (§ 471*)—Opinion Evidence—Conclusion and Opinion of Witness.

Evidence by the plaintiff in a civil action for assault, descriptive of the nature of his injuries, was not objectionable as an opinion and conclusion of the witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2149–2185; Dec. Dig. § 471.*]

2. Appeal and Error (§ 1050*)—Harmless Error—Admission of Evidence.

Error, if any, in permitting plaintiff in a civil action for assault to himself describe his injuries, is harmless, where the physicians who attended him gave a detailed and technical description of such injuries.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4153–4160; Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

3. Assault and Battery (§ 32*)—Civil Action—Evidence—Damages.

In a civil action for assault, where it appeared that plaintiff was an ordinary laborer, and was thereafter unable to do the amount of labor he could perform before the injuries, evidence as to the wages he was receiving up to the time he was injured was admissible as bearing upon the question of damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. § 44; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

4. Assault and Battery (§ 27*)—Civil Action—Admission of Evidence.

In a civil action for damages from an assault, evidence by a witness, who accompanied plaintiff to a doctor after he was injured, as to what the doctor did in preparing to treat plaintiff and to reset his dislocated shoulder, was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. §§ 37–39; Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

5. Appeal and Error (§ 690*)—Questions Presented for Review—Admission of Evidence—Record.

Where there is nothing in the record showing that a witness for defendant did not testify in the English language in the police court, nor showing that the witness offered to rebut him did not understand the Italian language, an objection by defendant that the testimony offered in rebuttal to impeach his witness, who testified through an interpreter, was in the nature of hearsay, will not be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2897–2908; Dec. Dig. § 690.*]

6. Assault and Battery (§ 30*)—Civil Action—Admission of Evidence—Aggression.

Where the theory of the defendant in a civil action for assault was that he and another met the plaintiff by mere accident, and the plaintiff's theory was that it was the defendant's purpose to meet him and get a settlement of plaintiff's indebtedness from him, the evidence of a witness for the defendant that he did not know the purpose of the defendant in going to the place where plaintiff worked was admissible on the issue of aggression.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. § 40; Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

7. Appeal and Error (§ 1048*)—Harmless Error—Rulings as to Questions to Witness.

In a civil action for assault, where aggression was in issue, and where a witness for defendant testified that he did not know the purpose of defendant in going to the place where plaintiff worked, the permission of rebuttal evidence tending to impeach the witness by reason of inconsistent statements at a former trial held harmless error.

8. Witnesses (§ 388*) — Impeachment — Foundation.

Where a witness was asked if he did not, in the presence of certain persons at a former trial, make a statement referred to, stated that he remembered the occasion referred to, that he was present, and then gave testimony, there is a sufficient foundation for an impeachment of the witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1233–1242; Dec. Dig. § 388.*]

9. Witnesses (§ 389*)—Impeachment—Inconsistent Statements.

Where a witness, in answer to a question as to whether he made an alleged inconsistent statement in a previous trial, answered, "I don't remember," it is proper to show by way of impeachment that he did, in fact, make the alleged statement at the time mentioned.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1243–1245; Dec. Dig. § 389.*]

10. Witnesses (§ 388*) — Impeachment — Foundation.

Where defendant in a civil action for assault was asked by counsel for plaintiff whether he testified at a trial in the police court that he knocked the plaintiff to the ground, and replied that he had no recollection of so testifying at the occasion mentioned, there was sufficient foundation for the admission of testimony of the police judge and plaintiff's attorney in the police court that defendant did so testify.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1233–1242; Dec. Dig. § 388.*]

11. Appeal and Error (§ 1008*) — Trial by Court — Credibility of Witnesses — Weight of Evidence.

In a trial by the court, it is the exclusive judge of the credibility of the witnesses, the weight, effect, and evidentiary value of the testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3955–3969; Dec. Dig. § 1008.*]

12. Assault and Battery (§ 35*)—Civil Action—Sufficiency of Evidence.

Evidence, in a civil action for assault and battery, held sufficient to support findings by the court that defendant willfully assaulted plaintiff and struck him and knocked him down and kicked him; that by the striking and beating plaintiff's head was bruised and swollen, his shoulder dislocated, his two ribs badly injured, and caused plaintiff to be sick and confined to bed immediately following the assault.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. § 51; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

13. Judgment (§ 256*)—Civil Prosecution—Judgment Supported by Findings.

Findings that defendant willfully assaulted the plaintiff and struck him and knocked him down and kicked him, bruising him, dislocating his shoulder, injuring two ribs, and causing him to be sick and confined to bed for about eight days, held to support a judgment for plaintiff in a civil action for damages from the assault.

14. ASSAULT AND BATTERY (§ 40*)—CIVIL ACTION—DAMAGES NOT EXCESSIVE.

Where plaintiff, a man 65 years of age, was willfully assaulted by defendant, and struck and knocked down and kicked, and was bruised and had his shoulder joint dislocated and two ribs injured, and in consequence of the assault was confined to bed eight days, incurred medical expense, and suffered an impairment in his earning capacity, a judgment for $500 was not excessive.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by C. J. Ehat against J. H. Scheidt. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank Kauke, for appellant. U. Grant Hayden, for respondent.

HART, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff to recover damages for personal injuries which the complaint alleges were inflicted upon him by the defendant. The action was tried by the court; a jury having been waived by the parties, and judgment was awarded plaintiff in the sum of $500. This appeal is by the defendant from the judgment and the order denying him a new trial.

The points urged by the appellant against the validity of the judgment and the order are that certain rulings of the court respecting certain evidence were illegal and harmful to the defendant, and that certain findings are not supported by the evidence.

The facts are these: The plaintiff, a man 65 years of age at the time he received the injuries complained of, was indebted to the defendant in the sum of $16.75. On the 19th day of July, 1909, the plaintiff was working as a laborer in a box yard in the city of Fresno. In the forenoon of that day, the defendant, accompanied by an Italian by the name of Toschi, went to the box yard, where they met plaintiff. The defendant spoke to the plaintiff about the indebtedness referred to, asking him for payment of the same. An acrimonious discussion ensued, which was finally followed by a fight, with the result, according to the story of plaintiff, that the latter was severely beaten and seriously injured by the defendant. The plaintiff, after the trouble ceased, was assisted by a man named Arieta to a physician's office, where his bruises and injuries were given medical attention.

[1] 1. The plaintiff was permitted, over an objection interposed by defendant, to describe the nature of his injuries. The specific reason urged against that testimony was that it could amount to no more than an opinion and a conclusion of the witness. We see no force in the objection. The plaintiff, while not an expert on such matters, was competent to give in a general way an approximately correct description of the bruises and other injuries received by him.

[2] Besides, the doctor who waited on him, dressing and otherwise attending to his various wounds, gave to the court a detailed and technical description of plaintiff's injuries, and the testimony of plaintiff on that subject harmonized, generally, with that of the physician. The testimony objected to could not therefore have in any event prejudiced the rights of the defendant.

[3] Nor did the court err in allowing the plaintiff to state the wage rate he was receiving for his labor up to the time he was injured. The testimony disclosed that plaintiff earned his living as an ordinary laborer; that, on account of the injuries inflicted upon him by defendant, he was confined to his home for eight days, and has, since the trouble, according to his statement, been unable to do the amount of labor he was capable of performing prior to receiving the injuries. The earning capacity of the plaintiff prior to receiving the injuries complained of in the business which he had customarily followed was a proper element to be considered in the assessment of damages. Zibbell v. Southern Pac. Co. et al., 116 Pac. 513.

[4] The court did not err in allowing Arieta, who accompanied the plaintiff to the doctor's office, to state what transpired at said office after the arrival of plaintiff there. The witness merely described, as well as he knew how, what the doctor did in preparing to treat plaintiff and what he did in order to reset plaintiff's dislocated shoulder. The testimony, while practically without any force in any direction, tended, if anything, to corroborate the doctor as to the treatment to which it was necessary to subject the plaintiff for the injuries upon his body.

[5] The objection to the testimony offered in rebuttal by the plaintiff to impeach the witness, Toschi, who testified for the defense, cannot be sustained. It appears that the witness testified with respect to the circumstances of the trouble between the parties before the police court of the city of Fresno; the defendant having been in said court prosecuted upon a charge of battery growing out of said trouble. It appears that his testimony given at the trial of the case at bar varied in some particulars from that given by him at the trial in the police court. On his cross-examination by counsel for plaintiff in the present case, the witness' attention was called to the disparity between his former testimony and that given in this trial, and his reply as to whether he had made the former statements was, "I don't remember," or "I remember not saying that." Hayden, attorney for plaintiff, having been present at the trial in the police court, and also the police judge, took the witness stand in this action for plaintiff in rebuttal, for the purpose of testifying to the statements made by Toschi at the trial in the police court which it was claimed were inconsistent with his testimony in the trial of this case.

One of the objections urged here against the competency of Hayden and the police judge to testify in impeachment of Toschi is that the latter is an Italian, speaks the little English that he is capable of using imperfectly, and gave his testimony at the police court trial through an interpreter, and that Hayden and the police judge were therefore permitted to testify only to what the interpreter said that Toschi stated. In other words, it is contended that Hayden's testimony, as well as that of the police judge, in the present trial was hearsay. But the difficulty about this objection is that there is absolutely nothing in the record showing that Toschi did not testify in the English language in the police court. Nor is there any showing that Hayden and the police judge do not understand the Italian language. It does appear, however, that Toschi could speak to some extent in the English language, though imperfectly, for he declared in the present trial in English that he understood certain language (giving it in English) used by the plaintiff in addressing the defendant. In any event, as indicated, the record is not such as to make the objection here considered available to the appellant.

[6] But it is further objected that the matter to which the impeaching testimony was addressed was in its character collateral, and therefore not subject to impeachment.

The theory of the defense was that the defendant and Toschi went to the box yard for the purpose of looking after some boxes which had been left there by a neighbor of the defendant, and that the latter met the plaintiff on the occasion of the affray by mere accident. The plaintiff's theory at the present trial, as was presumably true at the trial in the police court, was that the real purpose of the defendant's visit to the box yard on that day was to meet the plaintiff, and secure from him a settlement of his indebtedness to defendant.

Toschi testified in the police court that he and the defendant went to the box yard together, but that he did not know the purpose for which the visit was made. At the trial of the case at bar he testified that he and the defendant visited the box yard for the purpose of looking for some "sweat boxes." On cross-examination at the trial of the present case, his attention having been first called to his testimony given in the police court, he declared that he did not remember having testified in the last-mentioned court that he did not know the purpose of the visit to the box yard, and the witness, Hayden, as well as the police judge, Briggs, were permitted, against the objection of the defendant, to testify in rebuttal at the trial of this case that Toschi did so testify in the police court.

While the particular purpose of the visit of the defendant and Toschi to the box yard would appear to be of little importance in its bearing upon the case as made by the pleadings, since there is no dispute that a fight took place between defendant and plaintiff and there is sufficient evidence to support the finding that the last named was the aggressor, still we are not prepared to say that the testimony offered for the discovery of such purpose was not material. As stated, the theory of the plaintiff seems to have been that the defendant went to the box yard for the express purpose of asking the former for a settlement of the trifling financial differences between them, and that the meeting, so far as defendant was concerned, was not a supervenient circumstance, as the testimony of Toschi and the defendant in the present trial would indicate. We think Toschi's testimony in the respect referred to was material and admissible, for whatever it might be worth, as bearing upon the question whether the defendant or the plaintiff was the aggressor in the affray which followed the meeting of the two men. The jury, or, as in this case, the judge, might, considering it with the other facts, infer from the circumstance that the meeting between the two men was purely accidental, and that the defendant broached the subject of plaintiff's indebtedness to him in a gentle frame of mind and that hostilities were initiated by the plaintiff, while, on the other hand, when considered in connection with the evidence of other facts, the circumstance that the meeting was deliberately planned or preconceived by defendant might afford some ground for the inference that the latter approached the plaintiff in a belligerent manner and started the fight.

[7] At any rate, we do not think the allowance of the testimony of Hayden and Briggs in impeachment of Toschi is of sufficient importance to justify a reversal on that ground alone.

[8] There is no merit in the contention that a proper foundation for the impeaching testimony was not laid. The witness was asked if he did not, in the presence of certain persons, in the trial in the police court, when giving his testimony, make the statement referred to. The witness stated that he remembered the occasion to which counsel referred, that he remembered that the persons named were present, and that he then gave testimony. This is all that the statute requires. "If the witness understood the circumstances of the time and place, the object of this section of the Code is satisfied." People v. Yee Foo, 4 Cal. App. 730, 89 Pac. 450.

[9] Nor did the answer, "I don't remember," given by Toschi to the question whether he had made the alleged inconsistent statement in the police court, render it improper to show, by way of impeachment, that he did in fact make such statement at the time mentioned. As is said in People v. Mar Gin Suie, 11 Cal. App. 42, 55, 103 Pac. 951, 958: "We think that the defendant was entitled as a matter of fairness to have it clearly appear whether the witness did or did not make the inconsistent statement and that he was not precluded under the rule from showing that the witness did make such inconsistent statement merely because he answered that he did not remember whether he had made it or not"—citing Greenleaf on Evidence (16th Ed.) § 42.

[10] It is also contended that the court erred to defendant's prejudice in allowing testimony impeaching certain statements made by the defendant himself, the ground of the objection to said testimony being that a proper foundation therefor had not been previously prepared.

The defendant was asked by counsel for plaintiff whether he testified at the trial in the police court that he knocked the plaintiff to the ground, to which he replied that he had no recollection of so testifying on the occasion mentioned. This was a sufficient foundation for the allowance of the testimony of the police judge and the witness Hayden that the defendant did testify or admit in the police court that in the encounter with plaintiff he knocked the latter to the ground.

Likewise a sufficient foundation was established for the admission of the testimony of the witness Hayden, by way of impeachment of defendant, that the latter stated under oath in the police court that he "beat the said C. J. Ehat or did him as well as he could, or words to that effect."

There are some other rulings on the evidence to which the defendant objected and excepted which are of no special importance, and therefore do not command special notice.

[11, 12] 2. The attack upon the findings is without substantial merit. The plaintiff testified that the defendant struck the first blow and that he thereupon retaliated by striking defendant; that the latter, a younger, larger, and heavier man than plaintiff, knocked him to the ground, beat him about the head, and kicked him in the ribs. The result of the beating thus administered to him was to cause his jaw to swell, his shoulder to be dislocated, two ribs to be fractured, and one of his ears to be injured. He was left in a dazed condition on the ground, and, as before shown, was assisted to the office of a physician by the witness Arieta. He further testified, as we have seen, that he was confined to his room for some eight days, and unable, by reason of the injuries so received, to perform the amount of labor that he was capable of performing prior to the trouble. Dr. Craycroft, who attended plaintiff, said that "at that time he had a dislocated shoulder joint, and a couple of fractured ribs and some contusions on the face. * * * I had to put him to bed for a few days on account of the ribs, not account of the shoulder." There was other testimony corroborative of plaintiff and the doctor relative to the general nature and seriousness of the injuries received by the former.

The defendant flatly contradicted plaintiff as to the origin of the difficulty leading to the fight, claiming that plaintiff struck the first blow, and that he merely returned the blows to defend himself. But the court was justified in finding that plaintiff was wantonly and without excuse beaten and injured by defendant from the testimony produced by plaintiff. Counsel for appellant in another connection says in his brief that, in order to find for plaintiff, the testimony of defendant and his witness, Toschi, must be disregarded. This is quite true, but we must assume that the court, being the exclusive judge of the credibility of the witnesses and the weight, effect and evidentiary value of the testimony, did regard the evidence produced by the defendant as unworthy of credence, and that, from its point of view, it found, in considering it, good and sufficient reasons for so regarding it.

There is, it is true, as counsel for the appellant asserts, no evidence which supports the finding that the injuries inflicted upon the plaintiff by the defendant caused the former "to receive a nervous shock," and it is also true that we have found no evidence which justifies the finding that plaintiff's head was "cut in several places." But those findings may be entirely eliminated and disregarded, and still the remaining findings, which are sufficiently justified and sustained by the evidence, fully and amply support the judgment.

The court found upon sufficient evidence that the defendant "did violently and willfully assault the plaintiff, and did then and there strike and bruise and knock plaintiff down and kick him"; that "said bruising, beating and kicking * * * did cause plaintiff's head to be bruised and swollen; * * * did cause plaintiff's left shoulder joint to be dislocated; did cause plaintiff's body to be bruised and two of plaintiff's ribs to be cracked, and, further, did cause plaintiff * * * to be sick to such an extent that he was confined to his bed for about eight days immediately following said beating."

[13] These findings, supported, as we have seen, by the evidence, are manifestly sufficient to uphold the judgment.

[14] 3. We cannot say that the amount of damages awarded to the plaintiff is excessive. It is very clear that plaintiff was so severely injured that he was unable for many weeks to pursue his usual employment at all and for many months his condition, as the result of his injuries, such as that he could not perform the same amount of work that he could formerly or prior to the difficulty with defendant. His earning power was therefore impaired, and this, as before stated, was, of course, an important item to be considered in estimating the damages—an item which, in the extent to which it should operate as a factor in the admeasurement of damages, must be left to the intelligence and the sense of justice of those who must decide the questions of fact. This item would manifestly include prospective loss in wages as well as loss in that respect already sustained. The expense—the doctor's fees, etc.—incurred by necessary attention during the period the plaintiff was disabled and ill is also an item to be considered, and, moreover, it was within the power of the court to add to the actual damages found, if warranted by the evidence in so doing, such exemplary damages as would represent a just punishment for the wantonness of the acts of the defendant resulting in the injuries complained of.

After a careful review of the record, we perceive no ground upon which interference with the judgment and the order could be justified, and they are therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

BERTONNEAU v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.

(Civ. 1,050.)

1. CONTRACTS (§ 2*)—LAWS GOVERNING.

Generally contracts are governed by the law of the place where they are made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 2, 41, 145; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 109*)—FREIGHT—LAWS GOVERNING.

Civ. Code, § 2200, which exempts carriers of specified valuables, etc., from liability in excess of $50, unless they have notice of the nature of the freight, etc., did not apply to a through shipment from another state over connecting lines; the place of performance of the contract, as affecting the applicability of laws, not being determined by the place of delivery, and the code provision not being applicable on the theory that it affects only the remedy.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon F. Moss, Judge.

Action by Louis L. Bertonneau against the Southern Pacific Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. McKinley, for appellant. Sidney J. Parsons, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff brought this action to recover the sum of $1,000, alleged to be the reasonable value of certain goods, wares, and merchandise which had been committed to the custody of defendant as a common carrier for transportation from the city of Spokane, Wash., to Pasadena, Cal. Judgment was in favor of plaintiff in accordance with the prayer of his complaint, from which judgment defendant has appealed. The appeal is to be considered upon the judgment roll, together with a bill of exceptions. The sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the decision of the court, and the failure of the trial court to find upon certain affirmative allegations contained in defendant's answer, are the only questions presented for review.

[1, 2] The plaintiff in his complaint alleged that the goods, wares, and merchandise were shipped from Spokane, Wash., on the 29th day of January, 1908, over the railway line of the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company and the railway line of the defendant, and that the plaintiff caused the freight to be prepaid upon said merchandise, and "that the defendant then and there agreed to deliver the said goods, wares, and merchandise safely to A. Bertonneau in the city of Pasadena, Cal." In allegations following these it was set out that the merchandise was shipped without any contract being made limiting the amount of damages in case the goods were lost or destroyed, and that the freight charges were fixed in accordance with this contract, and were prepaid at the time of shipment. None of these allegations of fact were denied but the defendant by its answer did deny the further allegations of plaintiff's complaint as to the loss of the goods and the amount of damage, and then in the answer the following affirmative allegation appeared: "Defendant, according to its information and belief, alleges that the goods mentioned in plaintiff's complaint were all contained in one package and consisted of gold, silver, platinum, precious stones, imitations thereof, pictures, glass, chinaware, statuary, silk, laces and plated ware, and that at the time of the receipt thereof this defendant had no notice of the nature of said freight, and no notice was given to this defendant or to the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company, or to any of the agents, servants, or employés of any of the carriers of said goods as to the nature of said freight."

We call attention here to the condition of the pleadings, by which it was admitted on the part of defendant that by the contract of shipment it agreed to transport the goods of plaintiff from the city of Spokane to the city of Pasadena. This admission results from the failure of defendant by its answer to deny any of the allegations of the complaint as to the making of the contract for carriage. The court made its findings as to the character of the goods shipped only in general terms, referring to them as goods, wares, merchandise, and household goods, although the evidence showed that they were goods of the character and kind described by defendant in its answer. By finding 6, however, it was determined that at the time of making the shipment defendant and its agents were informed of the class, kind, and nature of the goods contained in the package shipped; and in another finding it was stated that at the time of shipment it was made known to defendant, through the agents of the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company, that the value of the merchandise was more than $1,000.

Defendant claims the benefit of the provisions of section 2200 of the Civil Code of California, under which, if the allegations contained in paragraph 6 of defendant's answer are true as to the facts, plaintiff was not entitled to recover more than $50 for the loss of his merchandise. The provisions of the section referred to are as follows: "A common carrier of gold, silver, platina, or precious stones, or of imitation thereof, in a manufactured or unmanufactured state; of timepieces of any description; of negotiable paper or other valuable writing; of pictures, glass, or chinaware; of statuary, silk, or laces; or of plated ware of any kind, is not liable for more than fifty dollars upon the loss or injury of any one package of such articles, unless he has notice, upon his receipt thereof, by mark upon the package or otherwise, of the nature of the freight; nor is such carrier liable upon any package carried for more than the value of the articles named in the receipt or the bill of lading." Necessarily, assuming that the law of California is to be looked to to determine the liability of the carrier for the loss of freight intrusted to it for transportation, and if there is any evidence to sustain the finding of the trial court that defendant had notice of the kind and character of the goods shipped, the failure of the trial court to find specifically that the merchandise was of the kind described in section 2200 of the Civil Code would be immaterial. From a careful examination of the testimony as set out in the bill of exceptions, it must be concluded that the evidence was insufficient to justify the court in determining that defendant did so have notice of the kind and character of the goods committed to its charge. There is, then, directly presented the one question, and it is so admitted by counsel for both plaintiff and defendant, as to whether in determining the extent of the liability of defendant for the admitted loss of plaintiff's goods the statute of California is to be invoked, or whether the common-law liability assumed by a carrier of freight applies in this case in its fullest extent. It was stipulated between counsel that all of the law of the state of Washington, in which state the contract of shipment was made, might be taken notice of by the trial court and by this court, and it is also agreed that in the state of Washington there is in existence no statute by which any limitation is placed upon the common-law liability of a carrier. It must be admitted that the general rule affecting the determination of the liabilities of parties to a contract requires that the law of the place where the contract is made shall govern. This rule admits of some variation in practice, dependent sometimes upon the question as to where the contract is to be performed, and always subject to the intention of the parties as expressed or implied from their acts and conduct at the time of making the contract. "The law of the place where the contract is made governs in determining the liability of the carrier, unless the parties at the time of making it had some other law in view." Palmer v. Atchison, etc., R. R. Co., 101 Cal. 187, 35 Pac. 630. This case cites with approval, among other cases, that of Liverpool, etc., Steam Co. v. Phenix Insurance Co., 129 U. S. 397, 9 Sup. Ct. 469, 32 L. Ed. 788, in which the Supreme Court of the United States exhaustively reviews different decisions touching this question, and, after noting the conflict existing between various of the authorities, deduces a general rule as follows: "This review of the principal cases demonstrates that according to the great preponderance, if not the uniform concurrence, of authority, the general rule that the nature, the obligation, and the interpretation of a contract are to be governed by the law of the place where it is made, unless the parties at the time of making it have some other law in view, requires a contract of affreightment, made in one country between citizens or residents thereof, and the performance of which begins there, to be governed by the law of that country, unless the parties, when entering into the contract, clearly manifest a mutual intention that it shall be governed by the law of some other country." We cite, also, 2 Wharton on Conflict of Laws, § 471b; 1 Hutchinson on Carriers, § 201 et seq. Unless, then, some fact, circumstance, or condition appears affecting the contract for shipment as it was made in this case, which would entitle defendant to invoke the law of this state in limitation of the amount of recovery, it follows that the rights of the parties must be measured by the common-law rule.

Defendant insists that such a condition is shown by reason of the fact that performance of the contract was to be made on its part in the state of California. If we consider only the fact that the goods were to be delivered at Pasadena, Cal., as including all of the obligation denoted by the meaning of the word "performance," then undoubtedly the position of appellant is well taken. But attention has already been called to the condition of the pleadings where, by a failure of defendant to deny the making of the contract in the terms as alleged by plaintiff, it admitted that the service of transportation agreed to be performed by it was to commence at Spokane, Wash., and to continue until the goods had been delivered at Pasadena. The authorities hold that in such a case it cannot be said that performance shall be deemed only to have been made at the place where delivery is contracted for. Mr. Hutchinson in his work on Carriers, above cited, and at section 210, vol. 1, says: "On principle it would seem that the carrier's contract does not vary with each jurisdiction in which it may be partly performed, for the service rendered is single; the transportation performed and the liability assumed being the measure on the one side by which the compensation to be paid on the other side is determined. Whatever is done in intermediate states is a part of the single act of transportation from the place of departure to the place of destination in performance of an obligation assumed and undertaken in some one state, and which is indivisible. The obligations arising out of a contract can only be created by the laws of one state, and force and effect should be given them in conformity with the law of the state which created them. These obligations should not vary from time to time as goods pass from state to state. * * * Sec. 215. The state which creates the rights arising out of a particular contract having been ascertained, full force and effect should be given by sister states on the ground of comity to the foreign facts thus created, even though the same rights would not have been created by the law of the forum." In our opinion, therefore, the decisions holding that the law of the place where performance is due is the law which must govern in fixing the liabilities of the parties to a contract, have no application to the facts of this case.

But appellant advances a further contention. It is argued that, giving the rule of lex loci contractus full effect, and admitting its application to this case, that still the statute of California must govern, inasmuch as its provisions are provisions affecting the remedy to be pursued by the parties, and not a right arising out of the contract. It may be admitted that any statute which affects only the remedy is binding upon the forum administering such remedy, regardless of the law governing the same matters as it may exist in the country where the contract was made. But we do not agree with counsel in his contention that only the remedy is here affected. The statute, when it proposes to limit the liability of a carrier, affects the obligation assumed by the latter. When the contract for carriage was made in the state of Washington, it was made subject to the common-law rule creating a liability against the defendant, in the event that the goods to be transported by it were lost or destroyed, to an amount of the reasonable value of such goods. Upon entering into the contract of shipment, as it was there made, defendant assumed this obligation to answer to plaintiff for loss according to the full extent of the rule referred to. "The obligation of a contract consists in its binding force on the party who makes it. This depends on the laws in existence when it is made. These are necessarily referred to in all contracts, and forming a part of them as the measure of the obligation to perform them by the one party and the right acquired by the other. There can be no other standard by which to ascertain the extent of either than that which the terms of the contract indicated, according to their settled legal meaning. When it becomes consummated, the law defines the duty and the right, compels one party to perform the thing contracted for, and gives the other a right to enforce the performance by the remedies then in force." McCracken v. Hayward, 2 How. (43 U. S.) 608, 11 L. Ed. 397. "The action springs from the obligation, and hence the 'cause of action' is simply the obligation. * * * The cause of action is therefore to be distinguished, also, from the 'remedy' which is simply the means by which the obligation or the corresponding action is effectuated. Pomeroy on Pleading and Practice, § 453." Frost v. Witter, 132 Cal. 421, 64 Pac. 705, 84 Am. St. Rep. 53.

There was some evidence to sustain the finding of the court that information was given at the time of the shipping to the agent of the railway company at Spokane as to the value of the goods of plaintiff being in excess of $1,000, and therefore this finding cannot be held to have been erroneously made. No other questions are argued in the briefs of counsel. From the conclusions we have expressed it follows that the decision of the trial court must be sustained.

The judgment is affirmed.

LA PORTE v. WILLIAMS, Police Court Justice. (Civ. 1,077.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 10, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 260*)—JUSTICES OR POLICE COURTS—APPEAL—NOTICE.

Where an appeal is taken from a justice or police court on a statement of the case, it is not essential that accused or his counsel shall have notice, after the hearing on the appeal, when the judgment will be rendered.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 260*) — APPEAL FROM JUSTICES AND POLICE COURTS—DECISION ON APPEAL.

Under Pen. Code, § 1264, providing that when the judgment of the appellate court is given, it must be entered on the minutes, and a certified copy of the entry with a copy of the opinion remitted to the clerk of the court from which the appeal was taken, the superior court, on appeal from a judgment of the police court on a statement of facts, may forthwith transmit its finding and judgment affirming the conviction to the police court.

3. Bail (§ 73*)—Deposit of Cash—Application to Fine.

Under Pen. Code, § 1297, authorizing application of money deposited as bail in satisfaction of a fine imposed, the police court, on the superior court certifying its judgment affirming a conviction in the police court, may apply the bail money to the extent of the fine, in the execution of the judgment.

Application for a writ of prohibition by Francine La Porte against Warren L. Williams, Justice of the Police Court of the City of Los Angeles. Denied.

G. F. McCulloch, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. The petition and affidavit set forth the arrest of petitioner for vagrancy, her plea of not guilty, and the trial and conviction before a justice of the police court. From this an appeal was taken to the superior court on a statement of the case as provided by section 1468 of the Penal Code. This appeal was heard in the superior court and the judgment affirmed. It is averred that without waiting 10 days, the superior court certified its judgment to the court below, and that the justice will apply the bail money to the extent of the fine in execution of the judgment. This petition prays that the justice be prohibited from so doing.

It is not claimed that defendant and her counsel had no notice of the hearing upon the appeal, but simply that they had no notice of the time when the court rendered its judgment and decision.

[1] We are not advised that when an appeal is taken from a justice's or police court upon a statement of the case, it is essential that the defendant or his counsel have notice after the hearing when the judgment and decision will be entered. No good reason suggests itself why they should be present, or how they could avail themselves of any rights by such notice.

[2] There is nothing in the contention that the superior court should not transmit its findings and judgment to the lower court for 10 days. The method of procedure on appeal in criminal cases from justices' and police courts is controlled by part 2, title 9 of the Penal Code. Brown v. Superior Court, 72 Cal. 16, 13 Pac. 70. Section 1264 of the title above named provides that when the judgment of the appellate court is given it must be entered in the minutes, and a certified copy of the entry, with a copy of the opinion attached thereto, forthwith remitted to the court from which the appeal is taken.

[3] Section 1297 of the Penal Code authorizes the application of money deposited as bail in satisfaction of a fine, and the refunding of the surplus, if any, to the defendant.

We see no merit in the application, and the same is denied.

In re LOHEIDE'S ESTATE. (Civ. 890.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 15, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 12, 1912.)

1. Executors and Administrators (§ 293*)—Payment of Claims—Set-Off.

The rule permitting a set-off of a share of a distributee as against a debt owing by him to the estate will not be applied, so as to work immediately as of the death of the deceased, if such application would operate to the detriment of the estate, and cannot be invoked to protect the administrator, who is a distributee, against his debt to the estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1164–1168; Dec. Dig. § 293.*]

2. Executors and Administrators (§ 480*)—Accounting—Debts Due Estate.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1613, 1615, making an administrator chargeable in his account with the whole of the estate coming into his possession at its appraised value, but not charging him with debts remaining uncollected without his fault, an administrator is answerable for the amount of a debt as appraised in the inventory, unless it appears that it was not collectible; and his mere act in charging himself with a note and crediting himself with the same note is not a statement that it remained uncollected without fault on his part.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 480.*]

3. Executors and Administrators (§ 88*)—Accounting—Debts Due by Administrator to Estate.

An administrator who was indebted to an estate for an amount for which he had given his note, and who was solvent at the time he assumed the office of administrator, and was insolvent at the time of his accounting, did not sufficiently excuse his failure to pay the debt due the estate by merely showing that he would have had to sacrifice his private business in order to pay the indebtedness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 393, 393½; Dec. Dig. § 88.*]

4. Executors and Administrators (§ 480*)—Accounting—Charges—Debt Due by Administrator.

Where an administrator who is under bond is indebted to the estate, for which he has given his notes, and he was solvent at the time he assumed his duties, and was insolvent at the time of accounting, and had not paid such notes, the distributees were entitled to have him charged with the notes, without a corresponding balance by a credit for the notes as uncollected; otherwise the surety might urge that the statement discharged the administrator for any dereliction in his duty to collect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 480.*]

5. Executors and Administrators (§ 484*)—Payment of Claims—Debt Due by Administrator.

Where the distributees of an estate formed a corporation during the settlement, which was to be the sole distributee and the administrator was secretary and manager of such corporation, his act in renewing or replacing notes, owing by him individually to the estate, by giving new notes to the corporation, with nothing to show that the heirs or stockholders received such new notes as an advance paid them on their distributive shares, was not a sufficient reason for not charging the administrator with moneys in the amount due on the notes, instead of crediting him with the amount due on them as an advance to the sole distributee, the corporation.

6. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 484*) —ACCOUNTING—CREDITS.

The rule that an executor will not be given credits on settlement of account for payments made under the terms of the will, and for distributive shares turned over, but that the items are to be withdrawn therefrom and considered on distribution of the estate, is applicable to the account of administrators, and will apply to items of advancements made to the heirs by the administrator.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; George D. Murray, Judge.

Accounting by William L. Loheide, administrator of the estate of William H. Loheide, deceased. From an order and decree of settlement of final and supplemental account, the administrator appeals. Affirmed.

Denver Sevier and C. P. Cutten (Thomas, Beedy & Lanagan, of counsel), for appellant. J. F. Quinn and L. F. Puter, for respondent W. H. MacKinnon. G. W. Hunter, for respondent Estate.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an appeal by W. L. Loheide, administrator of the estate of William H. Loheide, deceased, from an order and decree of settlement of his final and supplemental accounts. In his final account he charged himself with a large number of items commencing October 26, 1907:

To cash on hand in Humboldt County Bank, $695.09, and to various sums of money received from various sources to January 18, 1909, amounting in all to....	$14,120 30
To this he adds the following:
1907. Cash on hand in Hibernia Savings & Loan S'y S. F....	2,164 94
Dec. 31/07. Cash interest, in Hibernia S. & L. S'y	39 64
June 30/08. Cash interest, in Hibernia S. & L. S'y....	4 52
Total receipts	$16,329 40

On the credit side of his account are found, on several pages of the transcript, the items of payments commencing October 11, 1907, and ending January 29, 1908, amounting in all to $17,173.71, leaving due the administrator, $844.31.

Written objections and exceptions were filed by William H. MacKinnon, as assignee of an interest in said estate, attacking the correctness of a large number of these credit items, on the ground that none of the amounts was incurred or was necessary in the management of the estate, but related to matters personal to the administrator. Special objection is made to two items of disbursement of $1,314.45 each to the administrator and his attorney, on the ground that the administrator "is indebted personally to said estate in the sum of $25,995.22½ and interest on two promissory notes, due and payable before the filing of said final account, and which amount said administrator has failed to account for to said estate, * * * and he has failed to pay the same, being financially able to do so, and not accounted in cash to the estate for the same."

On March 15, 1910, the administrator filed a supplemental account as to "amounts advanced by administrator W. H. Loheide, deceased, subsequent to report dated Jan. 29, 1909." Then follows a large number of items, commencing January 6, 1909, and ending March 7, 1910, aggregating $7,213.25. He then states what purports to be an account between the administrator and W. H. Loheide estate:

Jan. 29/09, to Mch. 15/10.

By charges against estate..........	$7,213 25
" " Mrs. M. E. Speegle...	1,698 99
" " G. H. Loheide.........	460 20	$9,372 44
Dr.
To amt. collected Jan—09 to Mch. 15—10		2,935 06
		$6,437 38
Paid for writing in connection with the account....		7 50
Bal. due administrator....		$6,444 88

The charges to Mrs. Speegle and G. H. Loheide are in the nature of advancements to them as heirs of deceased. He then charges himself with sundry items, of date March 15, 1910, as receipts subsequent to report of January 28, 1909, amounting to $2,935.06.

To many items of this supplemental account, the W. H. Loheide Estate Company makes objection. From its objections it appears that W. H. Loheide died on October 7, 1907, and W. L. Loheide, appellant, was appointed administrator of said estate; that deceased left as his heirs four children—W. L. Loheide, the administrator of said estate, Manda E. Speegle, George H. Loheide, and Robert C. Loheide, all of whom were of age at their father's death; that, during the month of January, 1908, the said heirs formed a corporation, called the "W. H. Loheide Estate Company," and, on January 29, 1908, said heirs conveyed to said corporation all their interest in and to the property of said estate, "subject to the administration of said estate." The items of the final and supplemental accounts objected to will be hereafter considered, so far as now in question. The estate company also charges mismanagement on the part of the administrator, and prays for his removal from his trust.

Contestant MacKinnon excepts to each and every item of the supplemental account, because the administrator had not accounted for the sum of $25,995.22½ and interest due the estate from the administrator personally on the two certain promissory notes heretofore mentioned. The matter thereafter came on to be heard, and, on April 18, 1910, the court filed its opinion, wherein it directed the manner in which the final and supplemental accounts should be settled, and it was adjudged that the administrator, "in addition to being charged with the moneys with which he has charged himself in his said final account, be also charged with money in the amount that was due January 27, 1909, on notes of William L. Loheide and E. D. Vorrath to W. H. Loheide for $20,000, dated January 29, 1904, to wit, the sum of $20,000, and with moneys in the amount that was due January 29, 1909, on the note of William L. Loheide and E. D. Vorrath to W. H. Loheide for $5,990.45, dated August 10, 1907, to wit, the sum of $3,690.45, and with all the other property belonging to said estate which has come into his possession, and be credited with all said property which remains or which should remain on hand for distribution, as well as with all disbursements which are proper charges against said estate, as hereinafter specified, and that said final account be and the same is hereby amended, corrected, and restated as follows, to wit." The court then states the debit side of the account, charging the administrator with the moneys he charged himself with, also with the promissory notes already mentioned, making the total amount of money thus charged to be $40,019.85. The other items are all descriptive of property taken from the inventory and the appraised value carried out, aggregating $84,081.87. Total charges, $124,101.72.

The court then credits the administrator, first, with "property hereinabove charged to the administrator and remaining on hand for distribution"—money in the sum of $32,316.63. Then follow the items charged from the inventory, aggregating in all $116,398.50. Second, the administrator is credited with disbursements which are specifically mentioned, and which, together with previous items, aggregate the sum with which the administrator is charged, to wit, $124,101.72.

The court then takes up the supplemental account and restates it, charging the administrator with receipts, $2,935.06. The court credits the administrator with disbursements in the sum of $2,727.22. Excess of receipts over disbursements, $207.84.

The result of this accounting, as we understand the findings, is that the administrator is charged with cash on hand	$32,316 63

And also with certain property in his keeping remaining for distribution. This cash balance includes the promissory notes due the estate from the administrator, and the principal question presented on the appeal is as to the correctness of the court's decision in charging these notes up as money on hand for distribution.

It appears from the evidence that appellant and one Vorrath executed their promissory notes to W. H. Loheide, one of which was for $20,000, dated January 29, 1904, and the other for $5,990.45, dated August 10, 1907, on which latter there remained unpaid the sum of $3,690.45. Deceased died October 7, 1907, and these notes became assets of his estate. A corporation was formed by the heirs, to which they conveyed their interest in all the property of the estate. The articles of incorporation were read in evidence, and marked "Exhibit A," and the deed of the heirs to the corporation was also read in evidence, and marked "Exhibit B," but neither of these instruments appears in the record. The administrator (appellant) testified: "I, myself, owed the estate on two promissory notes, $25,945. These notes, I presume, were due and payable prior to the date of filing my account. I have not collected these notes, but I have paid them by giving the estate new notes. The notes would have outlawed, if Mr. Vorrath and myself had not given new notes. [This could not have been true of note made in 1907.] I made out the new note to the Loheide Estate Company. * * * I was engaged in business at the time of my father's death and up to the date of filing the final account. That business was on a paying basis. * * * That was a solvent business. The assets of it were worth $30,000. * * * We owned the stock of goods as partners. Mr. Vorrath and I were on each of these notes. * * * I have also credited myself with * * * commissions and also attorney's fees. I ask the court to allow me credit for these two items, notwithstanding that these notes which I owed the estate, and upon which there is still a balance due of $23,695, remain unpaid, and although I was solvent and had assets during the administration of the estate. * * * If I had paid these notes when due, I would have had to sacrifice the business to do so. The note was good, and there was no reason for forcing it to be paid. It would have sacrificed the business to do it; that is, my own private business. When I gave this new note to the corporation, the corporation did not pay into the estate as cash the amount of the note I gave. The old note was an asset of the estate, and was appraised at its face value. * * * The new notes were dated the 2d day of February of this year (1909). The old notes would have outlawed on Sunday, the day before. Mr. Vorrath executed them with me. They were executed to the W. H. Loheide Estate Co. When the final distribution is made, the corporation will own the notes." It further appeared that at the hearing of his account the administrator was insolvent, and that he subsequently made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, and that the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company is security upon the administrator's bond for $80,000. As he was insolvent in January, 1909, he must have been insolvent when he gave his new note in February. There is evidence that the administrator was an officer of the corporation—its secretary and manager—and had control of most of the shares; that he borrowed money from the Bank of Eureka, and promised to secure the loan by pledge of shares of the corporation; that he tendered a certificate, and when its genuineness was challenged he admitted it was fictitious, and that he had already pledged his shares to another bank. The corporation thereupon assumed this particular liability, but it appeared that he was still indebted in a large sum to the Bank of Eureka, among other creditors. If it be true that the notes given by Loheide & Vorrath would have "outlawed" on February 2, 1909, it must follow that they were due and payable four years before that date and during the entire period of appellant's administration.

[1] The claim of appellant now is that "the doctrine of set-off applies at once and automatically as of the date of the death of the creditor and ancestor," citing 2 Woerner on Administration, § 564, and numerous cases found cited in the notes to the text. The author says: "The indebtedness of a legatee or distributee constitutes assets of the estate, which it is the executor's or administrator's duty to collect for the benefit of creditors, legatees, and distributees. Hence such indebtedness may be deducted from any legacy or distributive share of the debtor." Many phases of this doctrine are presented in the text, but the cases seem to be illustrative of the right in the estate to have the distributive share of an heir set off against his indebtedness to the estate. The doctrine is never applied to the detriment of the estate, and cannot be invoked to protect the administrator who is at once a distributee of and a debtor to the estate. In some jurisdictions, a lien is held to exist on the distributee's share, which will be enforced for the purpose of equalization among the heirs. But it has otherwise been held. See note 2, star section 1237; and Mr. Woerner says it is doubtful whether an administrator has any prior right to demand payment of a debt due by an insolvent heir to the intestate out of the land in the hands of such heir, or his vendee, or attaching creditor. In this state it was held, in William Hill Co. v. Lawler, 116 Cal. 359, 48 Pac. 323, that the order of distribution is conclusive of the rights of all parties, assignees as well as heirs, and whether they appear or not; and it is held that all persons claiming ownership, whether directly or through the heirs, may have their respective rights conclusively ascertained, if not adverse to the estate. In re Burton, 93 Cal. 459, 29 Pac. 36.

[2, 3] An administrator is chargeable in his account with the whole of the estate of the decedent coming into his possession at the value of the appraisement contained in the inventory. Code Civ. Proc. § 1613. He is not accountable for any debts due to the decedent, "if it appears that they remain uncollected without his fault." Id. § 1615. But, if it does not so appear to the court, the administrator must be held answerable for the amount of a debt due the decedent, as appraised in the inventory. In re Sanderson, 74 Cal. 199, 203, 15 Pac. 753. Merely charging himself with the note and crediting himself with it is not a statement that it remained uncollected "without fault" on the part of the administrator. Id. It was also held in that case that there is no presumption of duty performed. The presumption is that the administrator could have collected the note, in the absence of satisfactory showing that it was not collected without any fault in him. The only excuse tendered in the case here is that he would have had to sacrifice his private business in paying the note. But his primary duty was to the trust he had assumed. He was not authorized to show favor to himself as a debtor to the estate greater than to any other person. He had no right to use the credit of the estate to promote his personal gain, or to maintain a business which might suffer if he drew out of his capital enough to pay what he owed the estate. In Estate of Walker, 125 Cal. 242, 57 Pac. 991, the administrator admitted that he "should be charged with a debt due from him to the estate as money on hand," but that on the settlement of his final account he might show "that he has never at any time while administrator had the means to enable him to pay the debt or any part thereof." In reply the court said: "Further than this, unquestionably, the contention could not logically go, since, as he cannot sue himself, and yet it is his duty to collect the debt for the estate, he must be held officially liable for any money he could have so applied at any time during his official term. If he has not so applied it, he has not faithfully executed his trust according to law, and his sureties may also be held; for it is so nominated in the bond." Then follows a very instructive discussion of principles which should control, both as to the consequences to the administrator and his bondsmen, where in fact he was insolvent and unable to pay anything at the death of decedent, or at any time during his incumbency as administrator. It was held that in such a case "the fiction of the law," by which he became chargeable with his debt as money in hand, should not be made to work injustice. "In fictione juris semper acquitas existit." In the course of the discussion, Judge Temple said: "I am not disposed to deny that, so far as the administrator has the means to pay, he and his sureties may be charged with the money as in the hands of the administrator." In Sanchez v. Forster, 133 Cal. 614, 65 Pac. 1077, the court held that the rule laid down in section 1447, Code of Civil Procedure, as to the restrictions placed upon executors, the section is not applicable to administrators. The action was against the sureties of an administrator. The court said: "The liability of these defendants for the debt of the administrator depends upon the fact as to whether or not the debt was uncollected through his fault. Or bringing the question directly to the door of the administrator, it may be said his sureties are liable, if, during his administration of the estate, he had the financial ability to pay the debt and failed to do so." See Estate of Thomas, 140 Cal. 397, 73 Pac. 1059.

[4] It seems to us that the learned trial judge was fully justified in charging the administrator with the debt due the estate which he had the means to pay, but did not pay. As he is concededly insolvent, it suggests the inquiry why he should concern himself about the decree of the court, as it fixes no additional liability upon him. The answer may be found in the fact that the administrator gave a bond in a large sum, and that his sureties may have had something to do in promoting the appeal.

If we understand appellant, he claims that he should be charged with the notes, and should have the charge balanced by a credit on the other side of the account for the notes as uncollected. Should the account be settled as thus stated, it might be urged by the surety company that the administrator was purged of any dereliction of duty, and they thus be discharged of liability for any breach of his trust. Even though there are no creditors of the estate, the heirs are entitled to have brought into it for distribution all that legally and rightfully belongs to it; and if the sureties are liable the estate may look to them to make good the delinquency of the administrator. There is no evidence in the record that there are no creditors of the estate. There is a statement in the final account that the only debt "which has been presented and duly allowed during the period embraced in the foregoing account" is as follows: "Tonjes Doscher, Prom. note $900."

Whether notice to creditors has been published does not appear; nor do we find that this note has been paid. There are credits in the final account for interest paid and in the supplemental account two payments of $25 each and one of $50, but the note is not paid. Whether there are other creditors does not appear; nor does it appear that there were no others, nor that the time for filing claims is passed. It is probable that there are no other debts, as the court otherwise would not have settled the final account. Whatever the fact may be, it would not affect materially the point under discussion.

[5, 6] It is next claimed "that the administrator should not have been charged with moneys in the amount due on his two promissory notes to the decedent, but should have been credited with the amount due on them, as an advance to the sole distributee of the estate," the Loheide Estate Company. This because he delivered a substitute for the old notes to the estate company, "which accepted such substitute." Estate of Moore, 96 Cal. 522, 31 Pac. 584, is cited to the proposition that a distributee or legatee who has received his distributive share or legacy cannot be heard to object to a credit therefor in the settlement of the administrator's account, citing, also, 2 Woerner on Administrators, p. 1153. We know nothing of the facts attending the making of this new note, except as we learn them from the testimony of the administrator already quoted. He was secretary and manager of the company. The new note was probably made to the estate company, because the heirs had all joined in a conveyance of their interests in the estate to the corporation, and it was naturally enough made the payee of this new note, which was not given as an advancement, but, as appellant testified, because the old notes "were about to outlaw." There is nothing in the record tending to show that the heirs or stockholders of the corporation received this note as an advance paid them on their distributive shares. Furthermore, it has been held by the Supreme Court that, while an executor is entitled to be reimbursed for payments made under the terms of the will and for distributive shares which he may have turned over, "credits therefor are not to be given upon the settlement of accounts, but are to be retired therefrom and considered upon the distribution of the estate." Estate of Willey, 140 Cal. 238, 242, 73 Pac. 998, 999. We see no reason why the rule is not applicable to the account of administrators. What has been said will apply to all the items of advancements made to heirs by the administrator.

[7] Some criticism is made of the order, in that by it the exceptions and objections of MacKinnon were disallowed, and the exceptions of the estate company allowed; whereas the latter made no reference in its objections to the notes in question. Suffice it to say, it was the duty of the court to satisfy itself of the correctness of the account (Estate of Moore, 121 Cal. 635, 639, 54 Pac. 148); and if it found the administrator justly chargeable with money it would be the duty of the court to charge him with it, whether or not called to the court's attention in the exceptions taken. Why the court charged the administrator as it did, and at the same time disallowed MacKinnon's objections, among which was a demand that this charge be made, is not apparent. MacKinnon's objections ran to a large number of items, many of which the court disregarded, and it may have been an inadvertence, and it intended its order to apply more particularly to these miscellaneous items. However this may be, the action of the court is not sufficient ground for reversal.

The order settling the final and supplemental accounts is affirmed.

HENLEY, HALFHILL & NICKLIN v. CLAGUE. (Civ. 995.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 20, 1911.)

Brokers (§ 49*) — Commissions — Contract of Employment—Performance.

An owner of certain real estate, desiring to exchange the same for city property on which were certain mortgages, employed plaintiffs as brokers to effectuate the exchange, requiring as a condition precedent that an extension of time for the payment of the mortgages be secured within 10 days. Plaintiffs procured defendant, the owner of the city property, to indorse a written acceptance on the contract and an agreement to pay $1,000 commission for the exchange, which was never consummated, because no extension of time for payment of the mortgages was obtained. Held, that it was plaintiffs' duty to procure such extension, in the absence of which he could not recover commissions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. R. Hervey, Judge.

Action by Henley, Halfhill & Nicklin against William Clague. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Davis, Kemp & Post, for appellants. T. F. McDonald and Tanner, Taft & Odell, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. The action is one to recover commissions by real estate brokers. Judgment went for defendant, from which, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

The facts are these: One Doig was the owner of certain real property in Orange county. In October, 1908, he executed an instrument through which he declared that he had placed with plaintiff his property, which he desired to exchange for certain specified property in the city of Los Angeles; that upon the latter property were certain mortgages; that as a condition precedent to the trade an extension of time for the payment of such mortgages should be secured, 10 days being given therefor. Plaintiff procured defendant, who was the owner of the Los Angeles property, to indorse on such written proposition an acceptance thereof upon the terms therein stated, and an agreement to pay $1,000 commission for said exchange. The extension of time for the payment of the mortgages was never procured by any one, and the exchange was never effected, notwithstanding which plaintiff, as a broker, claims from defendant, Clague, the $1,000 commission to be paid upon the exchange.

We perceive no error in the record. The condition precedent to the exchange was one over which neither Doig nor Clague had any control; the record disclosing that these incumbrances were owned by third parties. Doig's proposition was based upon the procurement of the extension of time by some one not specified. Clague accepted the proposition made by Doig upon the terms stated therein. It is obvious from a reading of the agreement that it was the intention of the parties that the plaintiff should procure the extension of time, a necessary condition precedent to the exchange, without which neither party contemplated an exchange. Plaintiff never procured such extension, nor did any other person, and, under the agreement, no contract of exchange was enforceable. Plaintiff never found a customer willing and able to enter into a contract for the sale or exchange of the property absolutely, but only upon a condition which was never performed, and the performance of which devolved upon plaintiff.

Judgment and order affirmed.

PEOPLE v. WHITE. (Cr. 370.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Nov. 17, 1911.)

1. Indictment and Information (§ 41*)—Information — Preliminary Examination — Compliance with Statute.

An information will not be set aside on the ground that accused was not, before the preliminary examination, informed of his right to the aid of counsel in every stage of the proceedings, as required by statute, where the magistrate's docket shows that accused was, before the preliminary examination began, advised "of his right to counsel," and that accused knew of his right to counsel on the examination, and elected to proceed without counsel.

2. Indictment and Information (§ 41*)—Preliminary Complaint—Holding Over to Answer—Order—Sufficiency.

Where the complaint sets forth the charge of murder against accused, an order indorsed on the back of the complaint, holding accused to answer for the offense in the "within deposition," is in conformity with Pen. Code, § 872, except in the use of the word "deposition," instead of the word "complaint," and is sufficient to support an information filed by the district attorney.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 165; Dec. Dig. § 41;* Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 420.]

3. Indictment and Information (§ 41*)—Preliminary Examination—Binding Over to Answer—Commitment.

Where a proper order by a magistrate, holding accused charged with murder to trial, is made, that the commitment prescribed by Pen. Code, § 877, does not name the person murdered does not invalidate an information filed by the district attorney, since, under section 809, the order holding accused to answer is the basis for the filing of an information.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

4. Indictment and Information (§ 41*)—Preliminary Examination—Binding Over to Answer—Commitment.

The defect in a commitment of one held to answer for murder arising from the failure to name the person murdered is not a ground for the discharge of accused from custody, where a proper order holding him for trial has been indorsed on the complaint, but the commitment may at any time be amended, so as to make it fully describe the offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

5. Indictment and Information (§ 41*)—Preliminary Examination—Failure to Sign Docket.

The failure of an examining magistrate, holding one to trial, to sign his docket until after the filing of the information does not affect the validity of the information.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Thomas White was charged by information with murder, and from an order setting aside the information the People appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Attorney General Webb and Benj. K. Knight, for the People. W. G. Williams and D. C. Clark, for respondent.

HALL, J. Defendant was charged by information filed by the district attorney with the crime of murder. In due time he made a motion in the superior court that the information be set aside, "upon the ground that before the filing of said information the defendant had not been legally committed by a magistrate." The motion was granted, and the people appealed to the Supreme Court, which court, being of the opinion that the appeal should have been taken to this court, transferred the case to this court for determination of the appeal.

The first ground urged by respondent in support of the order setting aside the information seems to be that defendant was not, before the preliminary examination, informed of his right to the aid of counsel in every stage of the proceedings.

The statute provides that: "When the defendant is brought before the magistrate upon an arrest, either with or without warrant, on a charge of having committed a public offense, the magistrate must immediately inform him of the charge against him and of his right to the aid of counsel in every stage of the proceedings." The docket entry of the magistrate shows that when defendant was brought before the magistrate on the 17th day of May, 1911, he was by the magistrate "advised of his rights to counsel," and the examination of the charge was set for May 19, 1911.

The record shows that on the calling of the matter by the magistrate on May 19, 1911, the defendant and the district attorney were present, and the district attorney requested the magistrate to appoint a reporter to report the proceedings, which was done, and the reporter was duly sworn. Thereupon the district attorney made this statement: "If your honor please, in order that the record may be straight in this case, as I understand it, the other day the defendant was duly arraigned in court by having the complaint read to him and being informed of all his rights to counsel at all stages of the proceedings, also of his right to have witnesses here at the preliminary examination, and the examination was set at this time by consent, and with the understanding that if Mr. White desired further time to employ counsel that he would have the right to it. I presume, may it please the court, that the matter may be disposed of, first, as to whether he is ready to go ahead at this time without counsel." Immediately following this statement by the district attorney, the record shows the following proceedings: "Court: Have you an attorney? Have you employed an attorney to defend you in this action? Defendant: No; I have no attorney. Court: A lawyer? Defendant: No; I expect I will have to get one in the big trial. Court: You understand that this is the time set for your preliminary examination? Defendant: Yes. Court: Are you ready for your examination now? Defendant: Yes, sir. Court: You don't desire any further time? Defendant: No, no; do it to-day. Q. You want to proceed without a lawyer? A. Yes; until the next court comes, I am satisfied."

[1] As was suggested by the trial court when passing upon the motion to set aside the information, the magistrate should have carefully followed the statute and informed the defendant "of his right to the aid of counsel in all stages of the proceedings," and should have seen to it that his docket entries showed an exact compliance with the law in this regard. But, even if the docket entry to the effect that he was "advised of his right to counsel" does not show a full compliance with the requirement of the law that he must be informed of his right to the aid of counsel in every stage of the proceedings, it is perfectly clear from the record, as above set forth, that, before the examination, defendant was informed and had knowledge of his right to the aid of counsel upon the examination, and with such knowledge elected to proceed with the examination without counsel. Under these circumstances, defendant should not be heard to complain after his commitment that he was not sufficiently informed of his right to counsel when first brought before the magistrate.

[2] It is next urged by defendant that the commitment of defendant is not valid, for the reason that the name of the person charged to have been murdered does not appear in the commitment. The order holding him to answer is indorsed on the back of the complaint, and is in exact conformity with the statute requiring such order to be so indorsed, except that the word "deposition" is used, instead of the word "complaint" (Pen. Code, § 872), but this has been held to be immaterial. People v. Lapique, 10 Cal. App. 672, 103 Pac. 164. The complaint fully sets forth the charge against the defendant, and is beyond criticism, as a charge of murder. By the terms of the order indorsed on the complaint, defendant was held to answer for the offense "in the within deposition mentioned" and this made the complaint a part of the order. The order holding the defendant to answer was thus in strict accord with the requirements of the statute, and entirely sufficient to support the information filed.

[3,4] The fact that the commitment to the sheriff (Pen. Code, § 877) does not name the person murdered does not invalidate the information filed by the district attorney. Indeed, any such defect in the warrant of commitment is not a ground for the release of the prisoner from custody, if a proper order has been indorsed on the complaint. In such case, the warrant of commitment to the sheriff may at any time be amended by the magistrate, so as to make it fully and formally describe the offense set forth in the complaint referred to, and thus made a part of the order holding the defendant to answer to the charge. Ex parte Keil, 85 Cal. 309, 24 Pac. 742.

Section 872 of the Penal Code provides that: "If, however, it appears from the examination that a public offense has been committed, and there is sufficient cause to believe the defendant guilty thereof, the magistrate must make or endorse on the complaint an order, signed by him, to the following effect: It appearing to me that the offense in the within complaint mentioned (or any offense, according to the fact, stating generally the nature thereof) has been committed, and that there is sufficient cause to believe the within named A. B. guilty thereof, I order that he be held to answer to the same."

It is this order that evidences the action of the magistrate in holding a defendant to answer before the superior court, and is the basis for the filing of an information against the defendant. Pen. Code, § 809. For this reason, any omission of the name of the person murdered, in the commitment issued to the sheriff or entered in the docket, does not invalidate the information, nor justify the setting aside of the information, upon the ground that the defendant had not been legally held to answer, where, as in this case, the provisions of section 872 have been strictly complied with.

[5] And for the same reason the failure of the magistrate to sign his docket until after the filing of the information does not affect the validity of the information.

No other reasons have been suggested to support the contention of defendant that he had not been legally committed by a magistrate.

The grounds urged in support of the order made by the trial court are insufficient to support the order, and it is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings upon the information filed by the district attorney.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. R. Harvey, Judge.

Action by E. A. Summers against W. A. Hammell, Sheriff of the County of Los Angeles, and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Jones & Weller (C. F. Culver, of counsel), for appellant. Arthur M. Ellis, for respondents.

JAMES, J. This appeal is from a judgment entered, dismissing the action of plaintiff after demurrer to her amended complaint had been sustained by the superior court.

The facts, as alleged in the amended complaint filed by plaintiff, are briefly as follows: On the 12th day of June, 1905, the sheriff of Los Angeles county, under authority of a writ of execution issued out of the superior court, sold to the defendant Franklin Oil Company certain real property belonging to a corporation called the "New Franklin Oil & Refining Company," which latter was then the judgment debtor of the said Franklin Oil Company. Thereafter, on the 17th day of November, 1905, plaintiff here commenced an action against the New Franklin Oil & Refining Company, in which action judgment was rendered in her favor on the 5th day of July, 1906. On the 9th day of July, 1906, she tendered and paid to the sheriff of Los Angeles county the amount of money which would be required to be paid upon redemption of the New Franklin Oil & Refining Company's property, and demanded of the sheriff a certificate of redemption, which was refused. It was further alleged in the amended complaint that, because of the numerous holidays declared by the Governor of the state from the 18th of April, 1906, to the 2d day of June, 1906, it was impossible for plaintiff to obtain a trial of her action against the New Franklin Oil & Refining Company, and that she exercised diligence in the prosecution of her said action.

Twelve months from the date of the sale of the real property to the Franklin Oil Company expired on the 12th day of June, 1906. Therefore the whole period during which redemption could be made from the sale, either by the judgment debtor or any holder of a subsequent judgment lien, had fully run. Sections 702, 703, Code Civ. Proc. Counsel for plaintiff make two contentions as against the action of the trial court in sustaining the demurrer to the amended complaint and entering judgment of dismissal; they are these: First, that under the allegations of plaintiff's amended complaint equitable grounds are shown by reason of which her right to redeem the property of her judgment debtor from the sale made under the execution should be sustained; second, that an act of the Legislature, approved in 1906 (Stats. 1906, p. 8), had the effect of making her redemption effectual, even though it was not attempted to be made until nearly 13 months had elapsed after the date of the execution sale.

[1] As to the claim made, that the cause of action as alleged presents ground for equitable consideration, we are not in accord with the position taken by appellant. By section 701, Code of Civil Procedure, defining who may be entitled to redeem property from the effect of an execution sale, it is provided, first, that the judgment debtor, or his successor in interest, may so redeem, or that the redemption may be made by a creditor having a subsequent lien by judgment or mortgage on the property sold. By her own allegations, it appears here that plaintiff did not become a judgment creditor of the New Franklin Oil Company until July, 1906, at which time the full period of redemption had expired. She is not insisting, and cannot claim, that as a judgment creditor having a lien on the property she was prevented from asserting the right of a redemptioner by reason of conditions beyond her power to control, and which prevented her from exercising such right, notwithstanding her own diligence in the matter. During all of the time when it is alleged that certain holidays proclaimed by the Governor of the state interfered in delaying the progress of her action against the New Franklin Oil & Refining Company, plaintiff was the holder of no judgment lien against the property which had theretofore been subjected to execution sale. It might as well have happened that, because of congestion of business in the courts, plaintiff had been delayed in securing a trial and judgment in her action, and, if such a condition existed, just as strong an appeal for equitable relief would have been furnished. We are satisfied that a case is not presented which calls at all for equitable consideration, or the granting of any relief agreeable to such a plea.

[2] We have next to consider the effect of the act of the Legislature of June 3, 1906, section 1 of which reads as follows: "Any act or proceeding appointed, required or limited by or in pursuance of law to be performed or taken on any day or within any time in the month of June, 1906, prior to the last day of said month, may be performed or taken on any day not later than the 10th day of July, A. D. 1906, with the same effect as if it had been performed or taken on the day or within the time wherein such act or proceeding was so appointed, required or limited to be performed. The provisions of this act shall not apply to criminal actions." If the provisions of this act are applicable to the situation as disclosed by the allegations of plaintiff's complaint, then clearly its effect must be to extend the period of redemption for nearly 30 days beyond that fixed by section 702, Code of Civil Procedure. It has been held several times by our Supreme Court that a statute, such as the one here under consideration, cannot have the effect of extending the period of redemption after judgment and execution sale, because the result would be that the obligation of the contract would be impaired thereby, which the Constitution of the state and the United States Constitution will not permit. The proposition advanced in this behalf may be answered against the contention of appellant by the citation of the following cases: Welsh v. Cross, 146 Cal. 621, 81 Pac. 229, 106 Am. St. Rep. 63; Tuohy v. Moore, 133 Cal. 516, 65 Pac. 1107; Malone v. Roy, 134 Cal. 344, 66 Pac. 313.

The judgment is affirmed.

DRESSER v. ALLEN et al. (Civ. 991.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 20, 1911.)

1. Exceptions, Bill of (§ 42*)—Settlement—Time.

Where no notice of entry of judgment had been served, so that plaintiff was entitled to have a bill of exceptions settled for a review of the evidence on appeal from the judgment, it was not material that the time had expired within which a bill might be settled for use on motion for a new trial.

3. Adverse Possession (§ 63*)—Adverse Claim—Necessity.

Where plaintiff had been in possession for 14 years, paying taxes on the property, and had inclosed the same, but the facts demonstrated that she did such acts under a claim of title, pursuant to a certain contract of purchase, and did not claim adversely to the record owners, she thereby acquired no title by prescription.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

Action by Mary E. Dresser against Levi Allen and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Riley & Hubbell, for appellant. Haines & Haines and Sylvester Kipp, for respondents.

ALLEN, P. J. The action was one to quiet title, with pleadings in the usual form. Findings and judgment went for defendants, from which judgment plaintiff appeals upon a bill of exceptions.

[1] Respondents insist that upon a review of the case this court is precluded from an examination of the bill of exceptions, because it was not settled within time. The judgment was entered on the 21st day of February, 1910. On that date, plaintiff filed with the clerk and served upon defendants a notice of intention to move to vacate the decision and for a new trial, designating the grounds, and stating that the same would be made upon a bill of exceptions. The bill of exceptions was not served until the 18th of April, 1910, 56 days after the entry of the judgment. At the time fixed by the court for settlement of the bill, plaintiff announced her abandonment of proceedings under the notice of intention to move for a new trial. The court thereupon overruled the objections to the settlement, and settled the bill. No notice of the entry of the judgment was served upon the plaintiff. We are of opinion that the court was warranted in settling the bill of exceptions; 10 days not having elapsed from notice of the entry of judgment. Possessing the right to have the bill of exceptions settled within 10 days after notice of the entry of judgment, through which, upon an appeal from such judgment, the evidence may be considered, it is of no materiality that, in the first instance, the intention was to use such bill upon a motion for a new trial. It matters not what may be the purposes for which the bill was expected to be used; it is sufficient if it be settled within the time requisite for use upon appeal from the judgment.

[2] Appellant's sole contention relates to the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings of the court. The material facts presented by the bill of exceptions are these: In 1895 plaintiff entered into an agreement with one Mulford for the purchase of the premises described in the complaint. It is appellant's contention that Mulford in the negotiations acted as the agent for the heirs of Fletcher, claiming to be the owners of the premises. The contract between Mulford and plaintiff was oral. Plaintiff was to pay one-third cash and the balance in 2 and 3 years. Mulford put plaintiff into possession of the premises, and during the year following the making of the contract she paid the one-third cash stipulated. She never paid any portion of the deferred payments. Mulford at the time the contract was made held a conveyance from one of the Fletcher heirs, executed after the heir had arrived at the age of 18 years, but before he had attained his majority. How many of the Fletcher heirs were living is not shown, other than that there was one in addition to the minor making the conveyance. Fletcher's title to the property was disputed by other persons, and it was necessary to settle and adjust all of these claims, in order that a good title might be conveyed to plaintiff. Mulford procured defendant Allen to advance the money with which the claims for outstanding titles were compromised, and procured the minor, after attaining his majority, to convey his interest to Allen. Allen subsequently conveyed to Kipp, his codefendant, who now holds the record title to the premises.

[3] While plaintiff for 14 years was in possession of these premises, paying taxes thereon, and having inclosed the same, there is nothing in the record indicating that she held adversely to the record owners; in fact, there is ample evidence in the record tending to show that she held the premises under a contract with Mulford, and claimed that the titles held by Allen were in trust for her. We find nothing, therefore, sufficient to warrant the court in determining that plaintiff held a title by prescription. There is no claim that she held any other kind of a title, and, as a consequence, there is nothing which would warrant the court in making a finding otherwise than as made.

Judgment affirmed.

COOPER v. NICHOLS. (Civ. 860.)

ELECTIONS (§ 307*)—CONTESTS—DISMISSAL—COSTS.

Where two election contest cases were consolidated for the purpose of recounting the votes according to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1111-1127, the court dismissing one of the cases on motion of contestant therein must allow contestee his costs.

Appeal from Superior Court, Del Norte County; J. L. Childs, Judge.

Election contest by Ashley Cooper, contestant, against W. L. Nichols, contestee. From a judgment of dismissal on motion of contestant, contestee appeals. Reversed.

J. F. Quinn and James McNulty, for appellant. G. W. Howe, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiff commenced the action, as contestant, against the defendant, as contestee, for the office of county clerk of Del Norte county for the purpose of having a recount of the vote cast for said office at the general election held on November 8, 1910.

It does not appear when the complaint was filed, but on December 27, 1910, defendant filed a general and special demurrer to the complaint, and on the same day the minutes of the court show the following proceedings: "This being the time set for a special session of court to count the ballots in the case of West Duley vs. Thomas Peacock and Ashley Cooper vs. W. L. Nichols, and on motion of Howe these cases are consolidated for the purpose of counting. Quinn and McNulty appear for Peacock and Nichols. Quinn moves to set aside citations 980-981 and motion is denied. Quinn moves to dismiss action 980-981 and motion is denied. Quinn demurs to 980-981 and demurrer is overruled." Then follows in the transcript the answer of defendant, filed December 27, 1910. Following the answer, the transcript reads: "(Title of Court and Cause.) No. 981, Judgment. On motion of the contestant and plaintiff, Ashley Cooper, in the above entitled cause, it is hereby ordered and adjudged that this cause be dismissed, and this action being one of two contest cases which were by this court on Dec. 27, 1910, consolidated, and joined for the purpose of recounting votes according to sections 1111 to 1127 inc. of the Code of Civil Procedure, and, it appearing to the court as just and fair, it is hereby ordered that each party to this action pay his own costs and disbursements incurred. Dated in open court this 6th day of January, 1911. John L. Childs, Judge of the Superior Court of Del Norte County, State of California."

Defendant appealed from that part of the judgment of dismissal reading, "and, it appearing to the court as just and fair, it is hereby ordered that each party to this action pay his own costs." The notice of appeal is directed to "plaintiff and to his attorneys, Messrs. Geo. W. Howe and Arthur L. Dorn," from which it may be inferred that it was one of the attorneys for plaintiff and contestant who appears in the minutes to have made the motion to consolidate the cases referred to in the minutes.

The facts disclosed by the record differ but slightly from the facts appearing in the case of Duley v. Peacock (No. 859) 119 Pac. 1086, decided by this court November 8, 1911. In that case the action was dismissed on motion for a nonsuit, and the present case was dismissed on motion of the contestant. The two cases had been consolidated, and were heard together. The same question is presented in both appeals. On the authority of the case of Duley v. Peacock, the judgment is reversed, with directions to the court below to so modify it as to allow to the contestee his costs in the action.

KOKOLE v. SUPERIOR COURT, TEHAMA COUNTY, et al. (Civ. 912.)

1. NEW TRIAL (§ 154*)—MOTION—STATEMENT—SETTLEMENT—TIME—DISMISSAL OF PROCEEDINGS.

Judgment having been entered July 12, 1910, and notice thereof served on petitioner on the same day, petitioner also served on that day a notice of intention to move for a new trial. On November 29th following, he served and filed his proposed statement, and on December 5th defendants served and filed proposed amendments thereto. No further steps were taken until June 20, 1911, when defendants served a notice of motion to dismiss the notice of motion for a new trial, or the proceedings for settlement of the statement on motion for a new trial, on the ground of inexcusable neglect, and plaintiff's failure to engross, present for settlement, have statement settled, and otherwise proceed in the matter of his appeal; and on June 23, 1911, petitioner filed an alleged notice of appeal. Held, that the time prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 939 within which petitioner could appeal from the judgment having expired, the trial court properly dismissed the proceedings on the settlement of the statement for inexcusable neglect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 312, 313; Dec. Dig. § 154.*]

2. CERTIORARI (§ 5*)—SCOPE OF REMEDY—RIGHT TO APPEAL.

An order granting a motion to dismiss proceedings for the settlement of a statement on a motion for new trial for inexcusable neglect in preparing and applying for the settlement thereof being a special order after final judgment, from which an appeal may be taken as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 939, subd. 3, petitioner, on the dismissal of such proceedings, had a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy by appeal, which he could have taken within 60 days after the order was entered, and therefore could not have a writ of review, under the rule that such writ will lie only where an inferior tribunal has exceeded its jurisdiction, and there is no appeal, nor, in the judgment of the court, any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Certiorari, Cent. Dig. §§ 5, 6; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

3. NEW TRIAL (§ 12*)—EFFECT OF MOTION—STAY OF PROCEEDINGS.

Where a judgment was rendered against petitioner for the recovery of certain lands, the pendency of a motion for new trial did not operate to stay the issuance of a writ of possession, which it was the duty of the clerk to issue, as a ministerial act, on application of the party entitled thereto.

Petition for a writ of review by John Kokole against the Superior Court of Tehama County, and another. Demurrer to petition sustained, and writ discharged.

John Kokole, in pro. per. McCoy & Gans, for respondents.

HART, J. This is a petition for a writ of review.

It appears from the petition that petitioner instituted an action, on December 12, 1909, in the respondent superior court against M. R. Hook, the town of Red Bluff, a municipal corporation, and the members of the board of trustees of said town for the purpose of securing a decree reforming a certain deed, by which certain land was conveyed by said petitioner to said Hook, so that said deed would conform to the intention of the parties with respect to the description of the property so conveyed.

After issue joined and several continuances of the trial of the cause, the action came to trial on the 16th day of June, 1910, before the respondent Hon. J. E. Prewett, judge of the superior court in and for the county of Placer, who had been requested by the judge of the respondent court to sit in the trial of said cause. The cause having been tried, findings of fact, conclusions of law, and judgment against petitioner and in favor of the defendants were filed, entered, and docketed. Thereupon the following proceedings were had: July 12, 1910, notice of motion for a new trial was filed by the petitioner here (plaintiff in said action); July 14, 1910, cost bill and notice of judgment were filed; August 9, 1910, stipulation filed, extending time to prepare statement on motion for a new trial to September 11, 1910; October 21, 1910, plaintiff was granted 30 days, in addition to the time allowed by law, in which to serve statement on motion for a new trial; November 29, 1910, statement on motion for a new trial filed; December 5, 1910, proposed amendments to statement filed; June 20, 1911, motion to dismiss proceedings in the matter of the settlement of the statement on motion for a new trial for want of due diligence in presenting the same for settlement; June 23, 1911, motion to dismiss proceedings in re statement on motion for a new trial was argued, submitted, and taken under advisement, and on July 8, 1911, the court filed its written opinion granting said motion. On August 1, 1911, a writ of possession was issued on the judgment, and the petitioner was, by virtue thereof, dispossessed of the disputed property.

The petition alleges that petitioner was given no notice of the judgment in said action, "and was unable to prepare an appeal in said cause;" that therefore "the court was without jurisdiction to issue a writ of possession," etc. The prayer of the petition asks that a review be had by this court of the proceedings leading to the issuance of the writ of possession, and that said writ and "all proceedings herein be annulled" and set aside as in excess of the jurisdiction of the court.

It is plainly manifest that, under the circumstances as revealed by the record before us, an appeal court would be powerless to now afford petitioner relief in any event, much less that asked for in this proceeding.

[1] According to the petition, the judgment, as we have seen, was entered on July 12, 1910. On the same day, according to the records of the cause (the documents and papers filed therein having been introduced and received in evidence in this proceeding), notice of entry of said judgment was served on the petitioner; the sheriff having made a return of such service on said day, with the petitioner's acknowledgment of service, over his signature, indorsed on said notice. On said July 12, 1910, the petitioner served and filed a notice of intention to move for a new trial. On the 29th day of November, 1910, the petitioner, as seen, served and filed his proposed statement. On December 5, 1910, the defendants in said cause served and filed proposed amendments to said statement. No further steps of any character seem to have been taken in the cause until the 20th day of June, 1911—15 days beyond 6 months after the proposed amendments to the statement were served on petitioner and filed—when the defendants served upon the petitioner a notice of a motion to dismiss the notice of motion for a new trial, or the proceedings looking to a settlement of the statement on motion for a new trial, on the ground of the "inexcusable neglect and failure of plaintiff to engross, present for settlement, have settled, and otherwise proceed in the matter of his appeal." Said motion was noticed for the 23d day of June, 1911. As seen, the court, after hearing argument on said motion, granted the same.

On said 23d day of June, 1911, the petitioner filed a document, evidently prepared by himself, designated a "Notice of Appeal for Transfer from Tehama County to Sacramento, California." This document contains a statement that the plaintiff (petitioner) "appears and asks the superior court of the county of Tehama, state of California, to transfer" the action to Sacramento county. It is probable that the petitioner thus sought to notice an appeal to this court from the final judgment, but it is obvious that, even if the notice had been sufficient in form, he was entirely too late for such an appeal; the judgment having been, as we have shown, entered on July 12, 1910—nearly a year before the filing of said notice. Section 939, Code Civ. Proc.

From the foregoing statement, involving a brief history of the cause giving rise to this petition, it will readily be observed that petitioner wholly fails to present a case here which calls for or would justify the interposition of the extraordinary remedy which he seeks to invoke. That petitioner was guilty of inexcusable negligence in the matter of preparing the necessary record upon which to press his motion for a new trial, no one who knows anything about such matters will have the temerity to deny. Section 659, subd. 3, Code Civ. Proc. That it was within the jurisdiction of the court to entertain and decide the motion to dismiss the proceedings on the settlement of the statement is equally clear and incontrovertible.

[2] A writ of review will lie only where "an inferior tribunal, board or officer, exercising judicial functions has exceeded the jurisdiction of such tribunal, board or officer, and there is no appeal, nor in the judgment of the court, any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy." The order granting the motion to dismiss the proceedings referred to is a special order, made after final judgment, and from which an appeal may be taken. Section 939, subd. 3, Code Civ. Proc. It is therefore manifestly true that petitioner had a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy by appeal from said order, which he could have taken within 60 days after the same was entered.

[3] The issuance of the writ of possession —in other words, the writ in execution of the judgment—was not the act of the court, but a mere ministerial act of the clerk of the court, whose duty it was to issue the writ upon the application of the defendants; the pendency of a motion for a new trial not operating to stay proceedings upon the judgment. People ex rel. Carpentier v. Loucks, 28 Cal. 69; Harris v. Barnhart, 97 Cal. 546, 32 Pac. 589; Knowles v. Thompson, 133 Cal. 245, 65 Pac. 468. Even if we were authorized by the record to order the proceedings on the judgment to be set aside—that is, to annul the act of the clerk of the court in issuing the writ of assistance—such an order could avail petitioner nothing, since he has lost his right to appeal from the judgment by neglecting to take such appeal within the time within which such appeals may be taken under the statute.

In justice to ourselves, it is but right to explain that the petitioner appeared in the application for the order to show cause herein in propria persona, and that his want of proficiency in the use of the English language made it doubtful to the members of the court, in the brief time to which we were limited in the examination of his petition, whether the alternative writ should issue or not. For that reason, we ordered the record, the review of which was prayed for, certified to this court.

We may well further explain that the petitioner came into this court to present his side of the controversy without the aid of counsel. It seems that he thus conducted the litigation in the court below. Indeed, it appears from the record before us that the learned trial judge repeatedly advised and besought him to secure counsel, and on one occasion ordered an adjournment of the trial, or some proceeding incidentally growing out of the trial, that he might do so. But, it seems, he paid no heed to the advice of the trial judge in that regard.

The petitioner is a man advanced in years, and is unable to speak our language so that he can be readily or well understood. Indeed, he was, at the hearing of this proceeding, unable to make himself understood by the justices, so imperfectly does he speak the English language. He does not pretend, however, to be versed in the law; and, even had he been able to make himself understood, it is very clear that he could have afforded no assistance to the court in the decision of the question submitted by his petition, assuming that the question so presented was one upon which there existed ground for legitimate controversy. These observations proceed from a conviction, based upon what we have seen of the petitioner, that he labors under the mistaken belief that there is merit in his asseverations that he has not been fairly treated in this litigation, and that he is just as capable of disclosing the errors, if any, upon which he bases his complaint and securing their correction as a lawyer would be. There can be no doubt that the petitioner honestly believes that he has not been justly treated in the decision by which the proceedings on the settlement of his proposed statement on motion for a new trial were dismissed, and he therefore deprived of the opportunity to appeal from the order denying him a new trial, had such order, if the motion had been made, been entered against him. But such belief is, it is very plain from the record here, founded in and harbored by erroneous notions of the law; for there is absolutely no real or just ground for its support. But he would, indeed, be bereft of all feeling who would not sympathize in full measure with a litigant so unfortunate as to have permitted himself—not a lawyer, or at all familiar with the procedure by which the law must be uniformly administered—to become possessed of the belief that he could, with any hope of success, personally represent himself in important litigation, and that he could, unaided by one skilled in the technical and abstruse rules governing remedies and procedure, a clear comprehension of which often puzzles lawyers of no mean ability, preserve and protect all his rights in the action. The appearance of the venerable petitioner in this court, silently appealing for relief from what he has allowed himself to conceive to be an unjust judgment, was pathetic in the extreme, yet, even if his belief were well founded as to said judgment, this court is powerless to afford him any relief or aid to that end in this proceeding. Indeed, by his own negligence, according to the record here, he has lost all ground for hope of relief, if any he was entitled to, and we can see no other alternative for him but to submit to the mandates of the judgment.

The demurrer to the petition must be sustained, and the writ discharged.

It is so ordered.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

VALLEJO FERRY CO. v. LANG & McPHERSON. (Sac. 1,867.)

1. STATUTES (§ 76*)—SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

Special legislation not being prohibited under Constitution of 1849, the special charter of the city of Vallejo enacted in 1872, and conferring upon the city the authority to license ferries, was not invalid, although St. 1855, p. 183, incorporated in Pol. Code, §§ 2892, 2893, which was a general law, conferred authority upon the boards and county supervisors to license ferries.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 77½–78½; Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

2. STATUTES (§ 67*)—SPECIAL LEGISLATION — RETROSPECTIVE OPERATION OF CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION.

Const. 1879, art. 4, § 25, prohibiting local or special laws in the matter of licensing ferries, is prospective, and so special provisions in municipal charters relating to the licensing of ferries are affected only by subsequent general laws.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 69; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

3. FERRIES (§ 30*)—LICENSES.

Act Cong. Sept. 9, 1850, c. 50, § 3, 9 Stat. 452, providing that all navigable waters shall be common highways free to the inhabitants of the state, does not inhibit the licensing of ferries.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ferries, Cent. Dig. § 77; Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

4. FERRIES (§ 15*) — FRANCHISE — MODE OF GRANTING.

Where a city had the power to grant franchises for ferries, one operating a ferry without a franchise to the prejudice of a duly licensed ferry cannot attack the mode in which the city granted the franchise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ferries, Cent. Dig. §§ 34–37; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; A. J. Buckles, Judge.

Action by the Vallejo Ferry Company against Charles Lang and Adrian McPherson, doing business as Lang & McPherson. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appealed. Affirmed.

W. H. Morrissey, Keogh & Olds, and P. B. Lynch, for appellants. Frank R. Devlin and L. G. Harrier, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff was operating a ferry between the city of Vallejo and Mare Island by authority of a franchise granted to it by the city of Vallejo. Defendants began to operate an opposition ferry without any permit or franchise from any person whatsoever, and in violation of the terms of the franchise granted by the city of Vallejo to the plaintiff. Thereupon the plaintiff sued and obtained an injunction against defendants, and from this judgment defendants appeal.

[1] Their varying contentions upon appeal all revolve about the central proposition that the city of Vallejo had no power to grant a franchise. Without regard to the question whether this defense may be asserted by defendants, who do not pretend to be operating under any franchise, license, or permit whatsoever, and who for aught that appears are violating the penal laws of the state in collecting ferry fares and tolls (Pen. Code, 386), upon the merits appellants' contention is unsound. The city of Vallejo was incorporated in 1872 by a charter which (section 10, subd. 13) conferred upon its board of trustees the power "to grant licenses and franchises in the manner provided by law for boards of supervisors of counties for constructing, keeping and taking tolls on roads, bridges, ferries, wharves, chutes and piers within the limits of said city of Vallejo." Appellants' argument is that, by the general law then upon the statute books, this power to grant ferry franchises was vested in the board of supervisors (Pol. Code, 2892, 2893); that these sections of the Political Code are, in effect, but re-enactments of the statute of 1855 (Stat. 1855, p. 183), which was a general law conferring authority upon the supervisors to establish ferries; that, therefore, there could be no valid special law authorizing the city of Vallejo to establish ferries even under the Constitution of 1849; and that the attempt so to do in the charter provision of the city of Vallejo is therefore void. The position is unsound. Under the Constitution of 1849, special legislation was not forbidden, nor was the conferring of special powers upon municipalities by their charters, even when a general law upon the same subject-matter stood upon the statute books. Smith v. Judge, 12th District, 17 Cal. 547; Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal. 379; S. F. v. Canavan, 42 Cal. 541; Ex parte Burke, 59 Cal. 6, 43 Am. Rep. 231; Nevada School Dist. v. Shoecraft, 88 Cal. 372, 26 Pac. 211; Wigmore v. Buel, 122 Cal. 144, 54 Pac. 600; People v. Levee Dist. No. 6, 131 Cal. 30, 63 Pac. 676.

[2] The provision in the Constitution of 1879 forbidding local or special laws in enumerated cases, and in particular (article 4, subd. 25) in the matter of "chartering or licensing ferries, bridges or roads," was prospective and did not operate to destroy the force of existing special laws. Such special laws or provisions in municipal charters became subject only to the general laws subsequently passed by the Legislature touching the same subject-matter. 591, 8 Pac. 311; Rollins v. Wright, 93 Cal. 395, 29 Pac. 58, and cases supra. Ex parte Helm, 143 Cal. 555, 77 Pac. 453, relied upon by appellants, reaffirms the established doctrine to this effect, and declares that cities or towns existing under special acts of the Legislature at the time the Constitution of 1879 went into effect continued to exist under such acts until they elect to organize under the general laws provided by the Legislature for that purpose. Such cases as Kennedy v. Board of Education, 82 Cal. 492, 22 Pac. 1042, People v. Henshaw, 76 Cal. 436, 18 Pac. 413, and Ex parte Ah You, 82 Cal. 339, 22 Pac. 929, dealt with the effect upon special charters of general laws passed after the adoption of the Constitution, and have no bearing upon the question under consideration.

[3] Appellants point out that the act of Congress of September 9, 1850, admitting California into the Union as a state, provides that: "All the navigable waters within said state shall be common highways, and forever free as well to the inhabitants of the said state as to the citizens of the United States." The argument founded upon this seems to be that to require a franchise or a permit for the conduct of a ferry upon such waters is an invasion of the right of free navigation and in violation of the act of Congress. The proposition is, of course, absolutely untenable (Cardwell v. American Bridge Co., 113 U. S. 205, 5 Sup. Ct. 423, 28 L. Ed. 959), but is mentioned only in conformance with our practice to make recognition of any federal question that is presented.

[4] The city of Vallejo having the power to grant this ferry franchise, and having in fact granted it, these appellants cannot be heard to attack the method adopted by the city in so doing. It matters not, therefore, whether the Broughton act (Stats. 1893, p. 288) is or is not applicable to the disposition of a ferry franchise in the city of Vallejo, or that in fact the city in granting the franchise sold it to the highest bidder. Norris v. Farmers' & Teamsters' Co., 6 Cal. 590, 65 Am. Dec. 535; Chard v. Stone, 7 Cal. 117; Kansas, etc., Ry. Co., v. Kans., etc., Ry. Co., 129 Mo. 62, 31 S. W. 451; Owens v. Roberts, 6 Bush (Ky.) 608.

The errors at law occurring in the course of the trial of which complaint is made have to do with the introduction of evidence touching the questions herein discussed. It is unnecessary to set them forth at length. Suffice it to say that the court's rulings were in consonance with the views here expressed as to the power of the municipality to grant the franchise in question, and were therefore sound.

For these reasons, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

HUDGENS v. CHAMBERLAIN et al.

(S. F. 5,322.)

1. Corporations (§ 123*)—Pledge of Stock—Sale by Pledgee—Breach of Duty.

Though one to whom property is pledged as security for debt, with general powers to sell it any time after default and himself purchase it, may sell it any time thereafter, though the market be depressed, so long as the sale be fair and bona fide, notwithstanding this may enable him to buy it at a temporarily low price, yet his power must be exercised in good faith to obtain what the stock is worth at the time of sale, so that he and another separate and independent pledgee of the same kind of stock having conspired to jointly put it on the market in such large quantities as to create a panic and force down the price, and thus buy it at less than its true value, they having done so are liable to him for the damage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 509; Dec. Dig. § 123;* Pledges, Cent. Dig. §§ 152-170.]

2. Parties (§ 27*)—Joinder.

Where persons to whom plaintiff separately pledged stock conspired, in selling it on default, to jointly place it on the market in such large quantities as to create a panic and force down the market, and thus buy it at less than its value, and they so acted, with such result, he may join them in the same action; his damage being from their joint action.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by A. L. Hudgens against F. O. Chamberlain and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Campbell, Metson, Drew, Oatman & Mackenzie, for appellant. Morrison & Brobeck and Morrison, Cope & Brobeck (Edward Hohfeld, of counsel), for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment entered in favor of defendants on demurrer sustained to the amended complaint of the plaintiff.

The second amended complaint alleged that plaintiff was indebted to F. O. Chamberlain on a promissory note in the sum of $12,000, and that, as collateral security for the payment of said note, plaintiff pledged to said Chamberlain 5,000 shares of the capital stock of the Florence-Goldfield Mining Company, under a written contract authorizing Chamberlain, at any time after default in the payment of said note, to sell said stock, or any part thereof, at public or private sale, without notice to plaintiff, and apply the proceeds to the payment of the indebtedness due on said note; that plaintiff was also indebted to defendant William Hinkel on two several promissory notes, executed at different times, each in the sum of $10,000, and that, as collateral security for the payment of each of said notes, plaintiff pledged to William Hinkel 5,000 shares of the capital stock of the said Florence-Goldfield Mining Company, respectively (or 10,000 shares for the two notes), under a contract similar in its terms to that executed in favor of Chamberlain and above referred to; that said Chamberlain and said William Hinkel, respectively, held said shares of stock pledged to them as collateral security under said contracts for the payment of their said respective notes until October 12, 1907; that a long time prior thereto, and on said latter date, said stock had been and was listed on the San Francisco Stock Exchange Board; that there existed an active daily demand therefor at prices ranging from $3 to $4 per share during said time, and that shares were daily sold and purchased at said figures, the number of shares, however, sold and purchased daily in said board seldom exceeding 4,000 shares.

It is then alleged, as the gist of plaintiff's cause of action, that on or about the said 12th day of October, 1907, "the said defendants, F. O. Chamberlain and William Hinkel, for the purpose of cheating and defrauding said plaintiff, and for the purpose of enriching themselves at the expense of said plaintiff, fraudulently conspired together and collusively agreed that they would, on the said 12th day of October, 1907, in the said stock and exchange board, offer for sale the said shares of stock so pledged to them, as aforesaid, in quantities greater than the same could be sold at the then ruling market price, to wit, the sum of $3 per share under the then existing daily demands therefor in said stock and exchange board, and thereby create a panic in said stock and exchange board in connection with said shares of stock and with sales thereof, and thereby depreciate the then existing market value thereof, to wit, the said sum of $3 per share, and by reason of such panic and consequent depreciation of said market value purchase the same at greatly reduced rates from those for which the same were then and there being daily sold, to wit, the said sum of $3 per share, and that the said defendants did, on the said 12th day of October, 1907, offer for sale in said stock and exchange board the said shares of stock, as aforesaid, in such quantities, and did create a panic in connection therewith in the said stock and exchange board, and did, by reason thereof, depreciate the price of the said stock at said time from $3 per share to about the average sum of $2 per share, and that at the said time there was sold by the said defendants for their joint account about 11,900 shares of said capital stock for the sum of $24,560, the said sum being an amount about $11,140 less than the said market value of said shares in said stock and exchange board at said time, and at which the same were being sold and had been sold for on the preceding day and at the opening of the said stock and exchange board on the said day, all of which was done in pursuance of said fraudulent conspiracy and collusive agreement of the said defendants to have the said stock depreciated in value and sold at depreciated prices, and for the purpose of enriching themselves at the expense of said plaintiff by a purchase of said stock at such depreciated prices, and not for the purpose of securing to them the payment of the said promissory notes, or any part thereof, and that at the said sales the said defendants purchased jointly the greater portion of the said 11,900 shares of stock to and for their own use and benefit;" that, by reason of said conspiracy and collusion and fraudulent agreement, and through said fraudulent sales and purchases, plaintiff suffered damage in the sum of $11,140, for which he prayed judgment.

A demurrer to the complaint was interposed by defendants and sustained, and this appeal involves solely the correctness of the ruling of the superior court in that respect.

[1] The position of respondents in support of the ruling of the lower court sustaining their demurrer is, as stated in their brief, that reliance is placed by appellant on his right of recovery solely upon the facts alleged, namely, that, in the exercise of a perfectly lawful power of sale and the consequent putting of the pledged property upon the market for sale, the price theretofore prevailing was lowered, and the property bid in at a price of about $2 per share, instead of the price of $3 theretofore prevailing, accompanied with the further allegation that these things were done with the selfish intention upon the part of respondents to profit by their acts, and that these acts resulted in damage to the plaintiff. And it is claimed that, as the allegations of the complaint showed that the defendants were exercising lawful rights in making the sale in a lawful way, the facts alleged, that their lawful acts and lawful method of sale were with the intention of bidding in the stock for themselves at a reduced rate, do not make their conduct actionable, relying on Boyson v. Thorn, 98 Cal. 578, 33 Pac. 492, 21 L. R. A. 233, People v. Schmitz, 7 Cal. App. 330, 94 Pac. 407, 419, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 717, and Parkinson v. Building Trades Council, 154 Cal. 581, 98 Pac. 1027, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 550, the principle of which cases is that, where a party is exercising an absolute legal right, such exercise cannot be considered as wrongful or actionable, merely because a malicious motive or intent may have prompted its exercise. If the allegations of the complaint amounted to nothing more than the construction placed on them by respondents, there could be no question of the correctness of their position in support of the ruling on the demurrer.

It is, of course, well settled that a pledgee, under such contracts as are shown here, may sell the property pledged in satisfaction of the pledges, and purchase the same at the sale thereof; the only requirement being that the sale shall be fair and bona fide. After default, he has a lawful right to sell them at any time, and as long as the sale is made at market prices the mere fact that they are sold in an unfavorable condition of the market, and consequently bring a low price, affords no ground for complaint on the part of the pledgor. The pledgee is under no obligation to take any chances on the market, or wait for a more favorable one than exists when he elects to sell. If any limitation was to be placed upon the condition of the market at which the sales of the pledged property were to be made after default, the pledgor should have provided for this in his contract. Having failed to do so, when the lawful right to sell has accrued, the pledgee may dispose of the pledges at market rates, no matter what the condition of the market may be; nor will it be of any moment that by selling the stock on a depressed market he is afforded an opportunity of purchasing the property at the rates then happening to prevail, and which may be the result only of a temporary depression of the market.

But we do not construe the complaint as alleging facts showing simply that the defendants, upon the default of the plaintiff, proceeded merely to exercise their legal rights to sell the stock in the then condition of the market, unaffected by any action on their part. On the contrary it appears from the allegations of the complaint that these defendants held their stock independently of each other, and each block of stock as a separate pledge for the payment of their individual notes, and they collusively agreed to jointly offer for sale the separate shares of stock pledged to each, with the sole purpose of thereby depreciating the value of the stock in the then existing market, thereby creating a panic, and as a result thereof lessening the value of the stock, so as to be able to purchase it at greatly reduced figures; and that they did so. We think this clearly states a cause of action.

The relation existing between parties to a transaction, where collateral is placed in the hands of the pledgee as security for the payment of a debt, with power of sale in case of default, is in the nature of a trust relation. The responsibility of the pledgee to the pledgor is similar to that of a trustee; he holds the stock for specific purposes, namely, to return it to the pledgor, should the indebtedness it is given to secure be paid, or, if, under a power of sale, it is disposed of, to pay over to the pledgor any surplus which may remain; and, as an incident to such trust relation, the power of sale which is vested in the pledgee must be exercised with ordinary care and prudence and in good faith for the benefit of both the pledgor and the pledgee, and to obtain what the stock is worth at the time the pledgee concludes to sell it. Jones on Pledges and Collateral Security, subd. 631b, p. 679; German American State Bank v. Spokane, etc., R. & N. Co., 49 Wash. 359, 95 Pac. 261; Newsome v. Davis, 133 Mass. 343; Napier v. Central Georgia Bank, 68 Ga. 637.

And where, as in the agreement at bar, a general power to sell at any time, without notice, is given, and the right to purchase at such a sale conferred on the pledgee, it is no answer to a complaint that the sale was made without due regard to the rights of the pledgee to say that a literal compliance with the terms of the power were carried out, because, no matter to what extent unlimited power to deal with the pledged property is given, the law implies, from the relation of the parties, that these powers shall be exercised in good faith, and with due regard to the interests of the pledgee. The fact, too, that under our Code the contract of pledge may provide for the purchase of the pledged property by the pledgee himself, which was not permitted at common law, affords an additional reason why the pledgee is to be held to the strictest good faith in dealing with the pledged property.

In the matter at bar, either one of the defendants, under the general power to sell the stock pledged to him, might have made a sale of it in the open market, or at private sale at market rates, at any time after default of the pledgor. Neither was required to wait for a more favorable market than existed when the power of sale was exercised, and if the market happened then to be depreciated he was under no obligation to wait for a more favorable one, and if the effect of selling upon the then existing market was to permit him to purchase the stock at figures less than prior or subsequent market rates, and his motive in selling at the time was to purchase the stock at the then prevailing rates, this could afford no ground of complaint by the pledgor, because the pledgee had done nothing to depreciate the market, but took it as he found it when he had a right to exercise his power of sale and his equally legal right to become a purchaser with any other bidder at market rates.

But this is not the situation made by the complaint. Here the respondents had no pledges of the stock for their joint benefit, but as independent pledgees. Each was under both a legal and moral obligation to deal with the pledged stocks in good faith, and to exercise reasonable care and prudence to obtain as near their value upon a sale as they were worth. Instead of doing this, it is alleged that they entered into a collusive agreement, whereby they should deal jointly with the stock held by them independently, not for the purpose of securing by a sale thereof payment of the indebtedness due on their respective promissory notes, but so as to afford an opportunity to purchase the stock for their own benefit and advantage at the expense of the plaintiff; that in order to accomplish this they secretly agreed that they would place on the market the stock held independently by them as pledgees in such large quantities as would create a panic and depreciate the ordinary market value of the stock, and thereby force the ruling price down, so that they might become purchasers of it; that they placed the stock on the market for that purpose; and that it had the effect intended. These allegations show that the defendants were not attempting to proceed in a lawful manner to assert their legal rights as pledgees. Their legal duty was to proceed in good faith to acquire the best obtainable price for the pledged stock, and, while they owed no duty to the plaintiff to wait for a stronger market than existed when they elected to sell, they did owe him the duty of taking no joint measures to purposely create a weak one, and when they secretly joined their forces, combined their stock, held independently, and unloaded it on the market in quantities larger than they knew the market could sustain, with the intention and for the purpose of depreciating its value, and thereby enabling them to purchase it for their own benefit, they were not acting in good faith, nor with regard to the rights of the plaintiff, but in violation of their obligation to him; and for the damage which plaintiff sustained thereby an action will lie, and the complaint in that respect sufficiently stated a cause of action.

[2] While there can be no doubt from the discussion in the briefs that the demurrer was sustained by the trial court on the ground that it stated no cause of action, it is further insisted by respondents that if this point was not well taken the demurrer was nevertheless properly sustained for various special grounds of attack made on the complaint. As one of these, it is claimed that the defendants were improperly joined as parties. There is no force in this. The defendants are charged in the complaint with having conspired together to violate their duties to plaintiff with reference to the pledged property, and that, as a result of their joint action in this respect, plaintiff sustained the damage complained of. Hence they were properly joined as defendants. The other claim, that the complaint is in certain respects ambiguous and uncertain, we do not think tenable.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

1. Appeal and Error (§ 878*) — Questions Reviewable — Party Entitled to Complain.

Where, in a suit to quiet title to a placer mining claim, the court found that neither party owned the land, or any part thereof, and plaintiff appealed from the judgment entered and from an order denying a new trial, defendant, who did not appeal, could not attack the findings and conclusions of law as to the land claimed by him.

2. Mines and Minerals (§ 38*)—Quieting Title to Mining Claims—Stipulations.

Parties in a suit to quiet title to a placer mining claim may stipulate as to their conflicting rights, but they may not, by stipulation, relieve themselves from proving at the trial that they made a discovery of gold, either in placer, or in veins, or lodes in the land, as contemplated by the federal statutes; and a plaintiff, in a suit to quiet title to a placer mining claim, who bases his claim on his mining location, must show a discovery of gold sufficient to satisfy the federal statutes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

3. Mines and Minerals (§ 17*) — Mining Claims—Discovery.

Discovery is the source of a miner's title, and is an essential requisite to a valid location, and must precede the location, and this rule applies alike to lode and placer locations, and, as far as the character of the deposits will admit, the principles governing lodes apply to placers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. §§ 24–28; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

4. Mines and Minerals (§ 38*)—Mining Location—Discovery—Requisites.

Whether a discovery sufficient for a valid mining location under the federal statutes has been made is for the jury, under the instructions of the court that there must be such a discovery of mineral as will give reasonable evidence of the fact, either that there is a vein or lode carrying the mineral, or, where it is claimed as a placer ground, that it is valuable for such mining.

sition to attack the findings and conclusions of law respecting the land claimed by them. Trevaskis v. Peard, 111 Cal. 599, 44 Pac. 246.

Appellants contend that they made sufficient proof of location and of discovery of gold. There was evidence that they made a location of the ground about August 22, 1908, by staking the corners, posting notice, and having the land surveyed. There was no evidence that they marked the boundaries of the claim, so as to be readily traced. The notice of location was duly recorded August 24, 1908. The action was commenced February 6, 1909.

The proof of work done or discovery of gold on the claim by plaintiffs is slight, and is as follows: Plaintiff Garibaldi testified: "Q. You were present in assisting and prospecting the claim and taking samples out? A. Yes, sir. Q. Just describe what you did. A. Just took two pans of dirt and prospected them one at each place, two places. Q. That was before you located there? A. Yes, sir. Q. You found gold? A. (The witness nodded his head.) Q. Have you ever prospected the ground before? A. No, sir. Q. You know that it had gold, from other parties telling you, in paying quantities? A. Yes, sir."

On cross-examination, he testified: "I did not do any work on this claim. I did not see any old corner with sticks. I did not know Skinner. I knew Christensen. I did not know that any man was in possession of this claim. There is no gravel on the surface. I saw lava on the ground; it is hard lava. I do not know how deep it is. I do not know if it is 15 feet deep. I do not know if it is 50 feet deep in some places. There was gravel on the rims. I mean by rims the place between the bedrock and the surface. There is water on the dirt in the winter."

Plaintiffs rested on this proof, but in rebuttal plaintiff Devencenzi testified: "I have been frequently over the ground for several years before we located it. Our location called for 30 acres. No one was in possession of the ground at the time of our location. There was evidence of mining having been done years ago in the gulch that goes through the land, but no evidence of any recent work whatever. We put our notice of location in a box that was nailed to a tree."

Plaintiffs say in their brief: "It is not claimed that, prior to making the location under consideration, plaintiffs actually discovered gold in paying quantities upon the claim located. Appellants contend that such a discovery was not necessary." Furthermore, that the fact that the parties "entered into a stipulation at the outset of the trial that the land in controversy is unpatented placer mineral land of the United States dispensed with any necessity for proof regarding the formation and peculiar characteristics of the particular district in which the claim is located."

[2] The stipulation referred to was "that the land in controversy is unpatented placer mineral land of the United States." The parties were competent to stipulate as to their contending and conflicting rights, but they could not by stipulation, relieve themselves from proving at the trial that they had made a discovery of gold, either in placers, or in veins, or lodes, in the land, as contemplated by the laws of the United States. Chrisman v. Miller, 197 U. S. 313, 25 Sup. Ct. 468, 49 L. Ed. 770. Plaintiffs do not pretend to have established their right to the land otherwise than by virtue of their mining location. As they had until the end of the year 1909 to do the assessment work, it was not necessary to make such proof at the trial, but it was necessary to show that they had made a discovery of gold, such as would satisfy the statute.

[3] Discovery is the source of the miner's title, is an essential requisite to a valid location, and must precede the location, and the rule applies alike to lode and placer locations. 1 Lindley on Mines, §§ 335 and 337, and cases cited in notes. So far as the character of the deposits will admit, the principles governing lodes apply with equal force to placers. Id.

[4] No arbitrary rule as to what will constitute a sufficient discovery can be stated which will govern all cases, either in respect of lodes or placers. This is an illustration of the innumerable instances where the courts must, by the application of the rule of reason, determine what the Legislature has failed to define, or finds itself incapable of defining. And hence whether a discovery has been made is a question of fact for the jury to determine, under the guidance of the court. The United States statute does not prescribe what is necessary to constitute a discovery, but there have been many judicial declarations in relation thereto, not always, it must be admitted, free from conflict. Differences, however, may be traced rather to the conflicting peculiarities of the cases than to any substantial difference in respect of certain essential requisites. In the case, supra, reported in 197 U. S., 25 Sup. Ct., 49 L. Ed., some definitions are found as given by that court. The case went up on writ of error from the Supreme Court of this state, where it is reported in 140 Cal. 440, 73 Pac. 1083, 74 Pac. 444, 98 Am. St. Rep. 63. It was there held, as to oil, that to constitute a discovery "the law requires something more than conjecture, hope, or even indications. The geological formation of the country may be such as scientific research and practical experience have shown to be likely to yield oil in paying quantities. Taken with this there may be other surface indications, such as seepage of oil. All of these things combined may be sufficient to justify expectation and hope that, upon driving a well to sufficient depth, oil may be discovered, but, one and all, they do not, in and of themselves, amount to a discovery." The Supreme Court of the United States affirmed this judgment, and from the opinion we quote: "There must be such a discovery of mineral as gives reasonable evidence of the fact, either that there is a vein or lode carrying the precious mineral, or, if it be claimed as placer ground, that it is valuable for such mining." The court quotes the definition given by the United States Land Department as follows: "Where minerals have been found, and the evidence is of such a character that a person of ordinary prudence would be justified in the further expenditure of his labor and means, with a reasonable prospect of success, in developing a valuable mine, the requirements of the statute have been met."

[5] Tested by these principles, we cannot say that the learned trial court was without warrant in holding that plaintiffs fell short, in their evidence, of meeting the statutory requirements as to a discovery of valuable minerals. It is only necessary to turn back and read the evidence of plaintiff Garibaldi to confirm the conclusion reached by the trial court. He testified: "Just took two pans of dirt and prospected them one at each place, two places. Q. You found gold? A. (The witness nodded his head.)" He had never before prospected the ground, and only knew from hearsay that the ground contained gold in paying quantities. He "saw lava on the ground," but did not know its depth: "There was gravel on the rims, * * * the place between the bedrock and the surface. There is no gravel on the surface." He does not state where on the claim he took the two pans of gravel. Plaintiff Devencenzi testified that "there was evidence of mining having been done years ago in the gulch that goes through the land, but no evidence of any recent work whatever." He does not state whether this gulch cut through the lava; nor does he state that any gold was found in this gulch. It is common knowledge that in this state, where a lava flow is found inclosed by walls of bedrock, an ancient channel is usually found underneath the lava. And gold is often, but not always, found in such channels in paying quantities. Here, however, we have no description of the ground indicating a flow of lava through an old channel. The evidence is wholly insufficient, it seems to us, to show that plaintiffs made a "discovery," within the meaning of the mining laws.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

1. Limitation of Actions (§ 13*)—Estoppel to Rely on Limitations.

A maker of a note, who, before the running of limitations, obtains an extension of the time of payment, is estopped from availing himself of the defense of limitations, though the extension indorsed on the note was not signed by him.

2. Limitation of Actions (§ 145*)—Extension of Time—Consideration.

An increased rate of interest, to be paid by the maker of a note to the payee, and the payee's promise to forbear suing on the note, constitute a sufficient consideration for a contract to extend the time of payment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Action by V. Quanchi against the Ben Lomond Wine Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wyckoff & Gardner, for appellant. James A. Hall and Netherton & Torchiana, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal on the judgment roll, without a bill of exceptions, from a money judgment in favor of plaintiff. The complaint was in two counts, and the question raised in this appeal concerns only the first count. In that count it is alleged, and the court found, that on September 3, 1902, the defendant executed and delivered its promissory note to the plaintiff, by the terms of which it promised to pay to the plaintiff, 90 days from said date, the sum of $1,462.31. "That thereafter, and at the request of defendant, and for its benefit, the following indorsements were made on the back of said instrument, to wit: "Dec. 5, 1902. Recd. on account of principal $500. Dec. 5, 1902. Extension of this note and payment for the same is extended for one year from date to be due and payable at the rate of 8 per cent int. until paid on or before Dec. 5th, 1903, for the balance due on this note, and this note is not transferable to anyone, and payment for same only to be made to me personally. V. Quanchi." The complaint further alleged, and the court found, that, by virtue of the terms of said note, the defendant promised to pay plaintiff the amount therein specified, but that no part thereof has been paid except the said sum of $500, leaving due and unpaid from defendant to plaintiff the sum of $963.31, with interest thereon at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum from the 5th day of December, 1902. The defendant, in addition to a specific denial of the allegations of the complaint, pleaded that the cause of action was barred by subdivision 1 of section 337, and subdivision 1 of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The action was commenced on December 4, 1907. Defendant claims that the indorsement on the back of the note, not having been signed by it, does not come within the provisions of section 360 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that therefore the statute of limitations has run. Section 360 reads as follows: "No acknowledgment or promise is sufficient evidence of a new or continuing contract, by which to take the case out of the operation of this title, unless the same is contained in some writing, signed by the party to be charged thereby."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[1] We think, however, that the facts of this case do not involve the question of a new promise or acknowledgment which section 360 requires to be writing; but the question involved is whether the defendant, having induced the plaintiff to make said indorsement on the note, and thus to suspend any action against it for one year, is not estopped from availing himself of the statute of limitations. We think it is.

In most of the adjudicated cases of this character, where the doctrine of estoppel in pais is invoked, the question arose where there had been an express promise not to plead said statute; but in principle the same question is involved where the obligor, in the case of a written instrument, asks for and receives an extension of time, but fails to sign the agreement of extension made for his benefit and acted upon by the obligee. In both cases there is a request which is acted upon to the detriment of the party forbearing. As was said in Gaylord v. Van Loan, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 308, where there was an agreement not to plead the statute of limitations: "By pleading the invalidity of the extension the defendant is guilty of bad faith, and upon general principles should be estopped from availing himself of that defense. No one ought to be permitted to disregard his own deliberate lawful agreement to the injury of another. The principle which should debar the defendant from setting up the defense is a familiar one."

"When the act or promise of one man causes another to do or forbear to do something which he otherwise would have done, the other is estopped from taking advantage of the act or omission caused by his own act or promise." Cowart v. Perrine, 21 N. J. Eq. 101.

Here the request for an extension was made at the instance of the defendant. It was agreed to and acted upon by the plaintiff. The plea that such an extension is void is a fraud upon the plaintiff. Had the defendant not requested an extension, the plaintiff would have brought his suit in time.

In Smith v. Lawrence, 38 Cal. 24, 99 Am. Dec. 344, Smith, the payee of two notes, by a valid agreement in writing, signed by him only, promised the defendant, the payor, that he would forbear to sue or demand payment thereof until the happening of a particular event. The court held that the statute was suspended until the event occurred, and in so holding the court said: "No sufficient reason is suggested why the agreement is not valid. It is not necessary, as insisted by defendant, that he should have signed the agreement in order to render it valid, for the agreement did not provide that any act should be performed by him; but it is enough that it was binding upon the plaintiff. * * * Accepting the contract as valid and binding upon the plaintiff, it precluded him from suing upon the notes until the happening of the event mentioned in the contract. During that period his cause of action was suspended, and during the same period the statute of limitations did not run. * * * The payee of the notes is entitled to the full term of four years in which to commence his action, and the extension of the time for the payment of the notes did not deprive the payee of any portion of that time."

It has been held that where one has agreed to forbear in the prosecution of a suit about to expire under the statute of limitations, where the person liable had in a conversation, in consideration of such forbearance, promised to pay, such oral promise was binding. Said the court: "The conversation referred to occurred before the statute had run, and it was a distinct promise to pay in consideration that the plaintiff below would not sue. If, therefore, she relied upon this promise, if she was thereby lulled into security, and thus allowed the six years to go by before she commenced her suit, with what grace can the defendant now set up the statute? * * * Plaintiff relied and acted upon it; she has been misled to her injury; but for the defendant's promise she would have commenced her action before the six years had expired." Armstrong v. Levan, 109 Pa. 177, 1 Atl. 204. To the same effect is Bancroft v. Roberts, 91 N. C. 363. See, also, Quick v. Corlies, 39 N. J. Law, 11; Jordan v. Jordan, 85 Tenn. 561, 3 S. W. 896; Mann v. Cooper, 2 App. D. C. 226.

In State Loan, etc., v. Cochran, 130 Cal. 245, 62 Pac. 466, 600, the obligee refrained from bringing suit upon a certain obligation upon the written request of the obligors until the statute had operated. There the court held that request for delay was neither a promise nor acknowledgment of the debt, within the terms of section 360 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but nevertheless the statute of limitations could not be pleaded as a bar upon the principle of estoppel. Referring to section 360, the court said: "The statute refers only to two of the recognized means by which the operation of the statute may be avoided, namely, acknowledgments and promises, and to require these to be in writing; there is nothing in it to imply otherwise an intent to alter the law. But apart from the statute it has always been recognized law that if, pending the running of the statute, the time of payment is extended by the creditor with the assent of the debtor, the statute does not run during the time of the suspension; nor is it necessary that the contract extending the time for payment be signed by the debtor."

Here the court cites many authorities, among them the case of Bridges v. Stephens, 132 Mo. 538, 34 S. W. 555, which reviews the decisions in many jurisdictions, and holds, as correctly stated in the syllabus, that "an agreement by the debtor, before the debt is barred, not to plead the statute of limitations, need not be in writing; it not being an acknowledgment of the indebtedness or promise to pay within the meaning of" the statute.

In 1 Wood on Limitations (2d Ed.) § 76, it is said: "While a promise not to plead the statute, whether made before or after the debt is barred, does not amount to an acknowledgment thereof or a promise to pay it, yet if made before the debt is barred and in consideration of the forbearance to sue, and the creditor does forbear to sue upon the faith of the promise, it is binding upon the debtor, and at least has the effect to keep the debt on foot until the statutory period dated from such promise expired * * * by way of estoppel."

We have been cited to the case of Pena v. Vance, 21 Cal. 142, as opposing the right of plaintiff to recover, on the ground that the extension was not signed by the defendant. This case was decided in the early history of our jurisprudence, and has not since been cited or adopted by our courts, or any other court of last resort that we have been able to find; and, in view of the contrary expressions in subsequent cases in this state just referred to, it can hardly be relied on as a precedent. Furthermore, the question of estoppel was not raised in that case; the only point presented being the sufficiency of the indorsement of extension by the creditor.

[2] The increased rate of interest that the plaintiff was to receive and his promise to forbear constituted a sufficient consideration for the contract to extend the time of payment. State Loan, etc., v. Cochran, supra; Bridges v. Stephens, supra; Hobart v. Verrault, 74 App. Div. 444, 447, 77 N. Y. Supp. 483.

There is nothing in the point claimed by defendant that the action was commenced too late under the extension of time given for payment.

The judgment is affirmed.

HALL et al. v. WRIGHT. (Civ. 874.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 18, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 17, 1912.)

1. Deeds (§ 128*) — Estates Created — Remainders—Rule in Shelley's Case.

Where property is conveyed to a mother for life, with remainder to the heirs of her body, those interested in the remainder take by purchase, and not by inheritance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 413–415; Dec. Dig. § 128.*]

2. Deeds (§ 133*)—Estates Created—Remainders.

The remainder created by deed to one for life, with remainder to the heirs of her body, is a contingent interest future in character; and the person to whom and the time of the happening of the event on which it is limited to take effect are uncertain at the time of the execution of the deed.

3. Deeds (§ 133*) — Estates Created — Remainders.

The remainder created by a deed to one for life, with remainder to the heirs of her body, does not vest until the death of the life tenant, because she can have no heirs of her body prior to her death, and in the interval all her children may die, and the entire estate vest in unborn grandchildren.

4. Deeds (§ 133*) — Estates Created — Remainders.

The interests of unborn grandchildren in the contingent remainder created by deed to a mother for life, with remainder to the heirs of her body, are not void because of the impossibility of the contingency on which they are limited to take effect, nor can such interests be deemed as mere possibilities, as they do not depend on the law of succession to determine whether or not they will take effect; and they cannot be defeated by the testamentary or other act of the ancestor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

5. Deeds (§ 133*) — Interest Created — Remainders.

Civ. Code, § 694, declaring that a future interest is vested when there is a person in being who will have a right to the immediate possession of the property on the ceasing of the intermediate interest, does not apply to a future contingent remainder in unborn grandchildren of a grantee for life, with remainder to the heirs of her body.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

6. Deeds (§ 133*)—Interest Created—Remainders — "Vested Remainder" — "Contingent Remainder."

Where the preceding estate created by deed is limited, so as to determine on an event which must happen, and the remainder is so limited to a person in being, and ascertained, that the preceding estate may, by any means, determine before the expiration of the estate limited in remainder, the remainder is vested; but, where the preceding estate is limited, so as to determine only on an event which is uncertain and may never happen, or where the remainder is limited to a person not in being, or not ascertained, or when it is limited, so as to require the concurrence of some uncertain event, independent of the determination of the preceding estate and the duration of the estate limited in remainder, to give it a capacity of taking effect, the remainder is contingent.

7. DEEDS (§ 133*) — ESTATES CREATED — REMAINDERS — "VESTED REMAINDER" — "CONTINGENT REMAINDER"—"THEN."

Under a deed to a mother for life, "then" to the heirs of her body forever, the heirs take a future contingent, and not a vested, interest, within Civ. Code, §§ 694, 780, declaring that a future interest is vested when there is a person in being who will have a right to immediate possession on the ceasing of the precedent interest, and that when a remainder on an estate for life is not limited on a contingency defeating such precedent estate it is deemed to be intended to take effect only on the death of the taker; the word "then" referring to the time of the expiration of the life estate.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmett Seawell, Judge.

Action by M. Olive Hall and others against S. B. Wright. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed.

F. A. Cromwell, for appellant. T. J. Butts, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The action is for specific performance of a written contract for the purchase of a tract of land in Sonoma county. The facts are not disputed, and the only question of law presented is, as agreed by counsel, "whether or not the plaintiffs have a present title in fee in the lands involved which they can convey by deed to the defendant."

It is stipulated that on the 20th day of April, 1883, W. S. M. Wright was the owner in fee of the premises, and on that day he executed a deed thereof to Mrs. M. O. Hall "for the natural life of the said party of the second part, and then to the heirs of her body begotten forever." On said date Mrs. Hall had five living children, two of whom have since died, and two other children have since been born. The interests, if any, of the deceased children have been distributed to Mrs. Hall, and she and all the living children have joined in the deed which has been tendered to appellant. One of the said children is a minor, and Mrs. Hall has been appointed the guardian of his person and estate, and by an order of the superior court she had been authorized and directed to sell the minor's interest in the property.

Appellant states his case substantially as follows: Section 779 of the Civil Code provides: "When a remainder is limited to the heirs of the body of a person to whom a life estate in the same property is given, the persons, who, on the termination of the life estate, are the successors or heirs of the body of the owner for life, are entitled to take by virtue of the remainder so limited to them and not as mere successors of the owner for life." In other words, the remaindermen take, so it is asserted, as purchasers under the deed, and not as heirs of the life tenant. Section 780 of the same Code is: "When a remainder in an estate for life or for years is not limited on a contingency defeating or avoiding such precedent estate, it is to be deemed intended to take effect only on the death of the first taker, or the expiration, by lapse of time, of such term of years." It is contended, therefore, that since the life estate vested by the deed in Mrs. Hall was not to be defeated or avoided by any contingency, by the operation of the above section, it follows that the estates of the remaindermen are not to be deemed to take effect until the death of Mrs. Hall. There are no words in the grant that preclude the application of the said provision of the Code. Hence no "heirs of the body" of Mrs. Hall have any vested interest in the land. The two deceased children had no interest, and therefore Mrs. Hall took no interest from them. They who take the remainder in fee will be those who are the "heirs of the body" of Mrs. Hall at the time of her death. It would follow that if one of the children of Mrs. Hall should die prior to the latter's death, leaving a child, such child would take an interest in fee as a remainderman, although the parent of such child in his lifetime and the lifetime of Mrs. Hall had attempted to convey his interest. If all of the children of Mrs. Hall and all their issue were dead at the time of the termination of the life estate, the remainder would revert, under the deed, to W. S. M. Wright; but since he has died it would vest in his heirs or devisees. The conclusion is that the children of Mrs. Hall have no present interest in the lands; hence their deed conveys nothing, and the deed of M. O. Hall can convey only her life estate.

On the other hand, respondents cite section 690 of the Civil Code, providing that, "A future interest entitles the owner to the possession of the property only at a future period," and section 694 of the same Code to the effect that, "A future interest is vested when there is a person in being who would have a right defeasible or indefeasible to the immediate possession of the property upon the ceasing of the intermediate or precedent estate," and contend "that under these two sections the interest which the heirs of M. O. Hall would take in the property would be a vested future interest, because at the time said deed was made there were persons in being who would have the right indefeasible to immediate possession of the property upon the ceasing of the life estate of said M. O. Hall." It is also declared that the general rule is that, "in the absence of the contrary intention, a remainder limited to a class vests in such of the objects as are in esse and answer the description at the death of the testator, if they take by will, or upon the execution of the deed, if they take by deed, subject to open and let in any that may be afterwards born before the determination of the particular estate." A large number of cases is cited in support of the foregoing rule.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It is also claimed that the word "heirs," as used in the deed, should be construed to mean "children," for the reason that under this construction alone is it possible to give effect to the whole of the deed. For the general rule is that a conveyance to the "heirs" of a living person is void for uncertainty, as before his death it cannot be ascertained who will be his heirs; but, if the grantor means "children" when he uses the word "heirs," the uncertainty is avoided. Under the foregoing view, it is claimed that the whole of the fee is vested, since the age of the life tenant, as stipulated by the parties, precludes the possibility of the birth of another heir.

[1-5] The case, however, of County of Los Angeles v. Winans, 13 Cal. App. 234, 109 Pac. 640, not cited by either party, is directly in point, and seems altogether decisive of the controversy. In the opinion in that case, the subject involved herein received very careful consideration; and it was held, as stated in the syllabus, substantially in the language of the court that: "When property in this state is conveyed to a mother for life, with remainder to the heirs of her body, those interested in the remainder take by purchase, and not by inheritance. Such remainder is a contingent interest, future in character, and the person to whom and the time of the happening of the event upon which it is limited to take effect were both uncertain at the time of its creation. Since the uncertainties at the time of the creation of the contingent remainder continue to exist until the death of the life tenant, it did not and could not vest until her death, because she could have no 'heirs of the body' prior to her decease. In the interval all her children may die, and the entire estate might vest wholly in her unborn grandchildren. The interests of unborn grandchildren in the contingent remainder are not void because of the impossibility of the contingency on which they are limited to take effect; nor can such interests be regarded as mere possibilities, such as the expectancy of an heir apparent, as they do not depend upon the law of succession to determine whether or not they will take effect, and they cannot be defeated by the testamentary or other act of the ancestor. Section 694 of the Civil Code, relating to a vested future interest 'in a living person,' has no application to a future contingent remainder in unborn grandchildren."

[6] In discussing this section of the Code, the court said that it was in effect the enactment into a statute of the rule laid down in Fearne on Contingent Remainders and Executory Devises (Butler's 6th Ed. p. 216), and should be read in connection with the language of Fearne, which immediately follows it, to wit: "In short, upon a careful attention to this subject, we shall find that wherever the preceding estate is limited, so as to determine on an event which must certainly happen, and the remainder is so limited to a person in esse, and ascertained, that the preceding estate may, by any means, determine before the expiration of the estate limited in remainder, such remainder is vested. On the contrary, wherever the preceding estate is limited, so as to determine only on an event which is uncertain and may never happen, or wherever the remainder is limited to a person not in esse, or not ascertained, or whenever it is limited, so as to require the concurrence of some dubious uncertain event, independent of the determination of the preceding estate and duration of the estate limited in remainder, to give it a capacity of taking effect, then the remainder is contingent." The views of the court in the said Los Angeles case, in which a rehearing was denied by the Supreme Court, are entirely in accord with the contentions of appellant here.

[7] It seems impossible to make any distinction between the deed in that case and the one to be construed by us. By placing in juxtaposition the expressions limiting the estates, we can see that they are almost identical, and must receive the same interpretation. In the former, the deed conveyed the lands to Mrs. Emma Means "for and during the term of her natural life and upon her death to the heirs of her body." Here the limitation is "for the natural life of the said party of the second part and then to the heirs of her body begotten forever." If in the one case the "heirs of the body" take a future contingent, and not a vested, interest, so it must be in the other case. It cannot be doubted that this view gives effect to the ordinary signification of the terms employed, and harmonizes the apparently conflicting sections (694 and 780) of the Civil Code. It may be remarked that the word "then" clearly refers to the time of the expiration of the life estate. The language would be exactly equivalent if it were "for the natural life of the said party of the second part and 'afterward' to the heirs of her body begotten forever."

The attention of the learned trial judge was probably not called to the aforesaid decision. At any rate, it is controlling, and the judgment is reversed.

JOHNSON v. ALL NIGHT AND DAY BANK.

(Civ. 1,000.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 29, 1911. Rehearing Denied Dec. 29, 1911.)

1. Banks and Banking (§ 175*)—Delivery of Draft for Collection — Actions — Pleadings.

In an action for the amount of a draft indorsed and delivered by plaintiff to defendant bank, with instructions to collect the money and pay the same to plaintiff, an answer, denying that plaintiff indorsed and delivered to the bank a draft with instructions to pay the same to plaintiff, and that it accepted the same with an agreement to collect the money and pay to plaintiff, and further alleging that plaintiff delivered to it a draft and deposited the same with it for collection to the credit of a third person, and that thereafter the bank collected the money and paid the proceeds to the third person, states facts, in the affirmative defense, constituting a good defense, though the answer proper is evasive and presents no issue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Dec. Dig. § 175.*]

2. Banks and Banking (§ 175*)—Delivery of Draft to Bank for Collection—Evidence—Sufficiency.

Evidence held to show that plaintiff indorsed and delivered a draft to a bank for collection for plaintiff, authorizing a recovery for the failure of the bank to pay over the proceeds to plaintiff.

4. Banks and Banking (§ 175*)—Delivery of Drafts to Banks for Collection—Actions—Burden of Proof.

In an action for the amount of a draft indorsed and delivered by plaintiff to a bank for collection for plaintiff, the bank has the burden of showing that the draft has been paid over to plaintiff, or, if to some one else, by his authority.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by John O. Johnson against the All Night and Day Bank. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

D. K. Trask, for appellant. Tanner, Taft & Odell, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. The action was brought to recover the amount of a draft, dated August 13, 1910, alleged by plaintiff to have been by him drawn upon a bank in South Dakota and indorsed and delivered to defendant, with instructions to collect the money and to pay the same to plaintiff when collected. It is further averred that the defendant bank collected the sum of $1,500 on the draft and failed and refused to pay the same to plaintiff. Defendant by its answer denies that plaintiff indorsed and delivered to it a draft with instructions to collect and pay the same to plaintiff, and that it accepted the same with an agreement to collect the money and pay to plaintiff. For a further answer, defendant alleges that plaintiff delivered to it a sight draft and deposited the same with defendant for collection to the credit of one H. E. Dixon; that thereupon, at the request and in the presence of plaintiff, defendant executed and delivered to plaintiff a duplicate deposit slip in the name of H. E. Dixon for collection; that thereafter, on August 17, 1910, defendant collected the money and paid the proceeds over to said Dixon. The action was tried by the court without a jury. The court finds that on the 13th day of August, 1910, plaintiff delivered to defendant his sight draft and deposited the same with defendant to the credit of H. E. Dixon for collection. The court further finds that plaintiff instructed defendant to collect said draft and pay the proceeds thereof to said Dixon. This last finding is outside of the issues. The court also finds that the defendant executed a duplicate deposit slip, as receipt for said draft, in the name of H. E. Dixon, and on the 17th day of August, 1910, upon surrender by said Dixon of said duplicate deposit slip, defendant paid the sum of $1,500, the proceeds of said draft, to said Dixon. Judgment was entered accordingly, from which judgment plaintiff appeals.

[1] We are of opinion that appellant's contention, that the answer does not state facts constituting a defense, cannot be sustained. While the answer proper is evasive and presents no issue, the affirmative defense alleges the drawing of the draft and its deposit to the credit of Dixon for collection, and the subsequent payment, upon collection by the bank, to Dixon. Whether or not plaintiff deposited the draft to the credit of Dixon for collection is the only matter in issue by the answer.

[2] It is insisted by appellant that the finding of the court, that when plaintiff delivered to defendant the draft he deposited the same to the credit of Dixon for collection, is not supported by the evidence. A careful review of all of the evidence presented by the transcript satisfies us that plaintiff's contention in this regard must be sustained. The material evidence is confined to the testimony of one Green, an employé of defendant bank, and that of plaintiff. Green testifies: That plaintiff and Dixon called at the bank together, and plaintiff produced a duplicate deposit slip issued to him by a bank in South Dakota, showing that plaintiff had on deposit there the sum of $1,500. That plaintiff wanted the money on this deposit slip, and Green stated to him that said slip did not represent money, that it was merely a receipt for his deposit; that "the only way I can get you any money on this is for you to make a draft on the bank, attach this deposit ticket, and as soon as they wire payment I can turn the money over to you, or give you credit for it." That after some conversation plaintiff told Green to fix up a draft, which he did, and presented it to Johnson, and Johnson signed it and handed it to Dixon, and Dixon said: "That is all right. I will just indorse this." But Green said to Dixon, "Your indorsement will do no good, but may do no harm." The draft thus indorsed was handed back to Green, and Green made out a receipt for the draft and handed it to Johnson. That Johnson asked what the paper was that he had handed to him, and Green told him it was a receipt for the draft. That plaintiff said, "Well, I don't want this, do I?" And Dixon said, "Yes, keep that," when Johnson replied, "You take care of it," and handed it to Dixon. Dixon then said to Green, "If I am to handle this it better be made out in my name," and Johnson said "Fix it up to suit yourself." Thereupon Green took up the receipt he had issued to plaintiff and issued another one in the name of Dixon. Green on behalf of the bank wired to South Dakota, and on August 17th, receiving instructions to pay the draft, turned the money over to Dixon. Green during the progress of his testimony testified that he told plaintiff that if Dixon held the receipt he would be entitled to the money, and that plaintiff said, "That is all right." At another time he testified that the issuance of the receipt to Dixon was occasioned by a statement of Green to the effect that if Dixon indorsed the draft the receipt should be in his name. But upon cross-examination, with reference to the statements of Johnson in regard to the draft, Green says: "I am not positive of the words he said, but from the instructions I gleaned that Dixon was to get the money." Plaintiff testifies positively that he never told Green that the money could be paid to Dixon; that he did not know there was a receipt issued to Dixon; that he never told anybody to deposit it to the credit of Dixon; that he never told Green that it would be all the same for Dixon to receive the money, or for it to be deposited to his credit; that not a word was said at the bank in his presence about the money being deposited to Dixon's credit. Dixon did not appear as a witness; in fact, the record shows that he was a confidence operator, and that this whole transaction, so far as Dixon was concerned, was a fraudulent scheme to get possession of $1,500 of plaintiff's money. It is nowhere claimed that Dixon paid anything for an assignment of the draft, or that he ever procured an assignment thereof, or was in any view its owner. Defendant's reliance, being entirely based upon the proposition that plaintiff when he drew the draft deposited the same to the credit of Dixon for collection, is, in our opinion, without basis. While Green does testify to some facts which might indicate instructions to pay the money when collected to Dixon, and statements which, if true, might estop plaintiff from claiming the money if paid to Dixon, yet when the testimony of Green is analyzed it is demonstrated that upon his cross-examination he qualifies all of his previous statements, and there remains in his testimony but a statement of an inference which he drew from statements made by plaintiff, the purport of which he does not pretend to give. In the respects above set forth, and in other respects, the testimony of Green is very contradictory and unsatisfactory. We think the record discloses that the defendant bank received this draft for collection as the agent of plaintiff upon an agreement to deposit to his credit the amount thereof, or to pay to him the money; that there were no instructions to deposit it to Dixon's credit; that the bare issuance to Dixon of a memorandum of deposit by Johnson of the draft did not of itself warrant the payment of the money to Dixon.

[3] While it is true that a negotiable instrument may be transferred by delivery, if the intent so to transfer is made apparent, there is nothing in this record to show any such intent upon the part of plaintiff, or any agreement with reference to the transfer of the draft. The matters testified to by Green are violative of every rule of banking, unusual in character, and would be far from convincing had he not thereafter qualified the same by a practical withdrawal of such statements.

[4] In actions of this character the burden is certainly upon the bank to show that this draft which it received as a collection agent had been paid over to plaintiff, or to some one by his authority. We find nothing warranting such finding, and the findings of the court as made are unsupported.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded.

KENNEY v. GROGAN. (Civ. 1,013.)

1. SALES (§ 214*)—CONTRACT—TIME OF PASSING TITLE.

A contract to sell a crop of olives does not pass the title immediately, so as to place on the buyer subsequent injury thereto by frost, in the absence of negligence by the seller in handling it; the crop not only not being in a state to be delivered, because not mature, but the seller being required to pick, pack, and deliver it at the shipping point to the buyer.

2. SALES (§ 266*)—IMPLIED WARRANTY.

By express provision of Civ. Code, § 1764, except as prescribed by the article containing such section, a contract of sale or agreement to sell does not imply a warranty.

3. SALES (§ 272*) — WARRANTY — "MERCHANDISE NOT IN EXISTENCE"—INACCESSIBLE TO EXAMINATION.

A crop of olives, nearly matured at time of contract for sale thereof, is not within Civ. Code, § 1768, providing that one who agrees to sell merchandise, "not then in existence," warrants that it shall be sound and merchantable at the contemplated place of production, and as nearly so at the place of delivery as can be secured by reasonable care, or section 1771, providing that one who sells or agrees to sell merchandise "inaccessible to the examination of" the buyer thereby warrants that it is sound and merchantable.

4. SALES (§ 441*)—WARRANTY—MERCHANTABLENESS—EVIDENCE.

Even if olives were sold with a warranty of merchantableness, evidence that they had, by reason of damage from frost, become more or less shrunken, that thereby their keeping quality was interfered with, and the oil therefrom would not be termed first class, and would not remain sweet as long as that from better fruit, does not show that they were unmerchantable.

5. SALES (§ 72*)—CONTRACT—CONSTRUCTION.

The provision of a contract for sale of a crop of olives, that oil olives were to be "picked when ripe enough to yield an average amount of oil," refers only to time of picking, and does not fix their quality as being that required to produce any particular amount of oil.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Henry H. Kenney against C. P. Grogan. From an order denying the motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Geo. S. Richardson and G. P. Adams, for appellant. Geo. S. Hupp, for respondent.

JAMES, J. In this action plaintiff had judgment for an amount of money which constituted only a small part of the sum demanded. He appeals from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

On November 26, 1909, the plaintiff, who was the owner of an olive orchard located at Sespe, in the county of Ventura, Cal., made a contract to sell the crop of olives then growing upon the trees to the defendant. A written contract was signed by the parties at the time, which expressed in brief form the agreement of Kenney to sell and Grogan to buy the olives; it being stated therein that the purchase was made "at the same prices, conditions, and terms as the Olive Growers' Association of Santa Barbara." The prices, conditions, and terms, as expressed in the Olive Growers' Association contract referred to, were as follows: "Prices f. o. b. nearest shipping point: $50 per ton for all oil olives (picholenes excepted) when shipped in less than car load lots, and $52 per ton when shipped in sufficient quantities to secure car load rates, $100 per ton for all pickling olives that will run 11/16 in. diameter and larger. Pickling olives to be picked when black and red, and oil olives to be picked when ripe enough to yield an average amount of oil. Payments: ½ of the purchase price of olives will be paid on demand as fast as they are delivered, and the remaining ½ will be paid 30 days after the completion of the delivery." As testified to by the plaintiff, and not denied by the defendant, at the time the contract was entered into, all olives on the trees were then nearly ripe and about full grown. The first shipment of oil olives was made by the plaintiff to the defendant on January 10, 1910, consisting of 3,640 pounds; on January 17th following, 13,500 pounds were shipped, and thereafter, on February 7th, February 24th, and February 25th, additional of the oil olives were forwarded by plaintiff to defendant, at which last-mentioned date shipments ceased, the entire crop having been picked and transported. The total weight of the olives furnished was 37,938 pounds. In addition to the oil olives, pickle olives valued, according to the contract price, at $10.58 were furnished. The contention of the defendant was, and which the trial court by its judgment sustained, that none of the oil olives furnished by the plaintiff were merchantable; that defendant had refused to accept the fruit for that reason. The particular findings of the court which were responsive to this issue read as follows: "That the defendant did not accept said olives, but notified the plaintiff that he would make them into oil for the plaintiff, and hold the said oil subject to plaintiff's order. That the said olives so shipped were badly frosted, were soft and pulpy, and were not of a merchantable quality, and could not have been returned by defendant to plaintiff, except at a total loss of said olives, as they would not bear reshipping, and that defendant made the same into oil, for the purpose of diminishing the plaintiff's loss, and that the oil produced from said olives is of a very inferior quality, and that there is no regular market price for olive oil of such poor quality."

There are but two questions, as we view the case, presented for consideration: First, whether there was implied from the conditions of the contract made between plaintiff and defendant any warranty that the olives, when delivered to the defendant, should be of merchantable quality; and, second, whether, assuming that such a condition is to be implied, the evidence was sufficient to warrant the court in determining that the olives furnished were not of merchantable quality. It may be assumed in considering these questions that the evidence is sufficient to show that the defendant protected himself by sufficient notice to the plaintiff of his determination not to accept the olives proffered in fulfillment of the contract, and that his acts, as shown by the testimony, with reference to his having manufactured the olives into oil, would not estop him from denying that he had made such an acceptance. It appears quite clear from the testimony that the oil olives, when delivered to defendant, had been affected by frost. As to the time when they became so affected, whether before or after the making of the contract of purchase by defendant, it cannot be told from any of the testimony as it is set out in the bill of exceptions. The defendant, by his own testimony, qualified himself as a man of much experience in the handling of olives and the manufacturing of that fruit into oil and pickles. It is a fair inference from the testimony, while it is not expressly so shown, to conclude that the defendant examined the crop of olives before he made the contract of purchase; for it does not appear that he had not the opportunity of so doing, and it does appear that at the time the contract was made the crop was in an almost mature state. In the language of plaintiff, "the olives were nearly ripe and about full grown." Assuming, however, that the damage done to the crop by frost occurred after the making of the contract and before the fruit was delivered to defendant, the question presents itself as to whether, under the circumstances of the case, the defendant is entitled to claim the benefit of any of the sections of the Civil Code relating to warranty of condition of personal property upon sale thereof.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[1] One of the contentions of appellant is that the contract or agreement of sale had the effect of transferring title to the olive crop immediately upon the execution thereof. If such is the case, then, where plaintiff was chargeable with no negligence in the handling of the crop, any loss occasioned by reason of damage thereto by frost would be the loss of the owner, the defendant, and not the vendor. But, as we interpret the contract, it was not such a one as contemplated the immediate passing of title to the olives. The crop was then not in a state to be delivered, and not only was it to be left upon the trees until it had become sufficiently mature, but, also, the vendor was required to pick, pack, and deliver it at the shipping point to the carrier. Under conditions of this kind, it is well established that title to merchandise so sold will not pass until delivery is made. Walti v. Gaba (Sup.) 116 Pac. 963; Blackwood v. Cutting Packing Co., 76 Cal. 212, 18 Pac. 248, 9 Am. St. Rep. 199; Benjamin on Sales, § 318 et seq.; Williston on Sales, § 218.

[2, 3] As the title to the olives did not pass upon the making of the contract, but only upon delivery to the defendant, did the plaintiff, by implied warranty, assure defendant that the fruit when delivered would be of marketable quality? Section 1764 of the Civil Code provides that, "except as prescribed by this article, a mere contract of sale or agreement to sell does not imply a warranty." There are a number of sections of the same Code dealing with the same subject, and it seems to be conceded by respondent that, unless some authority is found in those sections justifying his claim of an implied warranty made as to the olive crop, then such a warranty cannot be inferred. Our Supreme Court, in Browning v. McNear, 145 Cal. 272, 78 Pac. 722, has said: "It is further contended that if there was not an agreement to sell by sample there was an implied warranty that the goods should be sound and in merchantable condition when delivered upon the barge. The theory appears to be that this is the rule as to all executory sales, as distinguished from the rule applicable to executed sales. In this state the question as to whether there is an implied warranty must depend upon the provisions of our Civil Code." In the case of Bill v. Fuller, 146 Cal. 50, 79 Pac. 592, the same question was considered, but it was not decided, under the circumstances of that case, that any warranty as to merchantable quality of fruit contracted for should be implied. On behalf of respondent, it is claimed that the provisions of either or both of sections 1768 and 1771, Civil Code, may be invoked for his benefit. Section 1768 reads as follows: "One who agrees to sell merchandise, not then in existence, thereby warrants that it shall be sound and merchantable at the place of production contemplated by the parties, and as nearly so, at the place of delivery, as can be secured by reasonable care." Section 1771 provides that: "One who sells or agrees to sell merchandise inaccessible to the examination of the buyer, thereby warrants that it is sound and merchantable." In our opinion, it cannot be said that the merchandise here contracted for was not in existence at the time of the making of the contract, nor that it was inaccessible to the examination of the buyer. The testimony showed, without contradiction, that at the time the contract was made the fruit was on the trees, where it could be observed by the vendee, had he desired to examine it, and that at no time was it inaccessible to his examination. It was in existence as a crop practically matured when he made his contract to purchase it. It was not a crop to be grown in the future, as was the case in Blackwood v. Cutting Packing Co., supra. Even under the common law, unaffected by any of the provisions of our Code, under circumstances such as are shown in this case, the rule of cavaet emptor would apply, and no warranty would be inferred for the benefit of the vendee. Benjamin on Sales, § 644. We do not mean to be understood by this statement as intending to suggest that an entire destruction of the fruit by the elements would not have relieved the vendee from all of the obligations of his contract. Title not having passed under the contract of sale, it was obligatory upon the vendor to deliver the crop contracted to be furnished, and which was then in existence, to his vendee, before he could claim the right to payment therefor. But it does not appear, even by the strongest testimony given upon that subject—that of the defendant himself—that the fruit was so affected as to its quality as to be wholly useless and unsalable.

[4, 5] We even think, under the testimony, that the court was not justified in finding that the olives were of unmerchantable quality. The most that can be said of defendant's claim in this regard is that, while the olives furnished were capable of being manufactured into olive oil, the quality of oil produced was of an inferior grade. We quote his testimony upon this subject: "The average wholesale price of olive oil made of good olives is about—we get about $1.75 at the present time per gallon. Well, I should consider $1 a gallon would be a good price for this oil, as it stands over there now. The price was the same on or about the 29th day of April this year. I think I am familiar with olive oil and as to the quality of olive oil. The olive oil that was produced from these olives is a very inferior grade of oil. It couldn't possibly be used for table oil. When I say table oil, it might possibly be used by Italians. They buy a very low grade of oil to use. You couldn't sell it to first-class families for cooking oil even. As to the keeping qualities of oil that is produced from frosted olives, it is good from 2½ to 3 years. It is a well-known fact that this oil does not keep, and we simply consider it as unmerchantable, or being an inferior grade of oil, and we get rid of it as soon as we can. It is considered an unsalable oil when it is made. We don't put it in the same class as first-class oil; consequently we get rid of it as soon as we can. It becomes rancid sooner than oil produced from olives not frosted. I can't state how much quicker. * * * I think I could sell it for a dollar a gallon." The testimony showed in general effect that the olives which have been damaged by frost become more or less shrunken, that their keeping quality is interfered with, and, as the defendant stated in his testimony as we have quoted it, the oil produced from such olives would not be termed first-class oil, and would not remain sweet for as great a length of time as oil produced from better fruit. To our mind, this evidence did not show that the olives as furnished by the plaintiff were of unmerchantable quality; the evidence did show that they were not high-grade fruit, but rather of an inferior sort. There was nothing in the contract of purchase to show that any special grade or quality was expected to be furnished. That term of the contract which provided that oil olives were to be "picked when ripe enough to yield an average amount of oil" only referred to the state of ripeness at which it was desired that the fruit should be picked, and was not a term fixing the quality of the fruit as being that required to produce any particular amount of oil. Referring to the term "merchantable," Williston on Sales (section 243) states the following: "The requirement, when it exists, that goods shall be merchantable does not require that the goods shall be of first quality, or even that they shall be as good as the average of goods of the sort. * * * If there is no warranty of fitness for a particular purpose, the buyer cannot claim more than that the goods, with their defects known, shall be salable as goods of the general kind which they were described or supposed to be when bought." Our conclusion is that, under the circumstances of this case, including the conditions surrounding the making of the contract between the parties to this action, there was no implied warranty imposed upon the plaintiff as to the quality which the olives should possess at the time of delivery; and that, further, even conceding that an implied warranty as to merchantable condition became a part of the contract, then the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding of the court, wherein it is determined that the fruit as furnished was unmerchantable. The evidence did not show that the contract, either in an express way, or by the acts of the parties, was modified or changed, or that there was any agreement under which plaintiff became bound to accept the oil manufactured from his olives, in lieu of payment according to the terms of his contract.

The order is reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Action by J. S. Johnston against Frank W. Burnett. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. W. McKinley (W. R. Millar, of counsel), for appellant. Davis, Kemp & Post, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This action was brought by plaintiff to recover the sum of $866.59, alleged to have been collected by defendant for the benefit of plaintiff and which defendant had refused to pay to plaintiff upon demand being made therefor. Prior to the year 1910 defendant as an attorney at law was employed by plaintiff to bring suit to enforce the collection of three promissory notes; each being for the principal sum of $2,000. After various proceedings had in the Superior and Supreme Courts, judgment in favor of plaintiff was finally affirmed, nearly two years after the suit was commenced. Defendant collected the amount due upon the judgment, which included, besides the principal sum of $6,000, interest amounting to about $1,100, together with costs. Of this sum he first applied $2,020.05 in extinguishment of an indebtedness owing by plaintiff to a certain banking institution, which he was authorized to do; then, after deducting, in satisfaction of his own demand for attorney's fees, the amount of $1,100, he remitted to plaintiff his check for the balance, plus $110 which had theretofore been advanced by plaintiff as costs. Accompanying this check was the following letter:

"Los Angeles, Cal., June 28th, 1910. Mr. J. S. Johnston, 624 I. W. Hellman Building, Los Angeles, Cal.—Dear Sir: I have at last, after nearly two years contest in court, succeeded in collecting the notes of Mrs. Blewett, which you acquired from W. H. Bates. The principal of the notes amounts to $6,000, and you advanced $110 toward the cost of the litigation. This amount I return to you as follows:

Paid to Citizens' National Bank, amount of your note, secured by assignment of judgment to me...	$2,020 05
My check herewith................	4,089 95

"Which check is given in full settlement of all matters between us. Your canceled note is inclosed. Yours truly, F. W. Burnett."

Prior to the sending of this check and letter by defendant, there had been a failure of the parties to agree upon the amount of the attorney's fee to be charged for the services rendered, and when plaintiff received the letter and check of defendant he objected to the amount deducted on this account. According to plaintiff's testimony, immediately thereafter he met defendant on the street and protested against the charge made for attorney's fees, and asked for a further itemized statement, which he testified defendant agreed to send him. However, before any further statement was furnished by defendant, the following letter was written by plaintiff and dispatched and was received by defendant in due course of mail: "Los Angeles, Cal., July 6, 1910. Frank W. Burnett, Esq., Citizens' National Bank Bldg., Los Angeles, Cal.—Dear Sir: I have been out of town for some time, and when returning I received your letter dated June 28th inclosing a check for $4,089.95, and my note for $2,020.05, canceled, in which you state that the within check is given in full settlement of all matters between us. I am this day cashing the check but I want it explicitly understood that it is not in full as a settlement of all matters between us. You have in your hands, according to my figures, $866.59, money collected by the Citizens' National Bank for me, and turned over to you. The judgment in this case was assigned by me to the bank, with instructions to them to pay off my note to them of $2,020.05, and deposit the balance to my account, and the action of the bank in turning over this money to you is without any authority whatsoever. I also call your attention to the fact that you have in your possession a bond of the Morcoreto Mercantile & Manufacturing Company delivered to you for your information. As per my conversation with you to-day, unless the sum above mentioned is paid to me within twenty-four hours after the receipt by you of this letter, I will bring suit against you to collect the same, and I hereby demand of you that you at once return the bond mentioned to me. Yours truly, J. S. Johnston."

Plaintiff at the trial admitted that he had cashed defendant's check and received the amount called for thereby. Among other defenses, the defendant urged that, by the acceptance of a check which was cashed by plaintiff, the account between the parties became settled, and that it could not thereafter be questioned as plaintiff sought to question it by this action. The case was tried before a jury and a verdict returned in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $500. The appeal is from the judgment and from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

[1] No question was made at the trial, or is here urged on the part of respondent, but that defendant had the authority and right to make application of the proceeds received upon satisfaction of the judgment entered on the promissory notes in the manner which he did apply them, except that it was and is contended only that in the application of such proceeds too great an amount was charged for the professional services rendered by defendant to plaintiff. Neither is it questioned that at the time the check and letter referred to were sent by defendant to plaintiff there was an existing dispute between defendant and plaintiff as to the amount of the charge to be made on account of attorney's fees. These facts appearing, the question is then presented as to whether, upon the tender of the check of the defendant to the plaintiff, with the statement that it was given in full satisfaction of all matters between the parties, and the appropriation of the check and money received thereon by the plaintiff, an accord and satisfaction was established which would preclude plaintiff from thereafter maintaining any action against defendant for the same account. Section 1521, Civil Code, provides that an accord is an agreement to accept, in extinction of an obligation, something different from or less than that to which the person agreeing to accept is entitled. Section 1523 of the same Code reads as follows: "Acceptance, by the creditor, of the consideration of an accord extinguishes the obligation, and is called satisfaction." If the plaintiff, upon receipt of defendant's check, had the legal right to apply the proceeds therefrom on account merely, saving to himself a right of action for any balance which he claimed to be due him by merely notifying defendant that he did not receive the money as in full satisfaction of the indebtedness, then the case as presented was a proper one to go to the jury, and its decision cannot be here disturbed. But we are of the opinion that this position cannot be sustained.

[2] Where tender is made to a party to whom a debt is owing of an amount less than that which is claimed to be due, and the amount claimed to be due is unliquidated, and the party making the tender in express terms offers the payment as in full satisfaction of the disputed account, the offeree in that case is bound, either to reject the offer, or to accept it upon the precise terms, denoted by the tender. Creighton v. Gregory, 142 Cal. 34, 75 Pac. 569; Weller v. Stevens, 12 Cal. App. 779, 108 Pac. 532. If he appropriates to his own use the amount tendered, he cannot afterwards be heard to say that he did so upon any terms other than those which the person making the offer imposed upon him. Such a state of facts is that precisely illustrated by the evidence in this case. It was said in Nassoiy v. Tomlinson, 148 N. Y. 326, 42 N. E. 715, 51 Am. St. Rep. 695, where a similar case was considered: "The plaintiff cannot be permitted to assert that he did not understand that a sum of money, offered 'in full' was not, when accepted, a payment in full. * * * He was bound either to reject the check, or, by accepting it, accede to the defendant's terms. * * * He could not accept the benefit, and reject the condition. * * * The use of the check was ipso facto an acceptance of the condition. The minds of the parties then met, so as to constitute an accord." The fact that the defendant may have, upon the demand of plaintiff, after receipt of the check by the latter, agreed to furnish a further itemized statement of account, did not in any wise have the effect of withdrawing the offer made by defendant of the check in full settlement of matters of account then pending between the parties. It is not claimed, nor was it shown by any evidence heard at the trial, that defendant promised or agreed to remit any further sum than the amount for which his check was drawn, or that he in any way consented that plaintiff should apply the amount tendered as on account merely. As we view the case, by the uncontradicted testimony, the defense set up by defendant that there had been an accord and satisfaction, was clearly made out, and as a matter of law a judgment should have been directed in favor of defendant on that plea. The evidence does not sustain verdict or judgment.

The judgment and order are reversed.

An indictment under Pen. Code, § 92, charging that accused offered to give a justice of the peace a portion of the fee which accused would receive as attorney if the justice would dismiss the cause, was sufficiently supported by proof that accused told the justice he was going to ask for a dismissal, and that when he got his fee he would "split" it with the justice.

5. Criminal Law (§ 1159*)—Review—Sufficiency of Evidence.

A jury finding in a criminal case will not be disturbed on appeal, unless it plainly appears that there is no evidence to support it.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edgar T. Zook, Judge.

Paul A. Vincilione was convicted of bribery, and he appeals from the judgment of conviction and from an order denying a new trial. Affirmed.

O. F. Meldon, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, for the People.

LENNON, P. J. The defendant was indicted by the grand jury of Marin county for the crime of offering a bribe to a judicial officer. Upon his trial the defendant was found guilty, and his appeal is from the judgment and the order denying him a new trial.

[1] It was evidently the purpose of the indictment to charge a violation of section 92 of the Penal Code, which makes it a felony for any person to give or "offer to give a bribe to any judicial officer," with the intent to influence his decision upon any matter which is before him for decision. It appears from the indictment that on the 2d day of August, 1909, one J. F. Renner was the duly elected, qualified, and acting justice of the peace in and for Sausalito township, in the county of Marin, and that there was then and there pending before said Renner, as justice of the peace, a certain cause, entitled "The People of the State of California v. Jane Doe Biggeo," wherein the defendant, Biggeo, was represented by Paul A. Vincilione, the defendant here, in his professional capacity of attorney and counselor at law. That portion of the indictment which describes the bribe and alleges the offer thereof charges, in substance, that the defendant, Vincilione, did unlawfully, willfully, corruptly, and feloniously offer to give to said J. F. Renner, as justice of the peace, "a portion of the fee which he (Paul A. Vincilione) would receive as attorney for the said defendant, Jane Doe Biggeo," if the said Renner would dismiss the case then pending against her, and that this offer was made by Vincilione as a bribe, with the intent to corruptly and unlawfully influence the decision of said Renner, as justice of the peace, in the cause pending before him.

The defendant contends, among other things, that the indictment does not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense, in this: That the defendant is not specifically charged with having offered, as a bribe, anything which was of present or prospective value or advantage. In support of this contention, it is argued that, as the alleged offer of a bribe related solely to "a portion of the fee" which the defendant "would receive," and did not purport to embrace an agreed and ascertained fee, the indictment does not expressly or impliedly charge the defendant with having offered to the justice of the peace anything which had a real or potential existence, and that therefore it cannot be said that the alleged bribe had either a present or prospective value.

[2] A "bribe" is defined to be "anything of value or advantage, present or prospective, or any promise or undertaking to give any, asked, given, or accepted, with a corrupt intent to influence unlawfully the person to whom it is given, in his action, vote or opinion, in any public or official capacity." Pen. Code, § 7, subd. 6. This legislative definition of the word "bribe" has been held to embrace all the essentials of the crime of bribery (People v. Ward, 110 Cal. 373, 42 Pac. 894); and when construed in the light of the plain and ordinary meaning of the language employed it clearly contemplates that a promise to give a public officer anything, which may have a future existence and value, with the intent to unlawfully influence him in his official action, constitutes bribery.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The phrase "anything of value or advantage, present or prospective," implies a future existence and probable value of the thing offered, based upon present indications; and it is not necessary to a completion of the crime of offering to give a bribe that the thing offered as a bribe should have a present existence or a definite and ascertained value. To offer a thing in the future which, at the time agreed upon for future delivery, will have being and value is to offer a valuable thing, within the meaning of the statute; and, as the gravamen of the offense is the tendency which the thing offered as a bribe may have to pervert justice or corrupt official action, the crime is complete the moment an offer is made to give something to a public officer with a corrupt intent to unlawfully influence him in his official conduct, which may have a future existence and a prospective value. Any other interpretation of the statute would place a premium upon bribery, and even in the most flagrant cases make conviction impossible. While an attorney's fee is oftentimes elusive and evanescent, it certainly has at all times a prospective value; and, whether its future value be much or little, an offer to share it with a judicial officer in exchange for a favorable decision is sufficient to support an indictment for offering to give a bribe.

[3] The indictment was presented and filed on January 25, 1911, and the offer of the bribe is alleged therein to have been made on the 2d day of August, 1909. The evidence adduced at the trial was directed solely to an offer claimed to have been made on July 20, 1909, and because of this it is now claimed upon behalf of the defendant that there is a material and fatal variance between the allegations of the indictment and the proof offered in support thereof with respect to the time when the offense is charged to have been committed. The precise day on which an offense is committed need not be pleaded, unless time is of the essence of the offense; and as it clearly appears in the case at bar that but a single offense is charged to have been committed at a time anterior to the finding of the indictment, and within the period designated by the statute of limitations, the variance of 12 days between the time charged and that proved is immaterial. People v. Littlefield, 5 Cal. 355; People v. Lafuente, 6 Cal. 202; People v. Sheldon, 68 Cal. 434, 9 Pac. 457; People v. Rice, 73 Cal. 220, 14 Pac. 851; People v. Williams, 133 Cal. 168, 65 Pac. 323.

[4] There is no merit in the contention that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict, because it was not shown that the offer to give a bribe was made in the precise language and upon the express condition set out in the indictment. The testimony upon the whole case sufficiently supports the verdict as against this objection of the defendant. Upon this phase of the case, Renner, the justice of the peace, as a witness for the people, testified in part that "Mr. Vincilione and I went out on the street. * * * He says, 'Fred, I am going to ask for a dismissal in this case.' He says, 'When I get my fee from these people, I will split it with you.' I said, 'All right.' There was nothing more said about the matter." The gist of the offense as charged in the indictment was the offer by the defendant to give a portion of his fee to the justice of the peace in the event of a dismissal of the action, and the quoted conversation of the defendant, coupled with the reply of Renner, was amply sufficient to warrant the jury in finding, as they did by their verdict, that the transaction impliedly, if not expressly, constituted an offer to give a bribe in the manner and form charged in the indictment. If ever there was any doubt in the minds of the jury as to the purpose of the conversation between the defendant and Renner, that doubt must have been dispelled by the undisputed fact, which appears in the record of the evidence before us, that the case pending before Renner was subsequently dismissed, and that later the defendant actually delivered to Renner a check for $25 which, as stated to several persons by the defendant, was given "to square" or "fix" the Biggeo case.

[5] In his defense, and as a witness in his own behalf, the defendant attempted to explain and justify his part in the transaction upon the theory that everything that was said and done by him and the justice of the peace arose out of facts and circumstances wholly disconnected with the alleged offer of July 20, 1909. It is now insisted in effect that the testimony upon the whole case is in harmony with the defendant's explanation of the transaction, and that therefore the verdict of the jury is contrary to the evidence. With this contention we cannot agree. The most that can be fairly claimed for the defendant is a conflict of evidence as to his motive and intent. Heretofore, when confronted by a question involving a conflict of evidence, the established rule of law required us to hold that the verdict of the jury was conclusive; but, even if it be conceded that the jurisdiction of this court has been recently enlarged to the extent of embracing and permitting a review of questions of fact in criminal cases, we would not be inclined to reverse a jury's finding of fact in any given case, unless it was plainly apparent that there was a total absence of evidence upon the whole case, or upon some essential and vital phase of the case.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; HALL, J.

PEOPLE v. CROSBY. (Cr. 198.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 21, 1911.)

1. Criminal Law (§ 1023*)—Decisions Appealable.

Under Pen. Code, § 1237, providing when accused may appeal, neither a verdict nor an order overruling a motion in arrest of judgment is appealable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2583–2598; Dec. Dig. § 1023.*]

2. Criminal Law (§ 1081*)—Appeal—Notice.

Where, after accused's motions for a new trial and in arrest of judgment had been overruled, the trial court pronounced sentence, accused's counsel's statement that he would like to give notice of appeal from the verdict and the judgment denying the motions was sufficient notice of appeal.

3. Rape (§ 51*)—Evidence—Sufficiency.

Evidence in a rape trial held insufficient to show resistance by prosecutrix, or that she was prevented from resisting by threats, within Pen. Code, § 261, but to sustain a finding that she was prevented from resisting by an intoxicating narcotic administered by or with the privity of accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. §§ 71–77; Dec. Dig. § 51.*]

4. Criminal Law (§ 722½*)—Misconduct of Prosecuting Attorney—Asking Questions.

It was reversible misconduct for the prosecuting attorney, in a rape trial, to create an impression in the jurors' minds that accused was engaged in the "white slave trade" by asking the prosecutrix, as the last question on her redirect examination, whether accused said anything to her about putting her in a house of ill fame as he had done with other girls before that, especially since the trial judge sustained the objection on the sole ground that the question was leading.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

David Crosby was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Reversed.

Lewis R. Kirby, Oval Pirkey, and Eugene Daney, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of rape, and appeals from the judgment whereby he was sentenced to state prison for a term of 20 years.

[1, 2] Respondent insists that defendant is not entitled to a review of the alleged errors presented herein, for the reason that no appeal was taken from the final judgment. After defendant's counsel had made a purported motion for a new trial and motion in arrest of judgment, both of which were overruled, the court pronounced its judgment; whereupon counsel for defendant said: "At this time I would like to give notice of appeal, to the court and district attorney—appeal in this case from the verdict and the judgment of the court denying the motion for a new trial and arrest of judgment." No appeal lies from the verdict (section 1237, Pen. Code; People v. Garwood, 11 Cal. App. 665, 106 Pac. 113), nor from an order in arrest of judgment (Code citation, supra; People v. Mullen, 7 Cal. App. 547, 94 Pac. 867); and it is contended by respondent that under the method adopted in 1909, prescribing the manner of taking appeals in criminal cases, no appeal lies from an order denying a motion for a new trial. Without so holding, but conceding respondent's position that an appeal in a criminal case must be from the final judgment, we are nevertheless constrained to hold that the statement of defendant's counsel made, not upon the denial of the motions, but at the time the judgment was pronounced, must be deemed a sufficient compliance with the statute. It clearly appears that it was defendant's intention to seek a review of every adverse ruling of the court; and, where such is the case, he should not be deprived of his right of appeal merely on account of the notice including orders from which no appeals lies. The statute prescribes no form of notice, but requires that defendant shall in open court at the time judgment is rendered announce that he appeals.

[3] The grounds upon which appellant insists upon a reversal, and which merit consideration, are: First, that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict; second, misconduct on the part of the district attorney; and, third, the refusal of the court to give to the jury certain instructions requested by him.

"Rape," as defined by section 261, Penal Code, "is an act of sexual intercourse, accomplished with a female not the wife of the perpetrator, under either of the following circumstances: * * * (3) Where she resists, but her resistance is overcome by force or violence; (4) where she is prevented from resisting by threats of great and immediate bodily harm, accompanied by apparent power of execution, or by any intoxicating narcotic, or anæsthetic substance, administered by or with the privity of the accused."

It appears from her own testimony that the prosecuting witness was a female, over the age of 17 years, living at her home with her family in San Diego; that on Sunday, February 19, 1911, defendant, an entire stranger, called with the purpose of employing her to display advertising cards in a drug store, where he was introducing and selling some sort of patent medicine; that she accepted the employment and went to work the following morning; that at noon defendant asked her to lunch and to go to dinner that evening with him; that, while she did not go to lunch with him, she did, at about 5:30 in the evening, accompany him to a public restaurant, where they were served in a public dining room by one of the waiters, who, with the meal, served them with some red wine from a bottle; that she drank one glassful thereof; that they remained at the restaurant from 5:30 until about 11 o'clock p. m., during which time she asked defendant to take her home, and he told her he was not going to take her home; that they left the restaurant, proceeding down one of the prominent streets for a distance of several blocks, passing other pedestrians on the street, and went upstairs to a lodging house, where she stood by while defendant registered, after which the landlord and defendant proceeded up another flight of stairs to the room assigned them, and she, following behind without protest, entered the room and spent the night in the embraces of defendant; that she knew it was wrong and improper for her to go with defendant to the room in this lodging house; but that defendant said he would make it good for her if she did not go; and that she did not make any outcry, or ask assistance, because defendant said he would slap her. No good purpose could be subserved by further narrating the evidence. Suffice it to say that it wholly fails to bring the case within subdivision 3 of section 261, Penal Code, in that the record does not disclose any resistance on the part of the prosecutrix, or the use of force and violence on the part of defendant. It is clear that she had ample opportunity to leave defendant at the restaurant, on the street, and in the lodging house, in each and all of which places the slightest cry or intimation of danger would, if required, have brought aid and protection. Notwithstanding this fact, she voluntarily accompanied defendant to the room, conscious of the purpose of going there and the impropriety of the act.

It is likewise clear that the evidence is insufficient to show that the prosecutrix was "prevented from resisting by threats of great and immediate bodily harm, accompanied by apparent power of execution," as provided by subdivision 4 of said section 261. As a reason for not calling assistance, she assigns the fact that defendant said he would slap her face if she did. Surely it cannot be seriously claimed that any great bodily harm could have resulted from the execution of such threat. Her testimony shows that she told defendant that her folks would not like her being in a room with him, and that he said he would shoot her if she got out. It also appears that when defendant left the room in the morning he said to her that if, when he came back, he found her gone, he would shoot her. Giving these threats the full import of the words used in making them, nevertheless, they were not accompanied by any apparent power of execution. Moreover, they were not threats of immediate bodily harm, but had reference alone to what defendant would do in the future and after she had made her escape and was secure from his threatened attacks. The conduct of the prosecutrix towards defendant, from the time she went to dinner with him, as disclosed by her own testimony, is wholly inconsistent with the theory that she was prevented from resisting by reason of any threats made by defendant.

The only ground upon which the verdict can be justified, so far as shown by the record, is that the failure of the prosecutrix to resist was due to the fact that she was prevented from so doing by reason of some "intoxicating narcotic, or anæsthetic substance, administered by or with the privity of the accused." The prosecutrix testifies that she went to dinner with defendant about 5:30 p. m. With their meal, the waiter who served them filled their glasses with some red wine, poured from a bottle, and she drank one glassful. They remained at the table, if not until 11 o'clock, at least several hours. The meal, she says, consisted of soup and chicken sandwiches. There is no direct testimony that the wine or food was drugged; but, since it conclusively appears that she neither ate nor drank anything else during the entire time she was with defendant, her want of power to resist, if such was her condition, must be attributed to the effects of the wine which she drank several hours before going to the lodging house with defendant. The testimony of the prosecutrix touching the question is that after leaving the restaurant she "felt weak and dizzy," and that she went to sleep as soon as she went to bed, and says she, "I felt weak and dizzy, kind of." She further stated that she remembered that they left the restaurant immediately after defendant had paid the bill; that defendant took her arm; that she noted as she passed down the street that some of the lights were out in the stores; remembered going from Fourth street to Fifth street; that she passed a number of pedestrians to whom she said nothing; remembered going to the lodging house, going upstairs, and telling defendant that it was improper for him to take her there; that defendant went up the stairs first, and she stood at the top of the stairs while defendant went over to the landlord and engaged a room; that she knew what she was doing when she went up the stairs to the lodging house, and knew that it was wrong, but excused herself by saying, "I had to go," and, in reply to the question, "You could have called for assistance there, couldn't you, because you knew it was improper?" said: "I did not know what I was doing; I was under the drug." And to the question, "Did you see him give you any drug?" replied, "No." To the question, "Why did you not call for assistance from some of those people you were passing?" she replied, "Because I was too weak." She made no effort to scream because she could not; she did not speak to the landlord when defendant hired the room because, she says: "I was too weak; I did not feel like it." Further testimony is as follows: "Q. Why did you follow him upstairs when he hired that room, if you knew it was wrong to go, if you did not expect to go to that room and stay that night with Dave Crosby? A. He said if I did not go there he would make it good for me. Q. You could have told the landlord that this man was trying to bring you to the house, couldn't you? A. Yes, sir. Q. But you didn't say a word, did you? A. I was going to afterwards. Q. After when, after you got to the room and slept with him? A. No, sir. Q. When? A. Right after Dave got in and locked the door. Q. Why didn't you? A. I just happened to think about it. I was too weak and dizzy to call for the landlord afterwards." In further reply as to why she accompanied defendant, she said: "Because I was under the drug; I didn't know half the time what I was doing." A physician, called as a witness, stated that some 36 hours or more after the drinking of the glass of wine by the girl he happened to see her, rather accidentally, and made a mere cursory examination of her, and that she seemed extremely nervous, somewhat dazed, and had a rapid and irregular pulse. Asked what, in his judgment, caused the condition, he replied that he did not know exactly, but that he got the impression and was of the opinion that she was suffering from the effects of something in the shape of a narcotic. What it was he did not know, and could not tell how she got it, if at all. The mother of the prosecutrix testified that the day after the occurrence her daughter was a nervous wreck, that her eyes were dull, her memory not so good, and that she seemed dazed, and at times did not talk connectedly. While this evidence is weak and, from its nature, unsatisfactory, nevertheless, inasmuch as it tends to support the theory of the prosecution, and under the law, the weight to be given it is a question for the jury, we are constrained to hold that it was sufficient to justify the verdict rendered, had the jury not been influenced in so doing by error and the misconduct of the district attorney.

[4] The alleged misconduct consists in the act of the district attorney in asking the prosecutrix the question, "Did he (the defendant) say anything about putting you in a house of ill fame in Los Angeles?" adding, "as he had done with other girls before that." This was the last question asked by the prosecution on redirect examination. Defendant objected to the question upon several grounds, among others, that it was leading, and assigned it as gross misconduct on the part of the district attorney, in response to which the court stated: "I do not know whether the fact that it is redirect gives you any greater liberty than you had on direct as far as leading is concerned. Objection is sustained." The record is inconsistent with any theory which could justify or excuse the district attorney's misconduct. When the court sustained the objection upon the ground alone that the question was leading, the district attorney did not attempt to meet the objection by changing the form of the question. It is apparent that he not only knew the question with which he closed the examination was improper, but that he did not expect a favorable answer thereto. "Its only purpose was to get before the jury a statement, in the guise of a question, that would prejudice them against appellant." People v. Wells, 100 Cal. 459, 34 Pac. 1078; People v. Derbert, 138 Cal. 467, 71 Pac. 564, and cases there cited. "The prosecuting attorney may well be assumed to be a man of fair standing before the jury, and they may well have thought that he would not have asked the question unless he could have proved what it intimated." Cases supra. When the question is coupled with the statement of the district attorney that defendant had placed other girls in a house of ill fame in Los Angeles, thereby committing another crime, there can be no room for doubt, in the light afforded by the flimsy evidence offered by the prosecution, accentuated by the ruling of the court, that it was prejudicial in the highest degree to defendant's rights. The heinous character of the offense charged was one well calculated to arouse public passion and influence the mind of the average juror against the accused; indeed, the fact that defendant neglected to furnish the prosecutrix with dinner, while she was awaiting defendant's return, appears to have been a material omission affecting the case in the mind of at least one juror, who asked: "Did he brought your dinner there since you went there from the morning to 3 o'clock; did he brought dinner there to you?" In arriving at their verdict, the jury were no doubt influenced by a belief, based upon the question which embodied the statement made by the district attorney, that defendant had placed other girls in houses of ill fame, and that it was his intention to so dispose of the prosecutrix; in other words, that he was engaged in what is commonly known as the "white slave trade."

[5] Conceding the misconduct, and that defendant was prejudiced thereby, respondent insists that he made no effort, by invoking the aid of the court, to remove from the minds of the jurors the prejudicial effect resulting therefrom, and hence appellant is not in position to complain thereof. In support of this claim our attention is directed to People v. Shears, 133 Cal. 159, 65 Pac. 295; People v. Babcock (Sup.) 117 Pac. 549; and People v. Ye Foo, 4 Cal. App. 730, 89 Pac. 450. None of these cases, however, is in point for the reason that it appears in each of them the defendant merely noted exceptions to statements outside the record, made by the district attorney during his argument of the case. In none of them was the act of the district attorney assigned as misconduct. In the case at bar, it appears that defendant not only objected to the question as being incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial, and leading, all of which objections were pertinent, but designated it and the statement as misconduct on the part of the district attorney. Hence it appears that the attention of the court was, in express terms, directed to the matter and the same assigned and designated as misconduct. True, he did not ask the court to admonish the jury, but it was not necessary to do so. The statement of the court in sustaining the objection upon the sole ground that it was leading, by implication at least, was a ruling that it was not objectionable upon other grounds and was not misconduct. It appears, therefore, that the misconduct of the district attorney was accompanied by error of the trial court, resulting in the sustaining of the district attorney in the act constituting the misconduct. When the attention of the court was directed to the act of the district attorney and the same assigned as misconduct, it was the duty of the court to reprimand the district attorney and admonish the jury to disregard the statement of the district attorney and the matters suggested by the question; thus, if possible, destroying the baneful effect thereof. People v. Bradbury, 151 Cal. 678, 91 Pac. 497; People v. Derwae, 155 Cal. 592, 102 Pac. 266.

[6, 7] There was no error in the ruling of the court in refusing to give the requested instructions. The substance of the one based upon a like instruction considered in People v. Howard, 143 Cal. 316, 76 Pac. 1116, had been elsewhere given, and it was unnecessary to repeat it. The other two were properly refused for the reason that they omitted all reference to the element of the offense contained in subdivision 4 of section 261, Penal Code.

In our opinion, the misconduct of the district attorney, coupled with the error of the court, when considered in connection with the character of the evidence, has resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment is therefore reversed.

I concur in the judgment: JAMES, J.

KLEINSORGE & HEILBRON v. LINESS.

(Civ. 853.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 23, 1911.)

1. Brokers (§ 43*)—Authority of Broker—Sufficiency of Writing.

Under Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subd. 6, providing that an agreement authorizing a broker to sell realty for a commission is invalid, unless in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged, or by his agent, a written authority to sell realty must expressly authorize the particular broker to make the sale; and an instrument executed by the owner, which merely recited that the owner agreed to sell his property for the price named, describing it, was insufficient.

2. Evidence (§ 417*)—Parol Evidence—Contract.

Where a written instrument given to brokers merely recited that the owner agreed to sell his property for the price named, parol evidence that they were authorized to sell the land was inadmissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 417.*]

3. Brokers (§ 43*) — Commissions—Employment.

To recover commissions for selling realty, a broker must show that he was employed by or for the owner to make the sale, and that some memorandum of his authority was in writing and subscribed by the owner or his agent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; C. N. Post, Judge.

Action by Kleinsorge & Heilbron, a copartnership, against William N. Liness. From a judgment for plaintiffs and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

W. A. Gett, for appellant. A. L. Shinn and C. L. Shinn, for respondents.

HART, J. The plaintiffs, constituting a copartnership, are engaged in the business of buying and selling real estate in the city of Sacramento. One O. H. Cope was, in the year 1909, in the employment of plaintiffs; his duties being to negotiate the purchase and sale of real estate for said copartnership. In the month of July, 1909, the defendant delivered to Cope, acting for plaintiffs, the following writing: "I hereby agree to sell my property described as follows, to wit: The east 20 feet of lot 1, in the block or square bounded by L and M, 8th and 9th streets, city of Sacramento, county of Sacramento, state of California, for the sum of eighty-four hundred dollars ($8,400). The payments are to be made as follows: The first payment is to be made on or before August 3rd, 1909, and is to be five hundred dollars. All other payments are to be made once a month, $50.00 per month is to be paid from the date of the first payment, together with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. on the deferred payments. At the end of one year and one-half from the date of this agreement, the sum of $5,000.00 should be paid on the purchase price of the property. Dated July 24th, 1909, at Sacramento, Cal. [Signed] Wm. N. Liness, for Owner." Claiming that the foregoing writing was executed by the defendant for the purpose of conferring upon them the authority to negotiate the sale of the property referred to therein for certain stipulated compensation, the plaintiffs brought this action to recover the commissions to which they claim to be entitled under said alleged agreement. The cause was tried by the court, without a jury, and judgment rendered and entered in favor of the plaintiffs for the sum of $400. This appeal is by the defendant from the judgment and the order denying him a new trial.

The complaint is in two counts—the one upon the writing and the other upon a quantum meruit. It is alleged that, in pursuance of said asserted authorization, the plaintiffs procured a party ready, willing, and able to purchase said property on the terms prescribed by said writing, but that defendant refused to sell the same to said party upon the terms so specified.

[1] The assault by the appellant upon the decision of the court below is founded mainly on the contention that the writing referred to, and upon which plaintiffs deemed themselves authorized to negotiate the sale of the property described therein, or to procure a purchaser thereof, is insufficient, under the provisions of the statute of frauds, to vest such authority in plaintiffs. In other words, the contention is that, to satisfy the requirements of the statute as to agreements of the character of the one concerned in this action, the authority to sell real estate for another must be specifically conferred by the writing upon the broker or person in whom the intention of the owner of the property was to vest such authority, and that the plaintiffs, not having been by said writing expressly employed to sell the property or to procure a purchaser thereof, cannot maintain this action.

Section 1624 of the Civil Code, subd. 6, provides that an agreement authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for compensation or a commission is invalid, unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, is in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged, or by his agent. Subdivision 6 of section 1973 of the Code of Civil Procedure contains a similar provision.

It will be noted, by an inspection of the instrument under which plaintiffs sought to sell the property, that said writing, while clearly enough disclosing a willingness on the part of the defendant to sell the property to some one upon certain specified terms, does not specifically or by express language authorize plaintiffs or any other particular person to sell or negotiate the sale of said property.

[2] The court, over the objections of the defendant, allowed the plaintiffs to prove by parol testimony that, as a matter of fact, the defendant entered into an oral agreement with them, at the time of the execution and delivery of the writing to them by defendant, by which he authorized them to sell the property upon the terms evidenced by said writing. We think it is very clear that the writing upon which plaintiffs undertook to act in the sale of the property mentioned therein does not meet the requirements of the statute of frauds, and therefore conferred no authority on them to procure a purchaser of said property. It follows, of course, that the court erred to the detriment of the defendant in allowing parol proof of plaintiffs' authorization to sell the property.

[3] It has been repeatedly held in this state that, to entitle a broker to recover commissions for effecting a sale of real property, he must show that he was employed by or on behalf of the owner to make the sale, and that his authority, or some note or memorandum thereof, was in writing, subscribed by the party to be charged, or by his authorized agent. Zeimer v. Antisell, 75 Cal. 511, 17 Pac. 642; McCarthy v. Loupe, 62 Cal. 299; Myres v. Surryhne, 67 Cal. 657, 8 Pac. 523; Toomey v. Dunphy, 86 Cal. 641, 25 Pac. 131.

In Toomey v. Dunphy, supra, the memorandum read: "Henry Toomey can arrange for the sale of my ranch in Nevada, as per within memorandum." The trial court excluded said memorandum as evidence, on the objection that "it neither specified that the employment of plaintiff was for compensation or a commission, nor the amount of any compensation or commission, for his services." The Supreme Court reversed the judgment for that ruling, and, among other things, said: "In each of those cases [referring to the cases cited above], it was held that no recovery by a broker or agent for effecting a sale of real estate could be had, unless he was employed, by an agreement in writing, for that purpose. But none of them involved the precise point in dispute. * * * The agreement referred to in the clause (of section 1624, Civ. Code), it is true, is one defining the right of the agent to effect a purchase or sale of realty, and the liability of the principal to recompense him for his services. But it is to be observed that the chief element in it is the employment. This must necessarily be so, because, as appears by the cases above cited, without proof, in writing, of the employment, no recovery can be had. If, then, no recovery can be had without such proof of the employment, it seems to us that the object of the clause will be fully subserved by holding that, in an agreement like the one in question, the expressing of the fact of employment, without stating that it is for compensation, will suffice."

It will readily be observed, from the result reached in the foregoing case, that the provision of the statute as to the mode of evidencing the authority in a broker to purchase or sell real estate would be entirely destroyed if it were true that his employment for that purpose need not be in writing, and may therefore be shown by parol testimony; for, since it is not necessary to specify the compensation in the agreement, or the note or memorandum thereof, which the broker is to receive for his services, there is left no other vital requirement of the statute as to agreements or writings of this character but the one with regard to the employment, or the authority by which the broker may negotiate the purchase or sale of real property for other persons. In other words, if, as is the contention here, the employment of a broker to sell real property for another is not required by the statute to be specifically evidenced by a writing, then the provision as to such agreements would be, in view of the decision in Toomey v. Dunphy, altogether meaningless and purposeless.

The sixth clause of section 1624 was added to that section by the Legislature of 1878, and, as all the authorities declare, the change thus made was to "prevent the assertion of false claims for compensation by brokers and agents against owners of real estate, which could be done with facility under the former rule." This being the object of the amendment or addition, it is obvious that it would signally fail of the accomplishment of such purpose if, after all, the broker could prove his employment by parol, in the absence of a writing evidencing his employment.

In the case at bar, as we have shown, and as is clear from the writing itself upon which plaintiffs rely for a recovery, there is absolutely no language used therein expressly or specifically employing plaintiffs to sell the property described in said writing. Indeed, as before suggested, there is nothing in the writing authorizing any person to sell the property. As already stated, the language of the writing is sufficient to support the inference that the defendant was willing to sell the property upon the terms specified in said writing, but the language falls far short of warranting the inference that the sale, if in point of fact one was contemplated or intended, was to be effected through the intervention of a broker or any other third party. Indeed, so far as the writing itself shows to the contrary, the proposition contained therein might have been directly submitted by the defendant himself to an intending purchaser.

Counsel for respondents have cited no authorities which support their construction of the sixth subdivision of section 1624 of the Civil Code. The case of Sanchez v. Yorba, 8 Cal. App. 490, 97 Pac. 205, cited by respondents, deals with an entirely different proposition from that presented in this case. In that case the memorandum upon which plaintiff recovered consisted of a letter, addressed to plaintiff's assignor by the owner of the land, in which the latter stated the terms upon which he would sell the "Yorba ranch," further saying therein, "we also agree to pay regular commission fees in case of a sale." This letter was held to be sufficient as a memorandum to confer authority on plaintiff's assignor to sell said "Yorba ranch" on the terms specified therein, and there can be no doubt of the correctness of the ruling.

We see no escape from the conclusion that the writing involved here was altogether insufficient to disclose the employment of plaintiffs by the defendant for the purpose of selling or procuring a purchaser of the land referred to in said instrument, and that it was improper and prejudicial for the court to have allowed parol testimony showing such employment under said writing.

The judgment and order are therefore reversed.

NATIONAL BANK OF CALIFORNIA AT LOS ANGELES v. MULFORD et al.

(Civ. 994.)

1. New Trial (§ 123*)—Sufficiency of Motion.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 659, requiring notice of intention to move for a new trial to designate the grounds upon which the motion will be made, and whether it will be made upon the minutes of the court, etc., and subdivision 4, providing that when the motion is upon the minutes, and the ground thereof is the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision, the notice must specify the particulars in which it is insufficient, and if the ground is errors in law occurring at trial, and excepted to, the notice must specify the particular errors, a notice made upon the minutes, which merely specifies as grounds thereof "the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision," and "errors in law occurring at trial, and excepted to by defendant," was insufficient.

2. New Trial (§ 123*)—Notice of Motion—Service upon "Adverse Party"—Who Are.

Where, in an action by an assignee to foreclose mortgages, in which the mortgagor, mortgagees, and transferee of the real estate were parties defendant, the judgment against the mortgagor and mortgagees was for only such deficiency as existed after applying the proceeds of the sale of the realty, the mortgagor and mortgagees were "adverse parties" to the transferee, within Code Civ. Proc. § 659, so as to require such transferee to serve his notice of intention to move for a new trial upon them, since the result of sustaining his contention that the land should not be subject to sale, after payment of a judgment against his codefendants, would increase the deficiency judgment against them.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. R. Hervey, Judge.

Action by the National Bank of California at Los Angeles against W. L. Mulford, the Los Angeles Paving Brick Company, and others. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for new trial, the last-named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. C. Austin, for appellant. Oscar A. Trippet, Schweitzer & Hutton, Force Parker, and Geo. W. Dryer, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Action to foreclose two mortgages. The facts, so far as necessary to the decision of the case, are as follows: For the purpose of securing the payment of his two promissory notes, the defendant W. L. Mulford executed to his codefendants Boggs and Noyes two mortgages, one upon chattels, the other upon certain real estate, after which he transferred all interest in the real estate mortgaged to defendant Los Angeles Paving Brick Company, appellant herein. Boggs and Noyes transferred the mortgages and notes to plaintiff, who, upon default in the payment thereof, instituted this action, joining W. L. Mulford, the Los Angeles Paving Brick Company, F. A. Noyes, and A. W. Boggs as parties defendant, and against each of whom plaintiff asked that a deficiency judgment be docketed in case the proceeds of the sale of the property mortgaged were found insufficient to pay the amount due.

The court made its findings, and, in accordance therewith, rendered judgment for plaintiff, decreeing, first, the sale of the chattels, and, if the proceeds thereof were inadequate to pay the judgment, then the sale of the real property mortgaged, and directing that, if the proceeds thereof were found insufficient to pay the balance of the judgment, costs, and expenses of sale, the sheriff, in his return thereof, should specify the amount of such deficiency, and the clerk should docket a judgment for the same against the defendants Mulford, Noyes, and Boggs; and that plaintiff have execution therefor. Notice of the entry of this judgment was, on December 10, 1909, duly served upon the appellant herein. On December 20, 1909, appellant served upon plaintiff alone notice of its intention to move for a new trial upon the minutes of the court. The motion, when made, was denied. Defendant appeals from that part of the judgment directing a sale of the real estate described in the mortgage, and from the order denying its motion for a new trial.

[1] Section 659, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that the party intending to move for a new trial must serve upon the adverse party a notice of his intention, designating the grounds upon which the motion will be made, and whether the same will be made upon affidavits, or the minutes of the court, or a bill of exceptions, or statement of the case. By subdivision 4 thereof, it is provided that: "When the motion is to be made on the minutes of the court, and the ground of the motion is the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict or other decision, the notice of motion must specify the particulars in which the evidence is alleged to be insufficient; and, if the ground of the motion is errors in law occurring at the trial, and excepted to by the moving party the notice must specify the particular errors upon which the party will rely. If the notice does not contain the specifications here indicated, when the motion is made on the minutes of the court, the motion must be denied." While the notice served upon plaintiff states that the motion will be made upon the minutes of the court, and in general terms specifies as the grounds thereof "the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision," and "errors in law occurring at the trial, and excepted to by defendant," it wholly fails to specify the particulars in which the evidence is alleged to be insufficient, or the particular errors in law relied upon to support the motion. It therefore follows that if the motion for new trial was made, as indicated in the notice, upon the minutes of the court, the ruling of the court could not have been other than a denial of the motion.

[2] It is likewise apparent that the ruling must be sustained, for the reason that the notice was not directed to or served upon Mulford, Noyes, or Boggs, the codefendants of appellant. A notice of motion for a new trial, however made, must, in order to be effectual, be served upon all adverse parties. Section 659, Code Civ. Proc. Appellant, conceding the necessity of such service, insists that neither of such codefendants is an adverse party. This position cannot be maintained. The whole contention of appellant is that its land should not be subjected to a sale, for the purpose of applying the proceeds thereof to the payment of the judgment rendered against its codefendants. Since, under the decision, the judgment rendered against Mulford, Noyes, and Boggs was for such deficiency only as might exist after applying the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged real estate to the amount found due, it is quite clear that the effect of sustaining appellant's claim would be adverse to their interest. The result would be an increase of the deficiency judgment against them to the extent of the amount which might be derived from a sale of the property. Estate of Pendergast, 143 Cal. 135, 76 Pac. 962; Boob v. Hall, 107 Cal. 160, 40 Pac. 117; Johnson v. Phenix Ins. Co., 152 Cal. 196, 92 Pac. 182; Ford & Sanborn Co. v. Braslan, etc., Co., 10 Cal. App. 762, 103 Pac. 946; Estate of Young, 149 Cal. 173, 85 Pac. 145.

[3] For like reason, namely, a failure to comply with the provisions of section 650, Code of Civil Procedure, thus depriving the adverse parties of all participation in the settling and allowance of the statement and an opportunity to submit amendments thereto, it cannot be considered as a bill of exceptions on the appeal from the judgment. Moreover, the appeal from the judgment was not taken until some five months after service of notice of entry thereof; hence, in no event could the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings be considered. Section 939, Code Civ. Proc.

[4] Appellant assigns as error the failure of the court to sustain its motion to strike from the amended complaint filed certain designated portions thereof. The only reference to the question, as shown by the record, is a paper found in the transcript, which appears to be a copy of a notice that appellant would make such motion. It does not appear that such motion was ever made, or any ruling had thereon. To entitle the appellant to a review of an alleged error in denying a motion, the record should disclose that the motion was made, the grounds thereof, and the ruling of the court. None of these facts are made to appear.

[5] The court found that the payment of a reasonable attorney's fee was secured by the mortgage, and so treated it in the decree. Appellant claims that, under the pleadings, this was error. In support of this contention, appellant cites Irvine v. Perry, 119 Cal. 357, 51 Pac. 544, 949; Klokke v. Escailler, 124 Cal. 297, 56 Pac. 1113; and Boob v. Hall, 107 Cal. 160, 40 Pac. 117. An examination of these cases, however, discloses that none of them is in point. In the case at bar, copies of the notes and mortgage were attached to the complaint and made a part thereof. The notes contained a provision to the effect that in case of suit the maker thereof would pay a reasonable attorney's fee in such suit. The mortgage was given "as security for the payment of those two certain promissory notes," etc. It thus clearly appears that the mortgage was given to secure the performance of the covenants contained in the notes, one of which covenants was to pay an attorney's fee. The facts as shown by the complaint and found by the court bring the case within the doctrine announced in Peachy v. Witter, 131 Cal. 316, 63 Pac. 468, County Bank v. Goldtree, 129 Cal. 160, 61 Pac. 785, and Burr v. Cross, 3 Cal. App. 414, 86 Pac. 824, all of which distinguish the case at bar from those cited by appellant.

[6] The only questions left for review on the appeal upon the judgment roll are the sufficiency of the findings to support the judgment, as to which no question is raised, and the ruling of the court in overruling defendant's demurrer to the amended complaint. While this is one of 12 enumerated assignments of error, as to all of which counsel says his argument is intended to apply, he makes no attempt to point out wherein the ruling upon the demurrer was erroneous, or to specify any reason why the same should have been otherwise. "It is due to this court from the members of the bar to point out clearly and concisely the rulings complained of as erroneous, and the reasons why they are so, with reference to authorities, if any. In case counsel will not take the trouble to do so, we shall deem the matter as of not sufficient importance to merit notice in an opinion." People v. McLean, 135 Cal. 309, 67 Pac. 770.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; H. C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by the Napa Savings Bank against the County of Napa. From a default judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank M. Silva and Theo. A. Bell, for appellant. A. J. Hull, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The only question for determination is whether the complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; the appeal being from a judgment entered by default against the defendant for failure to answer after its demurrer had been overruled.

After a suitable allegation of the corporate capacity of plaintiff and of defendant, it appears: "That on the first Monday in March, 1909, at 12 o'clock meridian, plaintiff was engaged in the business of a savings and loan corporation, viz., in the savings bank business, at Napa, Cal., and had a capital of $25,000, a surplus of $6,500 and savings deposits in the sum of $279,741.23; and at said time and on said date the plaintiff had and owned the following property, viz.: Real estate, assessed at the sum of $640; money on hand assessed at $1,540; solvent credits, not secured by mortgage or trust deeds, assessed at $40,910.28; promissory notes secured by mortgage or trust deeds on real estate, assessed at $164,426.53; and money (including capital and surplus) and savings deposits invested in quasi public corporation bonds of the state (incorporated and organized under the laws of the state of California, and having their respective places of business in this state) in the sum of $89,825 and money (including capital and surplus) and savings deposits invested in the city of Stockton (California) municipal bonds in the sum of $4,395.50, and at the time aforesaid the plaintiff neither had nor owned any property other than the said property above stated; that the said capital, surplus, and savings deposits were intermingled and used as a whole, and invested in the property and loans above stated, and that all of plaintiff's said property had been assessed for the purpose of taxation for the fiscal year 1909–1910, long prior to the time of the assessment herein complained of and contested; that on the 30th day of July, 1909, the board of equalization made an order directing the assessor of Napa county to assess to plaintiff the money and savings deposits invested in the said bonds aforesaid as credits, and on said day the said assessor did enter said assessment upon the assessment roll and assessed the same, at the sum of $10 and no more; that said board of equalization was in session from the first Monday in July, 1909, and for the term of 20 days thereafter, under an extension of 20 days granted to it by the state board of equalization, and on the 8th day of August, 1909, the said extension of 20 days expired, and that said board of equalization thereupon ceased to exist, and had no right or authority to sit as such board after the said 8th day of August, 1909; that on the 2d day of September, 1909, the said board of supervisors of the county of Napa met as a pretended or assumed board of equalization and raised the said assessment of $10, made by the assessor as aforesaid, from $10 to the sum of $94,184.50, thereby assessing the said money and savings deposits so invested in said bonds, which were so invested on the first Monday in March, 1909, and had been so invested for a long time prior thereto."

Then follows an allegation that the said bonds of the quasi public corporations "are secured by a mortgage or trust deed of all the real and personal property owned by the respective corporations," and that all of said real and personal property, together with the franchises of said corporations in the state, "have each been assessed for the fiscal year 1909–1910, at the full cash value, without deduction of the amount so secured by mortgage or trust deed covering the same or any part thereof." The plaintiff paid to the tax collector of the county the sum of $1,864.84, the amount of said tax, under a written protest, and the money was afterwards paid into the county treasury by said tax collector.

There are two grounds upon which respondent seeks to justify the action of the lower court in overruling the demurrer, and we think both are well taken.

[1] 1. There can be no doubt that the board of equalization and the board of supervisors are two distinct constitutional bodies, although composed of the same members. Section 9 of article 13 of the Constitution provides for a state board of equalization, and also for a county board. As to the latter the section is: "The boards of supervisors of the several counties of the state shall constitute boards of equalization for their respective counties, whose duty is shall be to equalize the valuation of the taxable property in the county for the purpose of taxation." Section 13 of the same article provides that "the Legislature shall pass all laws necessary to carry out the provisions of this article." In pursuance of these provisions, suitable laws have been passed by the Legislature prescribing the duties and directing the mode of exercise of the powers of the boards of equalization. They are contained in the Political Code from section 3672 to 3705, inclusive. Said section 3672 is that "the board of supervisors of each county must meet on the first Monday in July of each year, to examine the assessment book and equalize the assessment of property in the county. It must continue in session for that purpose, from time to time, until the business of equalization is disposed of, but not later than the third Monday in July." Section 3705 authorizes the state board of equalization to extend this time, but not to exceed 20 days. It is thus to be seen that the order in question here was made at a time not within the period during which the statute provides that all the acts of the board of equalization must be performed. We think it necessarily follows that the said board was entirely without authority to raise said assessment and that the order purporting to do so was in excess of jurisdiction and void. The case of Buswell v. Supervisors, etc., 116 Cal. 351, 48 Pac. 226, is quite distinct from this. There the order complained of was made within the time during which the board of equalization could exercise its function as such, although it was later than the third Monday in July, and the order of the state board attempting to extend this period was nugatory. The learned justice who wrote the opinion recognized the distinction between that case and this in the declaration that "the sittings of the county board did not exceed the time contemplated by law to which they might have extended."

2. But, whether the foregoing position be sound or not, it cannot be disputed that plaintiff could not be legally assessed upon property to which it had no title, and in which it had no interest. All the moneys owned by plaintiff and due to plaintiff from others were assessed to it, and it could certainly be only by virtue of some peculiar provision of the law that money which had been paid to another for other property should be assessed to plaintiff.

[2, 3] Of course, there is no contention that the bonds which were purchased by plaintiff were assessable. The city of Stockton bonds are exempt, in accordance with section 1¾ of the state Constitution, and the quasi public bonds are not taxable to plaintiff as that would be double taxation. Section 3617, Pol. Code; Germania Trust Co. v. San Francisco, 128 Cal. 589, 61 Pac. 178; Estate of Fair, 128 Cal. 607, 61 Pac. 184; Estate of Pichoir, 128 Cal. 615, 61 Pac. 1130. The principle obviously is that these bonds represent an interest in the property, and, since the whole of the property has already been assessed for its full value, the bond interest has been included in that assessment. As stated in the Germania Trust Co. Case, supra: "Double taxation does not necessarily consist in assessing the same property twice to the same person, but may consist in requiring a double contribution to the same tax on account of the same property, though the assessments are to different persons." If plaintiff had purchased a certain tract of land for $94,184.50, and had paid the purchase price before it was taxable, it could hardly be contended that thereafter it should be assessed on both the money and the land. The situation here is no different in principle, and it is identical as far as the assessment of the purchase price is concerned.

Appellant seems to think the tax was justified by subdivision 6 of section 3617 of the Political Code, providing that "credits, claims, debts, and demands due, owing or accruing for or on account of moneys deposited with savings and loan corporations or with building and loan associations, shall, for the purpose of taxation, be deemed and treated as an interest in the property of such corporation, and shall not be assessed to the creditor or owner thereof." Of course, this simply means that these moneys shall be considered as a part of the assets of the corporation and taxable as such, and it necessarily implies that the corporation shall be subject to this burden only while the deposits remain a part of its assets. In other words, the money shall be taxed to the owner of it, and not to the depositor, who is the creditor of the corporation. The proposition appears so simple as hardly to need elaboration. The position of appellant amounts to this: The plaintiff receives certain deposits, and thereby becomes the debtor of the depositors. These deposits become the property of a third person and are assessed to him, but, notwithstanding this, plaintiff is required to pay a tax upon its debt to the depositors for money which it no longer owns. A savings bank, like any other corporation or a natural person, in the contemplation of the law, should be assessed but once on all of its property and not upon its property and also the money invested therein. Burke v. Badlam, 57 Cal. 594; Germania Trust Co. v. San Francisco, supra.

In Cooley on Taxation (3d Ed.) p. 395, it is said: "We do not see, for instance, how a tax on a merchant's stock distinctly by value could be supported, when by the same authority and for the same purpose the same stock was taxed by value as a part of his whole property. This is a very different thing from one tax upon property and another upon the business, though the latter may indirectly reach the property. Here is no circumlocution, no question of ultimate effects; but a tax levied twice on the same subject, only under different names. The same may be said of a tax on the property of a corporation and also on the capital which is invested in the property. If the latter is taxed as property, this also is duplicate taxation, and as much unequal as would be the taxation of a farmer's stock by value when on the same basis it is taxed as a part of his general property." It may be said that in some of the states it has been held that double taxation is not necessarily illegal. Cooley, supra, p. 405, and notes. But the rule here is as stated in People v. Parks, 58 Cal. 624, that "duplicate or triplicate taxation, at the same time, for the same purpose, and upon the same property, is void by whatever standard levied, as being neither equal nor uniform." It is hardly necessary to add that this view does not contemplate the remission of the tax on the deposits, but simply demands that the bank shall pay taxes only on all of its property which is not exempt from taxation by virtue of the Constitution itself.

We have not deemed it necessary to follow counsel in their interesting discussion of the peculiar characteristics of the various kinds of banks that operate in this state. The question for determination, as we view it, involves a simple principle of law that is well settled, and in the application of that principle we are confronted with a simple problem in mathematics rather than any complicated proposition of logic.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

PEOPLE v. DAVENPORT. (Cr. 358.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Nov. 29, 1911.)

1. Larceny (§ 55*) — Sufficiency of Evidence.

Evidence held to sustain a conviction of larceny from the person.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

2. Criminal Law (§ 798*)—Instructions—Deliberations of Jury.

The court gave accused's requested charge, as modified by inserting the quoted part, to the effect that, "if any one, or any member, of you," should believe that accused has not been proven guilty by the evidence, to a moral certainty and beyond every reasonable doubt, those holding that opinion should vote for acquittal, and should so adhere to their opinion until convinced, beyond all reasonable doubt, that they are wrong; "but it is the duty of every juror to reason with his fellow jurors, to the end that he may join in a lawful verdict, and to discard any opinion he may have formed, when convinced that such opinion is not justified by the evidence," but that a mere probability or a preponderance of the evidence is not sufficient to convict; nor is it sufficient that upon the doctrine of chances guilt be more probable than innocence. Held, that the modification could not have led the jury to believe that any juror should vote to convict, unless satisfied of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, and was proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1940; Dec. Dig. § 798.*]

3. Criminal Law (§ 829*)—Instructions—Requests—Charges Already Given.

A requested charge that any juror having a reasonable doubt of guilt should not be influenced to vote for conviction, because a majority of the jury happen to favor a conviction, was sufficiently covered by a charge that, if any member of the jury, after deliberating on all the evidence, should believe that accused has not been proven guilty, to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt, such jurors should vote for acquittal, and should adhere to their opinion until convinced, beyond all reasonable doubt, that they are wrong.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

4. Criminal Law (§ 1171*)—Appeal—Harmless Error—Improper Argument.

Accused's counsel stated that he excepted to the statements by the district attorney in argument that accused was a member of the rogues' gallery, whereupon the district attorney stated that the doctor identified the picture of accused in the rogues' gallery, when accused's attorney stated that there was no such evidence in the case, which the district attorney well knew, and also knew that it was the grossest possible error to make such statement. The district attorney then stated that his best recollection was "that in the cross-examination—and if I am mistaken I stand subject to correction"—when the court interrupted that it had no recollection of the doctor making such statement, and that the jury would disregard the district attorney's statement, whereupon he stated that he had no desire to prejudice accused's rights, and that it was sufficient to say that the circumstances of identification were complete. The court in the instructions directed the jury to carefully distinguish between the facts testified to and statements by counsel in argument as to what facts were proved, and to only consider the facts testified to by witnesses. Held that, though the evidence did not show that accused's picture was in the rogues' gallery, the impropriety of the district attorney's statement to that effect was not reversible error.

larceny. From the judgment of conviction and an order denying a motion for new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Harry L. Price, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, for the People.

HALL, J. Defendant was charged with the crime of grand larceny, for stealing from the person of one B. H. Baumeister, on the 12th day of March of this year, one diamond stud of the value of $500. He was found guilty as charged, and upon judgment being rendered against him he took an appeal to this court from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] The first contention made by appellant is that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict.

The prosecution introduced at the trial the testimony of two witnesses, Dr. B. H. Baumeister and Dr. G. N. Torello, who are physicians. The testimony of these witnesses, as set forth in the transcript, shows the following state of facts:

On the 12th day of March of this year, Dr. B. H. Baumeister and Dr. G. N. Torello visited a patient at a house on the Mission road. Just before leaving the house, Dr. Baumeister stood in front of a mirror to brush his clothes, and then observed that a large diamond stud that he was then wearing was in its place in his shirt front. It was fastened to the shirt by a screw inserted in a round hole or eyelet, worked in the shirt front for that purpose. The shirt was new, having been worn but three or four times. The witnesses left the house and walked about three blocks to Mission and Geneva streets, for the purpose of taking an inbound Mission street car. This was at about 5 o'clock p. m. When they arrived at Mission and Geneva streets, which was a transfer point, the car was not there, and they were obliged to wait a few minutes until it arrived. While waiting they stood conversing, and at this point Dr. Torello saw and particularly observed the diamond stud in its proper place in the shirt front of Dr. Baumeister. The car having arrived, Dr. Baumeister started toward the front end of the car, for the purpose of boarding it at that end, but was called to the rear by Dr. Torello, and turned back to the rear end, as likewise did three men, who had been advancing with Dr. Baumeister toward the front end. (The car was of the type having an inclosed center for passengers, and an open space at each end, also fitted with seats for passengers.) As Dr. Baumeister approached the rear entrance to the car, he was followed by the three men just mentioned. As he reached the platform, one of these men mounted to the first step, grasped with his hands the two stanchions, and crowded against Dr. Baumeister from the rear, while the other two men crowded against the doctor from either side, and a little in front of him. These men jostled and pushed against him, and one at least jammed an elbow into the doctor's chest, with sufficient force to hurt. He was then hemmed in, so that he could neither advance nor retreat for a period of time, estimated by the witness as the time that it would take to count five, counting slowly, when he was released, and passed into the car, as did also one of the said men, identified by the witness (Dr. Baumeister) as the defendant. These men (the two at his sides?) removed their hats, but at what particular point of time is not made clear by the testimony. The car had proceeded but about half a block from the point where the witness had boarded it when the defendant, who in the meantime had passed out of the inclosed portion, pulled the bell cord, and as the car slowed up, but before it had stopped, the three men mentioned got off the car, and ran towards the point where they had got on. Dr. Baumeister thereupon immediately felt for his diamond stud, and found that it was gone. His shirt front bore finger prints, and the hole in which the stud had been fastened was elongated as from pulling on it. The car was not crowded, although all the seats were occupied, and Dr. Baumeister came into close contact, from the time he left the sidewalk until he found his stud gone, only with the three men mentioned as having hemmed him in on the platform of the car.

Defendant was not apprehended until 3½ months after the occurrence in question, but Dr. Baumeister was positive in his identification of him as one of the three men—as the one who pressed against and jostled the witness from the right. In this connection, the witness testified that the man who jostled him from the right had a pimply face, which caused the witness, as a medical man, to especially notice him. The record does not disclose whether or not the defendant, at the time of his trial, had such characteristic or not, but the purpose and pertinency of some questions asked the witness by defendant's counsel upon cross-examination are most readily explainable on the theory that he had.

The only witness for the defense was the defendant, and he was asked but one question, and in reply to that testified that he was not on a Mission street car on either the 11th, 12th, or 13th of March of the present year.

We do not think that it can be doubted but that the evidence, of which we have just given a résumé, amply justifies the verdict of the jury. In our opinion, it strongly supports the conclusion that the three men were acting in concert throughout the transaction, that they jostled and hemmed in the prosecuting witness for the purpose of enabling one of their number to steal the stud, and that such purpose was accomplished.

In addition to the probative effect of the circumstances affirmatively testified to by the witnesses for the people, the defendant, as a witness, denied that he was present when the offense was committed. The jury by their verdict have stamped this testimony as false. His false statement that he was not present but adds probative force to the incriminating circumstances in evidence against him.

The fact that Dr. Baumeister could not swear that defendant took the stud is of little consequence. The evidence most cogently tends to prove that one of the three stole the stud, and that all three were acting in concert to accomplish the larceny of the article. The witness did in fact testify upon cross-examination that one of the two who hemmed him in from the sides and front took the stud. This, of course, was but his opinion, and was a fact to be determined by the jury. They have determined the fact, as we think, very justly against the defendant.

If any authority be needed to fortify our conviction as to the sufficiency of the evidence in this case to support the verdict of guilty, it may be found in People v. Appleton, 120 Cal. 250, 52 Pac. 582, where a verdict of larceny was sustained upon evidence, as we think, less convincing, and certainly not stronger, than in the case at bar. Similar cases may be found in Commonwealth v. Cronan, 155 Mass. 393, 29 N. E. 639; Burns v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 71 S. W. 965; and People v. Williams, 242 Ill. 197, 89 N. E. 1030.

People v. Williams was cited by appellant, and we think is a most unfortunate citation for him; for, while a conviction was reversed as to Williams upon evidence vastly weaker than such as is presented in the case at bar, the conviction was sustained against Jackson, the codefendant of Williams, on evidence no stronger and in its essential features similar to the evidence against appellant in the case at bar.

[2] Appellant complains of the action of the court in modifying an instruction requested by him. The instruction as given is as follows; the portion added by the court being inclosed in brackets: "If any one, or any number, of you, after deliberating on all the evidence, should be of the opinion that defendant has not been proven to be guilty by the evidence in this case, to a moral certainty and beyond every reasonable doubt, those entertaining that opinion should vote in favor of a verdict of not guilty, and should so adhere to their opinion until convinced beyond all reasonable doubt that they are wrong. [But it is the duty of every juror to reason with his fellow jurors, to the end that he may join in a lawful verdict, and to discard any opinion he may have formed, when convinced that such opinion is not justified by the evidence in the case.] You are instructed that mere probabilities are not sufficient to warrant a conviction; nor is it sufficient that the greater weight or preponderance of the evidence supports the allegations of the information; nor is it sufficient that, upon the doctrine of chances, it is more probable that the defendant is guilty than that he is innocent to warrant a conviction."

The modification was doubtless intended to admonish the jury against the fault of adhering, out of pride of opinion, or the like, to an opinion once formed, though subsequently convinced of the erroneousness of such opinion. Its purpose was manifestly to direct the jurors' attention to their duty to reason fairly and honestly with one another upon the evidence; and while it probably was quite unnecessary to so admonish them it could not, when read in connection with what precedes and follows it, give the jurors the idea, as claimed by appellant, that any juror should vote for conviction, unless satisfied of the guilt of the defendant beyond all reasonable doubt. Not only in this instruction, but in others, the jury was repeatedly and pointedly charged that the defendant should not be convicted, unless the jurors were convinced, beyond all reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty, of his guilt. The court did not err in modifying the instruction.

[3] Appellant also complains of the refusal of the court to give the following instruction: "If, after consideration of the whole case, any juror should entertain a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendant, it is the duty of such juror so entertaining such doubt to vote for a verdict of not guilty. In such case he should not be influenced to vote guilty, for the reason that a majority of the jury should happen to be in favor of a verdict of guilty." But the principle of law involved in the first part of this proposed instruction was repeatedly stated to the jury in the charge of the court, and the latter part was substantially and sufficiently covered by the instruction first discussed herein. Again the court, at the request of the defendant, instructed the jury: "That the people must establish every fact necessary to prove the defendant guilty of the crime charged to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt and that you and each of you must be satisfied of his guilt under these tests before you can, under the law, convict him." (The italics are ours.) From the whole charge, we are satisfied that no juror could have possibly supposed that he should either vote for, or be influenced to vote for, a verdict of guilty because a majority of the jurors were in favor of such a verdict.

Appellant, in a somewhat general way, complains of the refusal of the court to give several other instructions asked by defendant. It is sufficient to say that some were clearly erroneous, and for that reason were properly refused; and the others were fully covered by instructions that were given.

[4] The only remaining point to be considered is the contention made that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct in his argument to the jury, requiring a reversal of the judgment. Upon this point, the record before us is as follows: "During the argument to the jury by Mr. Berry, assistant district attorney, the following proceedings occurred: Mr. Price: We take an exception to the statement of the district attorney. The Court: What was the statement? Mr. Price: That the defendant was a member of the rogues' gallery. Mr. Berry: I said that the doctor identified the picture of the defendant in the rogues' gallery. Mr. Price: There is no such evidence in this case, and the district attorney knows that very well, and he knows that it is the grossest error possible to state such a thing when it is not in the evidence. Mr. Berry: My best recollection is this, that in the cross-examination—and if I am mistaken I stand subject to correction— The Court: I have no recollection of the doctor making such a statement. The jury will disregard the statement of the district attorney in that particular. Mr. Berry: Yes. I have no desire to prejudice the defendant's rights. It is sufficient to say that the circumstances of the identification were quite complete." It is fair to assume from the foregoing statement that the district attorney was in good faith attempting to state what he believed the evidence to be, and was not, as in many of the cases reported in the books, baldly stating an injurious matter as of his own knowledge. The district attorney was mistaken as to what the evidence showed, and the court, besides throwing against him the weight of its recollection, promptly directed the jury to disregard the statement of the district attorney. In this the district attorney at once acquiesced, and in effect withdrew the remark. The court again, in its instructions, admonished the jury to carefully distinguish between facts testified to by witnesses, and statements made by counsel, or contained in their arguments, as to what facts had been proved, and if there was a variance to consider only the facts testified to by the witnesses. Under these circumstances, we do not think the matter of such importance as to require a reversal of the judgment.

In People v. Bradbury, 151 Cal. 675, 91 Pac. 497, where defendant was on trial upon a charge with assault to commit rape, after showing that an employé of the defendant had told the witness upon the stand that he had knocked defendant down, and after having obtained an answer to the effect that the employé did not tell the witness the reason why he had knocked the defendant down, the district attorney asked the question, "Did he say he knocked him down for insulting his wife?" This referred to a matter in no way connected with the charge for which Bradbury was being tried. As the witness had just stated that the hired man did not say why he had knocked the defendant down, there is much better reason to believe that the district attorney was prompted to ask the last question solely for the purpose of getting before the jury by innuendo a damaging matter as against the defendant—especially damaging in view of the charges against Bradbury then being tried—than there is to believe that in the case at bar the district attorney sought to prejudice the rights of the defendant. And certain it is that the action of the court to safeguard the rights of the defendant was prompt, and readily acquiesced in by the district attorney.

The case of People v. Bradbury, supra, amply supports the conclusion that the judgment in the case at bar should not be reversed for the action of the district attorney above discussed, and we so hold.

We find nothing in the record to support the claim of defendant that the district attorney frequently or at all referred to the defendant as a thief.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

CONLIN v. OSBORN. (S. F. 5,567.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 116*)—CONTRACT—RESCISSION—STATUTES.

Under Civ. Code, § 1691, subd. 2, providing that a party can rescind only upon restoring to the other party everything of value which he has received under the contract, one who contracted to purchase land need not, as a condition precedent to rescission, restore to the vendor the abstract of title, which was lost during an earthquake, where the contract did not require the vendor to furnish an abstract, nor need he offer to pay the commissions which the vendor expended in securing a purchaser.

2. CONTRACTS (§ 260*) — RESCISSION — CONSTRUCTION.

Civ. Code, § 1689, subd. 4, providing that a party may rescind if the consideration before it is rendered him fails in any material respect from any cause, a partial failure of consideration authorizes a rescission, despite subdivision 2 providing that a party may rescind, if, through the fault of the opposite party, the consideration fails in whole or in part.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 1173; Dec. Dig. § 260.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1002*)—VERDICT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

The verdict of the jury upon conflicting evidence is conclusive.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 109*)—RESCISSION—STATUTE.

Under Civ. Code, § 1689, subd. 4, providing that a party may rescind if the consideration before it is rendered him fails in any material respect, one who contracted to purchase lands with buildings thereon, and who was not in possession, may rescind upon the destruction of the buildings before the consummation of the contract.

8. EVIDENCE (§ 113*)—RELEVANCY.

Where the vendor of land with a building thereon sought to enforce the contract after the destruction of the building, upon the theory that the building was of no value, it was proper to show that the rent paid for the building was a net rent; the lessee paying taxes and insurance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 259-296; Dec. Dig. § 113.*]

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where a vendor sought to enforce a contract for the purchase of land with a building thereon, after the destruction of the building, admission of evidence as to the amount paid by the lessee for insurance on the building was harmless, if erroneous; the purchaser being entitled to show that the rent paid the owner was a net rent, in addition to paying taxes and insurance.

10. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 341*)—RESCISSION—RECOVERY OF PAYMENTS BY PURCHASER—EVIDENCE.

In an action by a purchaser to recover a deposit paid under a rescinded contract for the purchase of land, evidence that the vendor had never offered him possession was admissible to show that there was no basis for the presumption that the parties considered the contract as substantially completed.

13. PLEADING (§ 36*)—ADMISSIONS.

The pleading by plaintiff of defendant's ratification of his agent's contract is not an admission by plaintiff that he was aware of the contents of a written ratification given by defendant to the agent in which defendant agreed to pay the agent's commissions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 81-86; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

14. EVIDENCE (§ 471*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—CONCLUSION.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2149-2185; Dec. Dig. § 471.*]

15. EVIDENCE (§ 219*)—ADMISSIONS—ADMISSION BY CONDUCT.

Where a vendor of land with a building thereon sought to enforce a contract of purchase after the destruction of the building, on the ground that the building was of no value, evidence that he filed proofs of loss for and collected a large amount of fire insurance was admissible, as an admission that his contention that the building was valueless was untrue.

16. EVIDENCE (§ 113*)—COMPETENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Where a vendor, upon the theory that a building was valueless, sought to enforce a contract for the purchase of land and the building, which was destroyed by fire before the consummation of the contract, evidence that the land was worth $81,000 was admissible to contradict the vendor's contention that the building was worth only a few hundred dollars by showing that he would not probably have allowed such valuable property to have remained in a condition where it would produce no income.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 259-296; Dec. Dig. § 113.*]

17. EVIDENCE (§§ 474½, 488*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—NONEXPERT.

One not an expert on matters of interest or property values is not competent to testify whether the rent reserved by a lease was greater or less than the usual rate of interest on investments, or as to the increase in the value of the land after purchase.

18. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 341*) — RESCISSION—EVIDENCE.

In an action by the purchaser of land to recover a deposit made under a contract which he had rescinded, evidence that the vendor had been compelled to pay the interest on a mortgage because the purchaser had not carried out his contract was immaterial; the purchaser not being concerned with the vendor's relations to third persons.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 1008-1017; Dec. Dig. § 341.*]

19. EVIDENCE (§ 143*)—MATERIALITY.

Evidence of matters admitted because not denied in the pleadings is immaterial, and properly excluded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 426-428; Dec. Dig. § 143.*]

20. EVIDENCE (§ 266*)—DECLARATIONS.

Where the purchaser of land with a building thereon rescinded the contract after the destruction of the building, evidence that the vendor told a third person that the purchaser might have insurance money, and that he would get the purchaser a new tenant, was inadmissible in an action by the purchaser for his deposit under the contract; the purchaser not being bound by the vendor's statements to a third party.

22. Evidence (§ 543*)—Opinion Evidence—Expert Testimony.

Where the purchaser of land with a building thereon rescinded a contract upon the destruction of the building, evidence by an expert as to the cost of replacing the building, based upon the cost of constructing a certain building, was excluded because the purchaser could not be bound by testimony relating to the cost of a single building.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2356½–2358; Dec. Dig. § 543.*]

23. Evidence (§ 145*) — Competency — Remoteness.

Where a contract for the purchase of land with a building thereon was rescinded upon the destruction of the building, evidence as to the cost of replacing it, based upon the cost of constructing buildings at the time of the trial, which was several years after the rescission of the contract, is inadmissible, being too remote.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by James Conlin against E. T. Osborn. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying his motion to set aside the verdict, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Robert H. Countryman, for appellant. Frohman & Jacobs, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment against him, from the order denying his motion to set aside the verdict before entry of judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The action was one for the recovery of $10,000 paid as a deposit on account of a contract of sale of real property situate in the city and county of San Francisco. Plaintiff negotiated with Sage, Dealey & Co., a corporation, which was defendant's agent, for the purchase of a piece of land and the improvements thereon located on Hayes street near Van Ness avenue. On April 16, 1906, a written contract was signed by the proper officers of the said corporation. This writing acknowledged the receipt from James Conlin of $10,000 to secure the sale to him of the real property and improvements in question for $110,000. The sale was made subject to the owner's approval, and the seller was to pay his proportion of the taxes accruing from June 30, 1905, up to the date of the "close of sale." Thirty-five days from the date of acceptance by the seller were allowed for search of title, and, if title was not found good, the vendor was to have 90 days in which to remove any defects, but, failing in that, was to return the deposit immediately. The writing also provided that if the title was found good, and the sale not closed in accordance with the terms of the agreement, the deposit was to be forfeited as fixed and settled damages. The contract as set forth in this receipt was accepted on the day of its date by James Conlin, who in writing bound himself to buy the property at the price and upon the terms named. It was alleged in the complaint that on April 16, 1906, there stood on the property improvements consisting of several buildings which "were of great value as and constituted a material part of the consideration for defendant's entering into said agreement and a material inducement to him to enter into said agreement to purchase said property." It was also alleged and proved that on April 17, 1906, an abstract of title belonging to defendant was delivered to plaintiff for use by him in having the title searched; that on the same day he delivered it to his attorneys; and that on the following day, without fault on his or their part, it was destroyed in the great conflagration, which also swept out of existence the improvements on the real property, the subject of the contract of sale. There is an allegation in the complaint on information and belief that the lien of a mortgage stood against the property at the time of the contract, and that it had not been removed before this suit was commenced. There is a further averment that on May 8, 1906, plaintiff rescinded the contract by notice in writing to the defendant and to Sage, Dealey & Co., his agent. These, omitting the purely formal matters, are the essential contents of plaintiff's pleading.

After his demurrer to the complaint had been overruled, defendant answered, admitting the existence of a mortgage, but averring an agreement with plaintiff that enough money might be retained by the latter from the purchase price of the property to satisfy said mortgage. There are also allegations that the improvements were of no material value and did not constitute any part of the consideration for the execution of the contract of April 16, 1906, and that the action was brought because the real property had decreased in value after April 18, 1906, plaintiff seeking to be excused from a contract upon which he might lose money. The verdict on general and special issues was in favor of the plaintiff, and the judgment entered was for $8,000, plaintiff having agreed at the trial to allow $2,000 to be applied to the recoupment of defendant for that amount paid by the latter to his agent, Sage, Dealey & Co., for negotiating the sale. The jury found the value of the land alone on the 16th of April, 1906, to have been $97,000, and that of the improvements $13,000.

[1] Appellant's counsel take the position that his demurrer was good, and that his motion to set aside the verdict should have been granted because it is neither averred nor proven that, before the attempted rescission, plaintiff restored or offered to restore everything received by him under the contract in accordance with subdivision 2 of section 1691 of the Civil Code. He insists that, before being in a position to rescind, plaintiff should have paid for the destroyed abstract of title, and should have offered to defendant the $2,000 which the latter had paid to his agent. The answer to this is that the abstract of title was not received "under the contract," and it was not shown by the pleading or otherwise that plaintiff was a party to the payment of the commission, or that he knew anything about such payment prior to the serving of his notice of rescission. Neither the abstract nor the commission formed any of the subject-matter of the contract which is set out in full in the complaint. The abstract was doubtless loaned to plaintiff as a matter of convenience to assist his attorneys in an examination of the records, and it was no more a part of the consideration or of something received "under the contract" than defendant's carriage would have been if he had loaned it to plaintiff for the latter's convenience in going to inspect the property. If the vehicle had been destroyed by some unavoidable accident during its use by the plaintiff, no one would claim that its restoration would have been a prerequisite to a rescission of the contract for the purchase of the realty. Defendant testified that he never told plaintiff prior to the date of rescission what commission he had paid to the corporation that acted as his real estate agent; and, as contracts for the sale of property on commission are frequently contingent upon the completion of the transaction, there could have been no presumption that any amount had been paid prior to that time.

[2] Appellant's counsel in a long and able discussion ask us to hold, first, that the burning of the improvements was not a failure of consideration in "any material respect"; and, second, that, where without fault on the part of the vendor such improvements are destroyed, the loss must fall upon the vendee under the theory that he is the equitable owner of the property because equity will presume that to have been done which should have been done. Subdivision 4 of section 1689 of the Civil Code provides that "a party to a contract may rescind the same * * * if such consideration before it is rendered to him fails in a material respect from any cause."

Upon the first point, appellant's counsel assert that this section must be construed not as authorizing rescission of a contract because of partial failure of consideration, but must be interpreted in such manner that the words "material respect" be held to refer to something going to the root of the contract—something which is of its essence, and the absence of which would destroy for a party wishing to rescind the whole purpose of the agreement. We do not think that subdivision 4 of the section requires such modification to be implied, nor do we think its literal interpretation makes it inconsistent with subdivision 2 of the same section which provides that a party may rescind "if through the fault of the party from whom he rescinds the consideration for his obligation fails in whole or in part." The effect of subdivision 4 is somewhat broader than subdivision 2 when applied to executory contracts, but the former subdivision might by its terms operate upon a consideration already paid under a partially executed contract if the consideration should fail in whole or in part by the fault of the party through whom rescission is sought. The words, "before it is rendered to him," contained in subdivision 4, indicate the difference in the scope of the two subdivisions; the latter being strictly limited to executory contracts. Of course, the failure of consideration must be in a "material respect."

[3] We will not follow counsel in his discussion of the evidence in which he seeks to demonstrate that the buildings were old; that the income derived from them was less than the interest on the purchase price would have been if it had been deposited in a savings bank; that not the income, but the speculative value of the realty, induced plaintiff to enter into the transaction for its purchase; and that, therefore, the improvements formed no material portion of the consideration to be rendered by the defendant. The jury found the value upon conflicting evidence, some of which was sufficient to justify the conclusion reached; and there was also evidence which supported the finding that the improvements constituted a material consideration for the execution by plaintiff of the contract of sale.

[4] Appellant's counsel cites numerous authorities to the proposition that loss due to the destruction of buildings by fire in a case like this falls upon the vendee. Undoubtedly there is authority in some jurisdictions for such doctrine, most of the cases depending upon Paine v. Meller, 6 Ves. Jr. 349. Typical American cases upon the matter are Brewer v. Herbert, 30 Md. 301, 96 Am. Dec. 582, and Snyder v. Murdock, 51 Mo. 175. In California, however, this rule has not been followed, at least not in recent years. Smith v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 91 Cal. 330, 27 Pac. 738, 13 L. R. A. 475, 25 Am. St. Rep.

191, cited by appellant, does not support his theory. While it was there stated that a vendee in possession of land may sometimes maintain an equitable title to it under his executory contract as against the vendor's legal title, the Chief Justice delivering the opinion of the court in that case said: "There is a wide distinction between the proposition that the vendee in possession under an executory contract of sale may maintain the possession against the vendor as long as he performs his part of the agreement, and upon full compliance may enforce specific performance of the vendor's contract to convey the legal title, and the proposition here contended for, viz., that the vendor in such a contract, notwithstanding the destruction of the subject of the contract, in whole or in part, before the date stipulated for payment and conveyance, and his consequent inability to make a conveyance of that for which the vendee has bargained, may nevertheless compel the vendee to pay the whole contract price in exchange for a fraction of the property sold." This language is followed by an analysis of the apparently conflicting decisions on this subject, and the adoption of the rule announced in Wells v. Calnan, 107 Mass. 514, 9 Am. Rep. 65, that the destruction by fire of buildings on property in the vendor's possession prior to the date fixed for the payment of the purchase price and the conveyance of the title, defeats the vendor's right to compel performance on the part of the intending purchaser under the contract. This rule has been followed ever since in this state. In Potts Drug Co. v. Benedict, 156 Cal. 334, 104 Pac. 423, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 609, after a discussion of the rule that, where there has been a present, unconditional, fully consummated sale, the risk accompanies the title and any loss falls upon the purchaser, this language was used: "Where there is a mere agreement to sell, and therefore title has not passed, the loss falls on the vendor for the same reason. In such a case the vendor is excused from the performance of his contract under the rule we have discussed by reason of the destruction of the thing, but he cannot retain money already paid on account of the proposed purchase, or recover moneys remaining unpaid"—citing Wells v. Calnan and Smith v. Phœnix Ins. Co., supra, and Gould v. Murch, 70 Me. 288, 35 Am. Rep. 325. We conclude, therefore, that plaintiff had the right to rescind under subdivision 4 of section 1689 of the Civil Code for failure of consideration in a "material respect," before it was "rendered to him," as the rule in California does not regard the vendee under a contract like the one before us as being the person by whom the destruction of the tenements must be borne.

[5] Mr. Cahn, one of plaintiff's witnesses, was asked with reference to a cottage on the land in question, "How deep was it?" He answered, "I think it was about two rooms in depth," and then proceeded to give his opinion that it was of trifling value. The latter part of the answer was properly stricken out as not being responsive to the question, and the court correctly struck out an irresponsive answer to a question relating to the plumbing whereby, instead of telling of what said plumbing consisted, witness volunteered the statement that it was of very poor quality.

[6] The court permitted evidence regarding the condition of the factory building which formerly stood on the premises. Defendant sought to show that it was of a very flimsy character. Over his objection plaintiff's counsel was permitted to ask a witness, "How much power was required to operate the machinery?" The fact that the building (as shown by the answer to this question) could carry machinery requiring 15 horse power for its operation was relevant as bearing on the condition of the structure.

[7] Mr. Cahn testified on direct examination that the building was in good condition. On cross-examination defendant's counsel put this question to him: "None of the improvements on the land were of any material value were they?" Objection that the question called for a conclusion was properly sustained for the reason that Mr. Cahn was not shown to be an expert on values. Whether a building is in good condition or not may properly be a subject of testimony from one who knows nothing of values. There was no error in sustaining objections to the questions propounded to Mr. Cahn on cross-examination by which he was asked to testify whether the cottage was a cheap or an expensive building. He was not an expert on such matters. He was also asked certain questions with reference to the amount of insurance carried in Mr. Osborn's favor by Cahn, Nickelsburg & Co., tenants occupying the property. All of these questions were allowed over defendant's objections.

[8, 9] Respondent contends that evidence of the amount of insurance which, as the lease provided, should be carried at the expense of the tenants was pertinent as showing Mr. Osborn's opinion touching the value of his own property; and that the fact of the payment by the tenants of the expenses of insurance and the taxes was in point as showing the income produced by the buildings which were destroyed. We hardly think the inquiry about the insurance was proper on the first theory, but, under the pleadings and defendant's contention that the buildings were of trifling value, it was proper to show that the rent paid was net. Perhaps the scope of investigation of this subject was somewhat too extended, but we do not see how defendant could have been injured by proof of the amount of insurance carried and the premium paid for it. Appellant complains because plaintiff was allowed to testify to the value of the buildings. This was perfectly proper, because plaintiff had qualified as an expert.

[10] Mr. Conlin, against objection of defendant's counsel, stated, while on the witness stand, that possession of the property had not been given or offered to him by the defendant. Appellant insists that, as the time for search and perfecting of title had not passed, this was improper evidence. The questions relating to possession were proper, however, because possession by a vendee is sometimes evidence that the parties consider the contract substantially completed and plaintiff was seeking to show that there was no basis for any such presumption in this case.

[11] Mr. Conlin was interrogated with reference to his real motive in wishing to withdraw from the contract. If he had a right to rescission, his motive was an immaterial matter. Crim v. Umbsen, 155 Cal. 702, 103 Pac. 178, 132 Am. St. Rep. 127; Boyson v. Thorn, 98 Cal. 578, 33 Pac. 492, 21 L. R. A. 233. He was also asked on cross-examination if he had ever requested Mr. Osborn to give him the property without the improvements. A general objection to this question was sustained. He had, as we have seen, the right to rescind. It was therefore immaterial whether or not he had asked for delivery of the property minus the improvements. Whether or not there had been an offer of possession to him by defendant was at issue in the pleadings, and it was proper to interrogate him about that matter, but there was no issue on the subject of any request from him for delivery of the denuded property after the fire. Plaintiff was not allowed to answer the question by the cross-examiner regarding the depreciation of the property after the fire. Objection was sustained on the ground that he was not shown to be an expert on values after the fire. We see no error in that ruling. Objection was sustained to a question whether or not certain pieces of property bought since the fire had been purchased for speculative reasons and to be added to plaintiff's holdings. The purpose of this question, according to counsel, was to show that plaintiff had been buying land in that vicinity irrespective of improvements. This only bears on Mr. Conlin's motive in rescinding, which, as we have seen, is immaterial.

[12] Mr. Osborn, testifying in his own behalf, had said that he had had a conversation with plaintiff in which the latter declared that he would have to tear down the buildings, and put up something from which to get revenue after the expiration of the lease of Cahn, Nickelsburg & Co. Afterwards Mr. Conlin took the stand, and denied such statement. Appellant assigns this as error because no impeaching questions had been addressed to the defendant when he was a witness in his own behalf—citing Fagan v. Lentz, 156 Cal. 689, 105 Pac. 951. Obviously it was proper for Mr. Conlin to deny that he had made the statement attributed to him. It was simply rebuttal. Fagan v. Lentz has no application to the situation shown here. That was a case where alleged statements of witness showing her hostility to one of the litigants were sought to be introduced in evidence. As she had not been interrogated about these purported declarations while she was on the stand, no proper foundation for their introduction had been laid.

[13] Appellant complains of certain rulings whereby he was prevented from showing that Sage, Dealey & Co. had retained as a commission $2,000 out of the $10,000 deposit with that corporation. As we have seen there was no showing that respondent ever knew of this transaction until during the course of the trial. But appellant insists that Mr. Conlin must have known of it at the time of filing the complaint because he there pleaded the approval of the contract by Mr. Osborn and the written ratification did show an agreement to pay the commission to the agent. The pleading of the ratification does not necessarily show, however, that respondent had actually read this written approval of the contract by defendant. He might have depended upon the fact that Osborn's conduct on the day following the date of the contract indicated his ratification of it. The court correctly admitted evidence tending to show that the improvements on the property were burned before plaintiff had a chance to examine the title. The contract of lease between defendant's grantor and Cahn, Nickelsburg & Co. was correctly admitted in evidence as tending to throw light on the value of the improvements by showing the income which they were producing.

[14] Counsel for plaintiff asked Mr. Osborn the following question: "Any insurance that was collected was for your benefit, was it not?" The objection that it called for a conclusion of the witness was overruled and the interrogatory was given an affirmative answer. Here was no error. It was not a mere conclusion on his part that he was the person interested in the policies which had been obtained in Mrs. Shotwell's name.

[15] A number of questions were propounded to Mr. Osborn relating to the collection of the insurance money after the fire. By his answers he showed that he had filed proof of loss whereby the value of the improvements was placed at more than $13,000. He presented these proofs of loss, and collected the money paid by the company. This evidence was pertinent as an admission contrary to his pleading and testimony that the improvements were practically valueless.

[16] Respondent's counsel asked Mr. Osborn what he had paid for the land, and, after fruitless objections, he replied that he had paid over $81,000. This testimony was not proper as showing what his profit would have been if the sale had been consummated, but was admitted correctly to show the improbability of his estimate of the value of the buildings at $500, since he allowed them to continue to incumber a piece of property which, as he testified, would be more valuable without them.

[17] Objection was sustained to a question by his own counsel whether or not the amount paid Mr. Osborn by Cahn, Nickelsburg & Co. under this lease was greater or less than the usual rate of interest on the investment in property rented, and there was a similar ruling when he was asked regarding increase in the value of the land after he bought it. He had not at that time qualified as an expert on matters of interest or property values.

[18] Defendant sought to show that by reason of the nonpayment of the purchase price of the land by plaintiff he had been compelled to pay interest on a mortgage. Questions directed to this purpose were rightly disallowed. Plaintiff was not concerned with defendant's relations with third parties, or with his intentions regarding the spending of the money expected from the sale. A Mr. Cohn was called as an expert to prove that the property without the improvements was worth $110,000 on April 16, 1906. He failed, in the opinion of the court, to qualify as an expert on the value of the property without the improvements, and we see no error in the sustaining of the various objections to questions asked of him. Defendant sought to prove by Mr. Buckbee (but was prevented by timely objections from doing so) that the results of the earthquake and fire diminished the value of the property. This, if proven, could only have been relevant as showing Conlin's motive for rescinding and that was immaterial.

[19] While Mr. Sullivan, who was connected with Sage, Dealey & Co., was being examined, the following question was asked: "In this matter did you go to Mr. Osborn on behalf of plaintiff, or did Mr. Osborn come to you to sell the property?" Counsel objected on the ground that "the only purpose would be an attempt to prove that the witness was the agent of the plaintiff, while the pleadings themselves allege, and it is not denied, that Sage, Dealey & Co. were the agents of defendant, and that they had the contract in evidence signed by the defendant authorizing them to sell." This objection was properly sustained for the reasons given by counsel.

[20] Mr. Sullivan was asked if defendant had told him that plaintiff might have the insurance money paid for the buildings destroyed by the fire, and if defendant had offered through him to get a new tenant for the property who would pay $400 a month. The court sustained objections on the ground that plaintiff was not bound by statements made to a third party. The mere recital of this ruling shows its propriety. Mr. Buckbee testified that the fire and earthquake destroyed the market value of the property. This was stricken out as not responsive to the question, which was, "Do you know what effect, if any, the earthquake and fire of April, 1906, had upon the market value of this property?"

[21] Witness Kern had made for presentation to an insurance company an estimate of the loss occasioned by the burning of the buildings on the property in question. This estimate showed a deduction for depreciation. Witness testified that he did not figure the depreciation in any of the statements of loss which he prepared—he thought that was "for the owner or the insurance people to do themselves." This answer was stricken out and appellant assigns this ruling as error in spite of the fact that on the very next page of the transcript to that on which the court's action on this matter is shown substantially the same answer appears as having been made without objection.

[22] For the purpose of showing what it would cost to replace the burned structures with a brick building of approximately the same capacity, defendant called Mr. Lamb, an architect, who was asked certain questions with reference to the cost of a building known as the "Silvesta building." Objections to these questions were properly sustained as plaintiff could not be bound by testimony relating to the cost of a particular building.

[23] Witness was then asked what would be the actual cost of a four-story building 60 feet by 120 feet constructed within three or four months of the trial, said building to be within the fire limits. The court sustained defendant's objection to this question upon the ground that the time fixed was too remote. The objection as phrased by counsel was: "The plaintiff rescinded the contract on May 8th, and the price within three or four months cannot bind the plaintiff. This was after suit was brought." A mere statement of the ruling demonstrates its correctness.

[24] We will not consider in detail appellant's criticisms of the instructions given and the court's refusal to give certain others. The jury was fully and fairly instructed upon all of the matters properly involved in the case, and no substantial error appears. Appellant calls our attention particularly to the court's refusal to instruct the jury that they must disregard all evidence concerning the lease of the property by Mr. Osborn to Neustadter Bros., without Mr. Conlin's knowledge, after the fire. Evidence of the existence of such a lease was introduced by appellant, who cannot with good grace complain of the court's refusal to direct the jury to disregard a part of his own case.

No other alleged errors require discussion. The judgment and orders are affirmed.

162 Cal. 4

In re KILBORN'S ESTATE. (L. A. 2,889.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 8, 1912. Rehearing Denied Feb. 5, 1912.)

1. WILLS (§ 399*)—CONTEST—APPEAL—JUDGMENT ROLL.

Code Civ. Proc. § 670, providing what shall constitute the judgment roll for purposes of the record on appeal, is applicable to proceedings to revoke probate of will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 399.*]

2. WILLS (§ 399*)—CONTEST—APPEAL—RECORD.

Code Civ. Proc. § 661, providing that the judgment roll and affidavits, bill of exceptions or statement, shall constitute the record on appeal from an order on a motion for a new trial. Section 952, provides that on an appeal from an order on a motion for new trial the appellant must furnish the court with a copy of the notice of appeal and of the order appealed from, and of the papers designated in section 661. Section 953 provides that such notice must be certified to be correct by the clerk or by the attorneys. Held that, on appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial in a will contest, a portion of the transcript containing copies of pleadings, the verdict, and the decree revoking probate need not be authenticated by a bill of exceptions, but is sufficient where the clerk's certificate, attesting the correctness of such copies, is attached.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 399.*]

3. WILLS (§ 399*)—CONTEST—APPEAL—RECORD.

As, under Code Civ. Proc. § 953, the record on appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial may be certified by the clerk or attorneys, rule 29 of the California Supreme Court (78 Pac. xii), which requires a bill of exceptions for authentication, "except where another mode of authentication is provided," is inapplicable to prescribe the mode.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 399.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 417*)—NOTICE OF APPEAL—SUFFICIENCY.

Though an executor of a will styled himself executor "of the estate," in a notice of appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial of a contest, it is a mere inadvertent mistake, and, as it could not have misled, will not invalidate the notice.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 502*)—RECORD.

Where the transcript of record on an appeal from an order denying a motion for new trial contains a duly certified copy of a minute entry showing that a motion for new trial was denied, and the statement discloses that it was prepared and settled to be used on a proposed motion for a new trial, the record sufficiently shows that a motion for a new trial was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 502.*]

6. WILLS (§ 55*)—TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY—EVIDENCE.

In an action for the revocation of probate of a will, evidence held insufficient to justify a finding that the testatrix was not in full possession of her faculties, and did not understand the provisions of the instrument, purporting to be her will, at the time of its execution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 137–161; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

7. WILLS (§ 166*)—CONTEST—UNDUE INFLUENCE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in an action for the revocation of probate of a will, held to show no pressure or suggestion, operating on the testamentary act, amounting to undue influence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 421–437; Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

8. WILLS (§ 155*)—UNDUE INFLUENCE.

The undue influence which will justify the setting aside of a will must have operated on the mind of the testator at the time of the making of the will, and must have related to the will itself, so that proof of opportunity to influence a testator's mind, even when coupled with an interest or motive to do so, will not in itself sustain a finding of undue influence.

9. WILLS (§ 163*)—UNDUE INFLUENCE—PRESUMPTIONS.

That an attorney of the testatrix who drew a will, and was present at the time it was signed and witnessed, was named therein as executor and trustee will not raise a presumption of undue influence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 388–402; Dec. Dig. § 163.*]

10. WILLS (§ 165*)—UNDUE INFLUENCE—EVIDENCE.

Declarations of the testatrix that she intended to leave her property to her daughter are admissible, in an action to revoke probate, only to show the relation between the two, and are entitled to little or no weight in establishing undue influence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 165.*]

11. WILLS (§ 166*)—UNDUE INFLUENCE—EVIDENCE NECESSARY TO ESTABLISH.

Under influence in the making of a will may be shown by circumstantial evidence, but such evidence must amount to proof, and is insufficient when circumstances are not proven which are inconsistent with the claim that the will was a spontaneous act of the alleged testator.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 421–437; Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

12. WILLS (§ 163*)—UNDUE INFLUENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Upon the contest of a will, the burden of proving undue influence is upon the contestant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 388–402; Dec. Dig. § 163.*]

13. WILLS (§ 166*)—UNDUE INFLUENCE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence of the inequitable character of a will is insufficient, in the absence of other testimony of undue influence, to justify setting it aside.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 429; Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

SLOSS, J. This is an appeal from an order denying a motion for new trial of a contest of a will after probate. The appeal from the judgment revoking the probate of the will has heretofore been disposed of; such judgment having been affirmed in this court. Estate of Kilborn, 158 Cal. 593, 112 Pac. 52.

Some preliminary points urged by the respondent may be noticed before we proceed to a discussion of the merits. It is claimed that the portions of the transcript containing copies of the pleadings, the verdict of the jury, and the decree revoking probate are not to be considered, because not authenticated by means of a bill of exceptions; and that the appeal should be dismissed for failure of the appellant to furnish a proper record. But no such authentication of any of the papers named was required. The transcript contains the clerk's certificate in proper form, certifying that the papers in question are correct copies of the original papers in said action.

[1, 2] This was sufficient under the requirements of the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 661 provides that "the judgment roll and the affidavits, or bill of exceptions, or statement, as the case may be, used on the hearing, with a copy of the order made, shall constitute the record to be used on appeal from the order granting or refusing a new trial." The papers constituting the judgment roll are defined in section 670 of the same Code, and this section is undoubtedly applicable to such proceedings in probate as the one before us. Miller v. Lux, 100 Cal. 609, 35 Pac. 345, 639; Estate of Ryer, 110 Cal. 556, 560, 42 Pac. 1082. In a will contest, the judgment roll must include at least the petition for revocation of the probate, the answer thereto, the verdict of the jury, and the judgment. Under section 952 the appellant, on an appeal from an order granting or refusing a new trial, must furnish the court with a copy of the notice of appeal, of the order appealed from, and of the papers designated in section 661, and these copies, by the provision of section 953, must be certified to be correct by the clerk or the attorneys. There is no occasion, therefore, for incorporating in a bill of exceptions the papers constituting the judgment roll or the order denying the motion for a new trial. Mendocino Co. v. Peters, 2 Cal. App. 24, 82 Pac. 1122; Power v. Fairbanks, 146 Cal. 611, 80 Pac. 1075.

[3] The authentication by clerk's certificate is expressly authorized by the statute, and rule 29 (78 Pac. xii) of this court, requiring a bill of exceptions, "except where another mode of authentication is provided by law," has no application.

[4] The further objection is made that the parties appealing, i. e., Will D. Gould, personally, and Will D. Gould, executor of the estate of Julia Ann Kilborn, deceased, were not parties to the proceeding in the court below, and therefore have no right of appeal. We need not take time to discuss the question of the right of Mr. Gould to appeal in his individual capacity. That the executor and proponent of the will of a decedent has a right of appeal is not questioned. The point is, however, that he should, in his notice of appeal, have described himself as "executor of the last will and testament of Julia Ann Kilborn," instead of as "executor of the estate of Julia Ann Kilborn." We think this objection hypercritical and altogether too technical to be worthy of favorable consideration. If the notice of appeal was inaccurate in describing the appellant as executor of the estate, rather than as executor of the will, this error, consisting merely in the inadvertent use of the wrong word, was apparent upon the face of the notice, and could not have misled any one.

[5] The respondent contends, also, that the record does not show that a motion for new trial was made. But the transcript contains a duly certified copy of a minute entry showing that a motion for new trial was denied, and the statement discloses that it was prepared and settled to be used on the executor's proposed motion for new trial. In this state of the record, we think it is sufficiently made to appear that the executor did move for a new trial.

On the merits of the appeal, the only point that need be considered is the claim of the appellant that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the verdict.

Julia Ann Kilborn died on the 20th day of September, 1907, leaving a will executed upon the 3d day of September, 1907. She was survived by her daughter, Mary Woodman Kilborn, the contestant. Mrs. Kilborn provided in her will, which appears in full in the statement, that her estate (subject to a small pecuniary legacy) should go to Will D. Gould in trust for her daughter, the contestant, during her life, such daughter to receive the sum of $100 per month out of the income of the estate, or, if the income should be insufficient, out of the principal, and that upon her death the rest, residue, and remainder of the estate should go in equal shares to the brothers and sisters of herself and her deceased husband. It was further provided that, if the estate of Mrs. Kilborn's deceased husband should not be distributed to her, then the provision for the daughter should be cut down to $50 per month, and that upon her death no part of the remainder should be distributed to the brothers and sisters of such deceased husband. Gould was named as executor of the will, which was witnessed by Mrs. O. T. Sawyer and Mrs. Ann F. Chappell. The will was admitted to probate and letters testamentary issued to Gould on the 4th day of October, 1907. On September 17, 1908, the daughter, Mary Woodman Kilborn, filed her petition, asking for revocation of the probate, and alleging that the testatrix was incompetent to make a will; and that the alleged will was obtained through the undue influence of Gould and Mrs. Sawyer. The executor having answered, denying all of the allegations of the petition, a trial was had before a jury. The court, having concluded that there was no evidence to support the allegation that the testatrix was incompetent to make a will, submitted to the jury three interrogatories bearing on the question of undue influence. The first, dealing with undue influence on the part of Will D. Gould, was not answered. Interrogatory No. 2 was as follows: "Was the execution of the alleged will of Julia Ann Kilborn obtained by the exercise of undue influence by Will D. Gould and Mrs. O. T. Sawyer acting jointly?" To this the jury answered, "Yes." Interrogatory No. 3 was: "Did Julia Ann Kilborn, deceased, fully understand the provisions of the instrument of date of September 3, 1907, purporting to be her last will and testament, at the time of the signing and witnessing of the instrument?" To this the answer was, "No." The insufficiency of the evidence to sustain each of these findings was specified with sufficient particularity by the proponent in the statement on motion for new trial.

[6] It is unnecessary to enter into any extended discussion of the evidence with reference to interrogatory No. 3. The record is totally devoid of any showing to support the verdict in this respect. Mrs. Kilborn, at the time of executing her will, was of the age of 63 years, or thereabouts. She was, as all the witnesses agree, a woman of clear mind and fully capable of transacting business. While she had been subject, for a considerable time, to a disease which finally ended her life, and was, on the 3d of September, 1907, somewhat weakened, there is nothing at all to justify the inference that she was not then in the full possession of her mental faculties, or that she did not fully comprehend the nature and effect of what she was doing.

[7] And we think the record is equally bare of substantial evidence to support the finding that the will was obtained by the undue influence of Will D. Gould and Mrs. Sawyer, or either of them. It appeared in the evidence that Mrs. Kilborn's husband had died in 1904. He had left a will, whereby he undertook to give his property to trustees for the benefit of his wife and daughter. The estate was community property, and its value, including the portion to which the widow was entitled as survivor of the community, was in the neighborhood of $30,000. Both Mrs. Kilborn and her daughter were dissatisfied with the trust provisions of the will. They employed Mr. Gould, the appellant here, an attorney at law, to represent them in the matter. Proceedings were undertaken with a view to preventing the probate of Kilborn's will, but these efforts were resisted, and successfully resisted, by a corporation which was named as executor of Kilborn's will jointly with Mrs. Kilborn.

At the death of her husband, and for some time thereafter, Mrs. Kilborn was living in South Pasadena. Her daughter, the contestant here, had associated herself with a religious and benevolent organization, known as the "Forward Movement," and in the performance of her duties in this connection had taken up her residence at San Francisco. Some months before her death, Mrs. Kilborn moved from South Pasadena to Dolgeville in Los Angeles county, and, after spending some little time in a hotel there became a boarder at the home of Mrs. Sawyer. It was at this home that the will was made and the testatrix died. The record, which is extremely voluminous, contains a mass of testimony bearing upon the relations of Mrs. Kilborn with her daughter, with Mrs. Sawyer, and with Mr. Gould, but a careful search fails to reveal any substantial evidence tending to support the finding that the will was in any degree the product of undue influence, exercised either by Mrs. Sawyer or by Gould. Many witnesses testified on behalf of the contestant that she and her mother had always been bound by the warmest ties of affection. This, indeed, is not open to doubt. There was also testimony that the mother had stated to a number of friends that she intended to leave all of her property to her daughter. During the last few weeks of Mrs. Kilborn's life, she was suffering greatly, and was becoming weaker in consequence of her disease, which was known to be incurable. It was testified that, notwithstanding repeated requests from the daughter for information regarding her mother's condition, Mrs. Sawyer did not notify Miss Kilborn of the seriousness of the situation, but, on the contrary, sent messages indicating that Mrs. Kilborn's health was about as it had been. A telegram informing the contestant that her mother was "very low" reached her only on the day of the latter's death. Mrs. Kilborn's body was sent to her old home in New England for burial. There was testimony to the effect that Mrs. Sawyer, with the approval of Gould, who had been named as executor in the will, assumed the entire responsibility for the arrangements in this regard, and declined to permit the daughter, who had arrived shortly after her mother's death, to control or direct these dispositions. The will was filed for probate by Gould upon the day following the death of the testatrix. The record also contains a great deal of evidence offered for the purpose of showing that Gould had misled the respondent in matters connected with the administration of her father's estate, and that, following the death of the mother, he had assumed an attitude of hostility toward the daughter.

[8, 9] These circumstances, together with the facts that Gould drew the will, and that it was witnessed by Mrs. Sawyer, furnish the sole support for the finding of undue influence. But it is obvious, under the rulings of this court in prior cases, that this evidence is entirely insufficient to warrant the verdict. It amounted to nothing more than a showing that Mrs. Sawyer and Gould were so placed as to have had an opportunity to unduly influence the mind of the testatrix, and that they acted in a manner that might be described as suspicious. But this is not sufficient to upset a will. Mere proof of opportunity to influence a testator's mind, even when coupled with an interest or motive to do so, will not sustain a finding of undue influence, in the absence of testimony showing that there was pressure operating directly on the testamentary act. Estate of Langford, 108 Cal. 608, 41 Pac. 701; Estate of Carithers, 156 Cal. 422, 105 Pac. 127. The evidence regarding the conduct of Gould and Mrs. Sawyer had no tendency to establish the exercise of such pressure. There is not a particle of evidence tending to show that either of them ever made any suggestion to Mrs. Kilborn regarding the dispositions to be made by her will. It should be observed, in this connection, that Mrs. Sawyer received nothing under the will; nor did Gould take beneficially thereunder. The fact that he was named as executor and trustee is not sufficient to raise a presumption of undue influence. Livingston's Appeal, 63 Conn. 78, 26 Atl. 470.

[10] The declarations of the testatrix that she intended to leave her property to the contestant were admissible only to show the relations between the two, and the state of Mrs. Kilborn's mind, with reference to the daughter. Estate of McDevitt, 95 Cal. 17, 30 Pac. 101; Estate of Arnold, 147 Cal. 583, 82 Pac. 252. Where unsoundness of mind is not shown, such declarations, not a part of the res gestæ, are entitled to little or no weight, "in the absence of proof of influence as to the very testamentary act." Estate of McDevitt, supra; Estate of Langford, supra.

[11] "Undue influence," says this court in Estate of Ricks, 117 Pac. 539, "consists in the exercise of acts or conduct by which the mind of the testator is subjugated to the will of the person operating on it; some means taken or employed which have the effect of overcoming the free agency of the testator, and constraining him to make a disposition of his property contrary to and different from what he would have done, had he been permitted to follow his own inclination or judgment." And, as has frequently been pointed out, "the undue influence which will avoid a will must be such as operates upon the mind of the testator at the time of making the will, and must be an influence relating to the will itself." In re Kaufman, 117 Cal. 288, 49 Pac. 192, 59 Am. St. Rep. 179; Estate of McDevitt, 95 Cal. 17, 30 Pac. 101; Estate of Langford, 108 Cal. 608, 41 Pac. 701; Estate of Calkins, 112 Cal. 296, 44 Pac. 577; In re Wilson, 117 Cal. 262, 49 Pac. 172, 711; Estate of Donovan, 140 Cal. 390, 73 Pac. 1081; Estate of Higgins, 156 Cal. 257, 104 Pac. 6.

The existence of undue influence may, no doubt, be shown by circumstantial evidence, but such evidence must "do more than raise a suspicion. It must amount to proof, and such evidence has the force of proof only when circumstances are proven which are inconsistent with the claim that the will was the spontaneous act of the alleged testator." McDevitt's Estate, supra; Estate of Calkins, supra; Estate of Langford, supra.

[12] The only testimony in this case bearing upon the making of the will itself tended to show that Mrs. Kilborn sent for Mr. Gould and directed him to draw a will for her; that she had theretofore prepared memoranda, and from these memoranda instructed Mr. Gould as to her wishes; that Gould then returned to his office, where he dictated the will; that, after the will was written, he brought it back and read it to Mrs. Kilborn, who then executed it in the presence of the two witnesses. As against this positive testimony, the mere suspicions raised by what may be termed peculiar conduct on the part of Mrs. Sawyer and Gould, together with evidence of declarations by the testatrix that she intended to leave all her property to her daughter, cannot be sufficient to overthrow the testamentary act. It is urged by the respondent that Gould, as a witness, was impeached to such an extent as to authorize the jury to disregard his testimony altogether. But the result of this was, at most, to leave the jury without any evidence, one way or the other, on the question of influence or pressure exerted on the testatrix at the time of the making of the will. The burden of proving undue influence is on the contestant, and this burden was not sustained in the case at bar.

[13] It is, perhaps, hardly necessary to say, as this court has said before, that "the right to dispose of one's property by will is most solemnly assured by law, and is a most valuable incident to ownership, and does not depend upon its judicious use." Estate of McDevitt, supra. While the inequitable character of a will may be considered, if linked with other evidence tending to show undue influence, the court should not permit a jury to set aside a will "merely upon suspicion, or because it does not conform to their ideas of what was just and proper." Id.; Estate of Langford, supra. But if the justice and propriety of Mrs. Kilborn's will were a question for consideration here, the record as a whole furnishes strong support to the contention of appellant that the trust provision, which was the feature of the will most objectionable to the contestant, was based upon reasons which were sound and substantial, or may well have appeared so to the mind of the testatrix. There is considerable evidence in the record tending to show that Mrs. Kilborn and her husband had both been strongly opposed to the connection of the contestant with the "Forward Movement"; that they distrusted certain people in active control of that movement, and feared that the daughter, if given the absolute control of the estate, would be induced to part with it in the interest of these persons. A very reasonable inference is that the will was framed as it was with the design of protecting, rather than injuring, the contestant. It was shown that in November, 1905, Mrs. Kilborn had executed a prior will, in which a trust provision very similar to that here found was incorporated. A codicil, executed in February, 1907, reaffirmed this will in these particulars. There is not the slightest suggestion that either the prior will or the codicil thereto was induced or procured to be made by the influence of Gould, or that Mrs. Sawyer had any connection whatever with the execution of these instruments. Under these circumstances, the finding that the will of September, 1907, containing virtually the same provisions, was procured by undue influence is so contrary to the inherent probabilities of the case that, in order to sustain it, the respondent should be able to point, either to direct proof of the exercise of such influence, or to evidence of circumstances pointing strongly and persuasively in that direction. But, as we have already said, the record contains no such proof or evidence.

In view of our conclusions on the main question discussed by us, the appellant's further assignments of error do not require consideration.

The order denying a new trial is reversed.

McDOUGALD v. SOUTHERN PAC. R. CO.

(Sac. 1,910.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 303*)—INJURIES TO LAND—DAMAGES.

Where, in an action for injury to land, caused by the building of a railroad and drawbridge, the injury to the plaintiff is of a permanent character, she may recover in one action, not only the damages which have accrued up to the time of the action, but also all reasonably certain to accrue in the future.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 815–817; Dec. Dig. § 303.*]

2. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 303*)—INJURY TO LAND—DAMAGES.

In an action for the recovery of damages to land from the building of a railroad and drawbridge thereon, the measure of damages is the difference between the value of the entire parcel as it was before the defendant took possession and its value immediately after the works of the defendant were completed, taking into consideration all the probable injurious consequences to the land not taken, so that findings of value, based upon evidence of the value of the land, at the time of the trial, as it would be without the structures, and as it really was, were insufficient to support a judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 815–817; Dec. Dig. § 303.*]

3. DEEDS (§ 38*) — FORM AND REQUISITES — DESCRIPTION OF LAND.

Where, in an action for injury to land, the description of the land in the muniments of title is so explained by the evidence that the location of the land can be easily ascertained by a proper survey, the description is sufficient.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Norton, Judge.

Action by Carrie B. McDougald against the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

See, also, 9 Cal. App. 236, 98 Pac. 685.

George F. Buck, for appellant. Budd & Van Vranken, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The defendant appealed from the judgment within 60 days after it was rendered, and presents the evidence by a bill of exceptions.

The plaintiff is the owner of a block of land 303 feet square, situated just outside of the city of Stockton and bordering upon Mormon channel. In April, 1903, the defendant constructed its railway and a drawbridge across Mormon channel, and ever since that time it has operated and maintained the same. The embankment and approach to the bridge occupies a space about 14 feet wide and 22 feet long of the plaintiff's land. Defendant took possession of the land and made said improvements without the plaintiff's permission, against her will, and without compensating her therefor. As a basis for damages, plaintiff alleges that, prior to the defendant's entry, said block of land was worth $10,000; that by reason of the railway and drawbridge thereon the value of the land has depreciated to the amount of $9,000, for which she asked judgment.

The trial took place on November 30, 1909, more than six years after the construction of the railway and drawbridge complained of. The court found that at the time of the trial the plaintiff's land would have been worth $3,000 but for the said railway and drawbridge, and that by reason thereof the value at that time was only $1,800. Upon this basis, judgment was given for plaintiff for $1,200 as damages. There is no finding as to the value of the land at any other period than the time of the trial, and no evidence was introduced relating to any other period. The evidence all referred to the values at the time of the trial, and it was all introduced over the objection of defendant, that the value at that time was irrelevant and immaterial.

[1, 2] These findings are insufficient to support the judgment. The land was taken by the defendant for the public use of operating thereon a public railway. It was permanently appropriated to that use. The injury to the plaintiff is of a permanent character. This suit for compensation ratifies the taking for that use. See Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Esterle, 13 Bush (Ky.) 667. For such injuries, the plaintiff may recover in one action, not only the damages occasioned up to the time the action was begun, but also all that she can then show with reasonable certainty that she will suffer in the future. But all this is necessarily given to her if she receives as damages the difference between the value of the entire parcel as it was just before the defendant took permanent possession, and its value immediately after the works of the defendant were completed and put in operation, taking into consideration all the injurious consequences to the part of the land not taken reasonably probable from such works and the operation thereof and from the severance of the land taken. This is the rule laid down in Muller v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 83 Cal. 243, 23 Pac. 266, a case in all respects similar to the present one. The court said: "We are inclined to think in this case the difference between the value of the lot when the defendant entered to construct its road and the value when the road was completed will show what the plaintiff is entitled to recover." See, also, 4 Suth. on Dam. § 1047; Jeffersonville, etc., Co. v. Esterle, 13 Bush (Ky.) 676. The rule followed by the court below would allow plaintiff the benefit of the general advance in value from all causes. There is some evidence indicating that the value at the time of the trial had been enhanced by independent causes arising long after the taking by the defendant. This cause had been previously tried, and from the judgment the defendant appealed. The appeal was heard in the District Court of Appeal for the Third District. 9 Cal. App. 236, 98 Pac. 685. In that case it was held that the value of the property at the first trial, four years after the injury, was not sufficient to show its value at the time of the injury. Much more is this true at a period nearly seven years after the injury. The evidence should have been confined to the damage, present and prospective, based upon the values existing immediately before and immediately after the construction of the railway and drawbridge. Because of this error, the judgment must be reversed.

[3] The defendant claims that the description of plaintiff's land in her muniments of title is so uncertain that they are void; and hence that no title was proven. The description is as follows: "One city block between Main and Market streets produced, being the second block west of Tule street in the city of Stockton." The evidence showed that Stockton is laid out on a regular plan, in blocks 303 feet square, between which are streets running north and south 80.8 feet wide, and streets running east and west 60.6 feet wide. Main and Market streets run east and west one block apart. Tule street, now Edison street, runs north and south. From this evidence of explanatory facts, it is plain that the land in question is a block 303 feet square, situated between the produced lines of Main and Market streets; the east line of said block being 383.8 feet west of the west line of Tule street aforesaid. Its location could therefore be easily ascertained by a proper survey.

The judgment is reversed.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; A. J. Buckles, Judge.

Action by Joseph Barboza, administrator of the estate of Caesar Augustus, deceased, against the Pacific Portland Cement Company, Consolidated. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank R. Devlin, for appellant. Harvey & Goodman and Ambrose Gherini, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff, suing as administrator of the estate of Cæsar Augustus, brought this action to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of his intestate. The trial resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $2,500. The defendant appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

The defendant corporation was engaged in the manufacture of cement. Its plant, which was located at a point called Cement, was connected by a spur line or track with the main railroad line of the Southern Pacific Company, the point of junction being at the station of Tolenas, in Solano county. The defendant operated a train of cars between Cement and Tolenas. The deceased, Augustus, was a laborer employed by the Southern Pacific Company. He was engaged in repairing the track near Tolenas station, when he was struck and killed by defendant's train, which was made up of a number of cars propelled from the rear by a locomotive.

The complaint was in five counts, each of which set up a separate charge of negligence. Among these were averments that the defendant negligently backed its train over Augustus at a high rate of speed without giving him any warning; that it negligently failed to ring a bell or blow a whistle; and that it negligently failed to maintain air brakes on the train of cars.

There was evidence tending to show this state of facts. Augustus, who was one of a gang of several men working under the direction of a foreman, was engaged in driving spikes. He was standing midway between the two rails with his back to the defendant's train. So far as the evidence shows, the position thus occupied by him was proper for the accomplishment of the work being done. The defendant's train, which was not running on schedule time, had come from Cement, passing, on the way, the men at work on the spur track near the station. This spur turned into the direct line of the Southern Pacific at a point some 200 feet west of the station building and freight platform at Tolenas. Beyond the station there were various switches and tracks running some hundreds of feet to the east of the freight platform. The train passed through to the easterly end of the yard, and after switching from track to track, picking up empty cars, came back to the station and stopped there. The engineer then started his train westward, propelling the train of cars ahead of his engine onto the track leading to Cement. When he had proceeded some 50 or 60 feet beyond the switch leading to that track and some 250 feet from the station, the car at the head of the train and farthest from the engine struck Augustus. No bell was rung nor was the whistle blown. There was a brakeman on a car next the engine and another on the third car from the forward end of the train. From this position the second brakeman saw that the deceased and the others were in danger and signaled the engineer to stop, but it was then too late to bring the train to a complete standstill in time to prevent the injury. There was evidence that the train, at the time it was bearing down on the deceased, was running at the rate of eight miles an hour. A through train of the Southern Pacific Company was at the same time passing upon the main line track and the noise produced by this through train was, as the jury may have well inferred, sufficient to prevent the men working on the track from hearing the approach of defendant's train. The engineer in charge of the latter had seen the men at work when he had brought his train into Tolenas and knew, or might have known, that they were still at work when he started to return. The point where plaintiff was working was within the limits of the Southern Pacific yard at Tolenas, but it was not at the end of the yard equipped for switching work, or in which the switching was usually done.

[1] In this state of the evidence we cannot assent to appellant's contention that as matter of law it should be held that the defendant was not guilty of negligence. Whether or not, under all the circumstances, a due regard for the safety of the men on the track required the defendant to give warning of the approach of its train by ringing a bell or blowing a whistle, or by having upon the front car of its train a man who could see persons or objects on the track, were questions of fact to be determined by the jury.

[2] It is no doubt true that the rules with reference to the necessity of giving warning of an approaching train by means of whistles or bells or otherwise are not always applicable to engines and cars which are being moved about the tracks of railroad yards while switching. Aerkfetz v. Humphrey, 145 U. S. 418, 12 Sup. Ct. 835, 36 L. Ed. 758; Crowe v. N. Y. C. R. R., 70 Hun, 37, 23 N. Y. Supp. 1100. But, as we have seen, the point where the train struck Augustus was not within that part of the yard devoted to switching, and the train had completed its switching and had started on its return run to Cement. Furthermore, the noise produced by the passing train was a factor which the jury might well have considered as requiring greater effort to warn persons on the track than would have been required if the conditions had been such that the approach of defendant's train itself might have been more readily heard.

[3] Nor can it be said as matter of law that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence. A man working upon a railroad track is, of course, bound to take reasonable precautions for his own safety. Knowing that trains are likely to pass, he must use the care which an ordinarily prudent man would exercise to avoid being struck by such train. But what is reasonable care under the circumstances is, like the question of defendant's negligence, primarily to be determined by the jury. The work in which Augustus was employed required that he be in the middle of the track and in a stooping position. Obviously he could not perform his work properly if he were constantly looking to see whether a train was approaching. In view of the further fact that the noise of the passing train interfered with his opportunity of hearing defendant's train, the question whether he was guilty of negligence in not becoming aware of the cars bearing down upon him was properly submitted to the jury.

On the facts bearing upon both these questions—i. e., the negligence of the defendant and the contributory negligence of the plaintiff—the case is very similar to Egan v. Southern Pac. Co., 15 Cal. App. 766, 115 Pac. 939, where the District Court of Appeal held adversely to the contentions of the defendant.

[4] In order to establish his right to sue as administrator, the plaintiff offered in evidence all the papers, records, and files in the matter of the estate of Cæsar Augustus. From these papers it appeared that B. J. Klotz, public administrator of Solano county, was appointed administrator of the estate on October 14, 1909. On February 4, 1910, Klotz filed his final account and tendered his resignation as administrator. On the same day the plaintiff Barboza filed his petition for letters. On February 14, 1910, the court made its order settling the account of Klotz as administrator and accepting his resignation and revoking the letters which had been issued to him. Thereafter, and on the same day, the court heard the petition of Barboza and made its order appointing him administrator. It is contended by appellant that the appointment of Barboza was void for the reason that at the time his petition was filed there was another administrator duly appointed. It has long been settled in this state that the court has no power to appoint an administrator until a former administrator has been removed or his resignation accepted. Haynes v. Meeks, 20 Cal. 288; Estate of Hamilton, 34 Cal. 464. "The office must first become vacant before a second appointment can be made." Haynes v. Meeks, supra.

[5] But we find no warrant in the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1427), or in the decisions for the proposition urged by the appellant, that the resignation of a former administrator must have been accepted before the filing of the petition for appointment of a successor. Indeed, the contrary is at least implied, if not expressly held, in Jennings v. Le Breton, 80 Cal. 8, 21 Pac. 1127. We think all that is required is that the accounts of the prior administrator shall have been settled and his resignation accepted at the time the second appointment is made. These conditions existed here. If it is necessary, under section 1427, that the estate be delivered up by the first administrator before a second can be appointed, it must be presumed, on the record before us, that such delivery was made. Jennings v. Le Breton, supra.

[6] Lewis Roderigues testified that the deceased was married, and had left a widow and two minor children. The witness had not seen the widow or the children for 2½ years. He further testified that he knew that they were alive because the widow had written to him. His cross-examination developed that the widow was unable to write, and that the witness could not read. A motion to strike out all his testimony "in regard to the marriage of the deceased and having children" on the ground that it was hearsay was denied. The ruling was proper. The motion might have been well taken if it had been limited to that part of the testimony relative to the receipt of letters. But the witness had also testified, of his own knowledge, to the fact of marriage and the existence at one time of the wife and children. This testimony was competent, and, as it was included in the general motion to strike out, the court did not err in denying the motion.

[7] The foreman in charge of the section gang was asked, "What is your practice with regard to getting your men off the track when you are working with them? How close do the trains generally come?" The plaintiff's objection to this question was sustained. We need not consider whether this ruling was erroneous, as a reading of the record shows that at a later point the witness gave testimony covering substantially the subject-matter of these questions.

The same observation applies to the ruling sustaining an objection to the following question asked of the same witness: "Isn't it a fact that one of the officials of Cement on the morning of this accident hollered to you, and told you to get your men off the track quicker, or they would get hurt?"

[8] It was not error to refuse to permit the witness White to answer the defendant's question whether it was customary to have air brakes on all the cars. Redfield v. Oakland C. S. R. R. Co., 112 Cal. 224, 43 Pac. 1117.

[9] The plaintiff was permitted to introduce evidence to the effect that the deceased was not addicted to drink, and that he did not gamble. The evidence was competent and pertinent. Taylor v. Western Pac. R. R. Co., 45 Cal. 223. It had some bearing upon the value of the life of Augustus to his wife and children as showing "the extent of his probable usefulness to his beneficiaries." 8 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 944.

[10] The defendant took exception to certain remarks made by the trial court in the course of a discussion upon the admissibility of testimony. The defendant's counsel had asked the engineer of the train why he had not rung a bell. The answer was: "It was not customary." At this point the plaintiff objected, whereupon the defendant argued to the court that the authorities permitted proof of what was customary. Thereupon the court said: "If you have authorities to that extent, you had better produce them. It seems to me without authority that it would be proper to ring a bell, and, if the bell was not rung passing through that gang of workmen, it would be negligence. If the court held differently, all right. I am with the court if it does." The defendant excepted to the statement "that we are guilty of negligence." Plaintiff's counsel said, "The court did not say that"; and the court added, "It would be taken to be negligence itself." Counsel for appellant then remarked that he felt that such statement might be prejudicial, and the court answered: "Well, I am perfectly willing to take the law, but you are entitled to have your exception." It is argued that in this colloquy the court declared its opinion that the failure to ring a bell constituted negligence, and that this expression was necessarily prejudicial to the appellant. If the record showed nothing further, there might be considerable force in the point. But it appears that, after further argument, the court altered its view and concluded to permit the line of testimony to which objection had been made. The witness was allowed to state that it was not customary to ring a bell or blow the whistle under the conditions existing.

It is apparent from a review of the incident as a whole that, if the court did express any opinion upon the facts, this opinion was merely tentative, and incidental to a discussion upon a question of law presented to it. The court stated what it believed the law to be. At the same time, it showed its readiness to have the authorities presented and to rule in accordance with them. After a fuller discussion, it accepted defendant's views and ruled in its favor. This was a complete withdrawal of any possible intimation that the failure to ring the bell or blow the whistle was negligence. Furthermore, the instructions, which were quite as favorable to the defendant as it had a right to demand, left to the jury the determination of the ultimate question of negligence. Under these circumstances, we do not think the appellant could have been prejudiced by the remarks of the court addressed to counsel and drawn out by the argument upon the admissibility of offered evidence.

No other errors are assigned.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

LIGHTNER MINING CO. v. LANE et al.

(Sac. 1,657.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1002*)—FINDINGS —CONCLUSIVENESS—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

The jury's finding of facts upon conflicting evidence is conclusive on appeal.

2. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 51*)—CONVERSION OF ORE—TITLE TO SUSTAIN ACTION—POSSESSION—VENDEE UNDER ESCROW DEED.

Plaintiff agreed to purchase a mine from the owner under an agreement providing that payment should be made out of the proceeds of the mine and sale of plaintiff's capital stock, and that it should take possession and work the mine for that purpose, and the deed was deposited in escrow to be delivered to plaintiff when the price was paid, but the agreement was subject to cancellation upon plaintiff's failure for three months to perform any covenant in the contract. Held, that plaintiff could, before delivery of the escrow deed to it, maintain an action for the value of ore wrongfully taken from the mine.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Dec. Dig. § 51.*]

3. TRESPASS (§ 20*)—TRESPASS TO REALTY—TITLE TO SUSTAIN ACTION—POSSESSION.

One in actual possession may maintain an action for trespass to realty as against one not claiming title in himself or claiming under the real owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass, Cent. Dig. §§ 32-47; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 218*)—TRESPASS BY THIRD PERSON — ACTION BY VENDEE.

One in possession of realty under an agreement to convey to him may maintain an action against a stranger for a trespass which removes the substance of the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 456; Dec. Dig. § 218;* Trespass, Cent. Dig. § 24.]

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 100*)—DISCOVERY OF CAUSE OF ACTION—FRAUD.

In every case, irrespective of any exceptions in the statute, the fraudulent concealment of the facts on which the cause of action depends stays the running of the statute until the discovery of such facts, and trespassing in an underground mine upon another's land and secretly extracting ore therefrom necessarily constituted a fraud, making the statute of limitations run from the actual discovery of the fraudulent trespass, and not from the taking of the ore.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 323, 480-493; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

6. STATUTES (§ 225¾*)—CONSTRUCTION—RE-ENACTED STATUTE.

Where a statute is re-enacted in the same language after it has been construed by the courts, the re-enacted statute is presumed to have the same effect as the former statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 306; Dec. Dig. § 225¾.*]

7. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 197*)—FRAUDULENT CONCEALMENT OF CAUSE OF ACTION—EVIDENCE.

Evidence in an action to recover the value of ore extracted by defendant from plaintiff's mine by trespassing underground across the boundary line held to show that both the taking and concealment thereof were fraudulent, so that plaintiff was not put upon inquiry as to the trespasses as affecting the running of limitations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Dec. Dig. § 197.*]

8. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 100*) — RUNNING OF LIMITATIONS—ACCRUAL OF ACTION —FRAUD—DISCOVERY.

Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 4, providing that the cause of action where relief is sought on the ground of fraud shall not be deemed to have accrued until the discovery of the fraud by the aggrieved party, applies to all actions for relief against fraud, whether legal or equitable, so that an action for the value of ore extracted from plaintiff's mine would not accrue until after the discovery of the fraudulent taking of the ore.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 323, 480-493; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

9. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 187*)—PLEADING LIMITATIONS—FRAUD.

In an action for the value of ore fraudulently extracted from plaintiff's mine, the fraudulent concealment of the conversion of the ore could be proven without being pleaded for the purpose of staying the running of limitations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 696; Dec. Dig. § 187.*]

10. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 100*)—STAYING OF LIMITATIONS—FRAUD—FRAUD BY AGENT.

The fraud of an agent will be imputed to his principal for the purpose of preventing the running of limitations in favor of the principal, irrespective of whether he knew thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 487; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

11. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 51*)—CONVERSION OF ORE — MEASURE OF DAMAGES — "HIGHEST MARKET VALUE."

Civ. Code, § 3333, provides that the measure of damages for breach of an obligation not arising from contract is the amount which will compensate for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, whether it could have been anticipated or not, and section 3336 provides that the detriment caused by the wrongful conversion of personalty is presumed to be the value of the property at the time of the conversion with interest, or, where the action has been prosecuted with reasonable diligence, its highest market value at any time between the conversion and the verdict without interest at plaintiff's option. Held, that the "highest market value" allowed by the statute meant its subsequent value in the condition it was at the time of the conversion, so that, in an action for damages for the conversion of ore by underground trespassing on plaintiff's land, plaintiff could not recover the value of the ore after the cost of milling it had been added, but only its value when mined and commingled with defendant's ore, though the conversion was intentional by defendant's agents; the circumstances not authorizing punitive damages.

12. Damages (§ 92*)—Exemplary Damages—Acts of Agent.

Exemplary damages cannot be awarded against a principal for his agent's fraud, unless he authorized it or ratified it with knowledge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. § 208; Dec. Dig. § 92.*]

13. Master and Servant (§ 330*)—Wrongful Acts of Employés—Ratification—Evidence.

Evidence, in an action for the value of ore fraudulently extracted from plaintiff's mine by underground trespasses held not to show that defendant knew of the trespasses by his employés, or subsequently ratified them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 330.*]

14. Master and Servant (§ 308*)—Wrongful Acts of Employé—Ratification by Master—Defending in Litigation.

Mineowners did not ratify the wrongful acts of their employés in trespassing and converting plaintiff's ore by denying in good faith the allegations of the complaint alleging the conversion and failure to investigate the question after service of the complaint upon them.

15. Appeal and Error (§ 1068*)—Review—Harmless Error—Instructions.

While an instruction in an action for the value of ore extracted from plaintiff's mine by underground trespasses that limitations did not begin to run when the trespass was committed, but from the discovery thereof, or from the time when the injured party might have discovered it by exercising ordinary care, was erroneous for omitting the elements of secrecy and fraud in the trespass and the fraudulent concealment thereof, the error was not prejudicial to defendant, where the jury found that the trespass was fraudulent, and was fraudulently concealed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4225–4230; Dec. Dig. § 1068.*]

16. Confusion of Goods (§ 13*)—Application of Doctrine—Evidence.

Where defendants made secret underground trespasses across the boundary into plaintiff's mines and secretly extracted ore from plaintiff's mine, and indistinguishably commingled it with ore from their own mine, the doctrine of confusion of goods would apply, though the ore was commingled by defendants' employés without their actual knowledge, so that the burden was upon defendant, in an action for the value of the ore converted to show how much thereof was extracted before plaintiff purchased and took possession of its mine, and how much was taken thereafter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Confusion of Goods, Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

17. Confusion of Goods (§ 13*)—Evidence as to Ownership—Burden of Proof.

The burden is upon the person wrongfully causing a confusion of goods to distinguish his own property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Confusion of Goods, Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

18. Trespass (§ 47*)—Compensatory Damages—Willful Trespass.

The right to recover compensatory damages for a trespass is not affected by the fact that it was not willful.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass, Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

19. Appeal and Error (§ 1068*)—Review—Harmless Error—Instructions.

In an action for the value of ore extracted by underground trespasses, error in an instruction that plaintiff's right to recover was not affected by the fact that the trespass was not willful is rendered harmless by reducing the judgment so as to allow actual compensation, as the instruction was prejudicial only in the event that punitive damages were allowed.

20. Appeal and Error (§ 1151*)—Modification—Curing Excessive Recovery.

Error in instructions, in an action for the value of ore extracted by underground trespasses, that every entry by a mineowner upon an adjoining mine is presumed to be willful because one is presumed to know his own boundaries, and an instruction that, in case of willful trespass, defendants were not entitled to deduct the cost of mining and milling, was rendered harmless by reducing on appeal the damages allowed to actual damages for the value of the gold after deducting the cost of mining and milling.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4498–4506; Dec. Dig. § 1151.*]

21. Appeal and Error (§ 1140*)—Disposition—Reversal—Necessity.

Where the errors found on appeal require that plaintiff's recovery of punitive damages be disallowed, plaintiff should be given an opportunity to accept the reduced verdict without reversal on account of errors in instructions on the question of punitive damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4462–4478; Dec. Dig. § 1140.*]

SHAW, J. This is an action by the owner of a mine against the owners of an adjoining mine to recover the value of certain ore alleged to have been extracted by the defendants from the mine of the plaintiff.

The plaintiff claims the ownership of a mine known as the "Lightner mine." The defendants are the owners of the Utica mine, which adjoins the end line of the Lightner mine, and lies southeasterly of it. The vein is about 80 feet thick and extends from the southeast to the northwest through both claims. The ore was taken by the defendants at the depth of 525 feet below the surface by means of a shaft sunk on the Utica mine. From that shaft two crosscuts were made to the vein, one at a depth of 425 feet and the other at 525 feet, striking the vein about 288 feet from the division line between the two mines. Drifts were then run along the vein from each of these crosscuts to the division line. The upper drift is called the "No. 2 level"; the lower drift the "No. 3 level." The No. 3 level was extended some 42 feet over the line into the Lightner mine, and the No. 2 level some 13 feet over the line. More than 12,000 tons of the ore of the Lightner mine were then taken by the defendants and converted to their own use. The object of the action was to recover the value of this ore.

[1] 1. The plaintiff did not obtain possession of the Lightner mine, nor any right or interest therein, until November 21, 1896. The defendants claim that there is no evidence that any of the ore in question was extracted by the defendants after that date, and hence that no damage accrued to the plaintiff. This claim is without support. The fact that the body of ore above mentioned was taken at some time by the defendants from the Lightner mine through the drift extending into it from the underground workings of the Utica mine was established beyond all reasonable doubt. V. W. Miller, who was the foreman in charge of the work in the Utica mine from October, 1893, to October 24, 1897, testified that the ore between levels 2 and 3 in the Utica mine was stoped out during that period; that the north wall, next to the Lightner mine, was carried up perpendicular from No. 3 level; and that "the north line of that stope was entirely within the Utica boundary line given to us." He was a witness for the defendant. Other witnesses for the defendant gave similar testimony. It was shown also that the boundary line had been correctly given to them and was marked on the wall of level No. 2. If the jurors believed this testimony, as they had the right to do, they could come to no other conclusion than that the extension of the excavation into the Lightner mine was made after the completion of the stopes described by Miller, that is after October, 1897. Many other circumstances which we need not here rehearse, corroborated this conclusion. It is true there was other testimony tending to prove that this ore was taken out as long ago as 1893 or 1894, but it was for the jury to determine the fact from the conflicting evidence, and their decision, in such cases, is conclusive on appeal.

[2] 2. It is next contended that the plaintiff had no interest in the Lightner mine sufficient to give it the right to sue for the value of ore extracted therefrom. Prior to November 21, 1896, and on that date, Alice L. Eastland was the owner in fee of the mine. On that day a written agreement between her and the plaintiff was executed by them. Thereby she agreed to sell said mine to the plaintiff at the price of $100,000, of which $50,000 was to be paid by the plaintiff out of half of the gross proceeds of the mine after the year 1897, and the other $50,000 out of sales of plaintiff's capital stock. It further provided that plaintiff should diligently proceed to sink a shaft thereon to the depth of five hundred feet and erect hoisting works thereat, that it should have the right to take and hold possession of the mining claim and to mine ore therefrom, and that it should work the mine diligently until the price was fully paid. It also stated that a deed of conveyance of the mine from Mrs. Eastland to the Lightner Mining Company was on the same day signed and acknowledged by her and deposited in escrow with a third person, and that the same was to be delivered to the company upon payment of the purchase price. The deed was signed and delivered in escrow, as stated, and the plaintiff immediately took complete possession of the mine under the agreement. It has been in exclusive possession thereof ever since, and has proceeded to develop and work it. The deed was not delivered out of escrow until September 2, 1902, which was after this action was begun. A clause of the agreement provided that, if the vendee at any time failed for three months to perform any covenant therein, the vendor, after 10 days notice, might cancel the contract and take possession of the mine. No such default occurred.

[3] It is a well-settled proposition that the proper party plaintiff in an action for trespass to real property is the person in actual possession. No averment of title in plaintiff is necessary. 1 Chitty, Pl. 63; Heilbron v. Heinlen, 72 Cal. 371, 14 Pac. 22; Strohlburg v. Jones, 78 Cal. 383, 20 Pac. 705; Pollock v. Cummings, 38 Cal. 685; Uttendorfer v. Saegers, 50 Cal. 497; Raffeto v. Fiori, 50 Cal. 363; McDonald v. Bear River, etc., Co., 13 Cal. 230. The person in possession can recover no damages for injuries, "except such as affect his own right, unless he holds in such relation to other parties interested that his recovery will bar their claim." 4 Suth. Dam. § 1012. A defendant who is a mere stranger to the title will not be allowed to question the title of a plaintiff in possession of the land. It is only where the trespasser claims title himself, or claims under the real owner, that he is allowed to attack the title of the plaintiff whose peaceable possession he has disturbed. 21 Ency. of Pl. & Pr. 834.

[4] One who is in possession under an agreement to convey giving him the right of possession may maintain an action against a stranger to the title for a trespass which consists of the removal and conversion of the substance of the estate. Hunt v. Taylor, 22 Vt. 556; Miller v. Zufall, 113 Pa. 325, 6 Atl. 350; Interlied v. Whaley, 65 Hun, 407, 20 N. Y. Supp. 183; McFeters v. Pierson, 15 Colo. 201, 24 Pac. 1076, 22 Am. St. Rep. 388; Irvin v. Patchen, 164 Pa. 51, 30 Atl. 436. He may even recover of his vendor for injuries amounting to waste, committed upon the premises after such delivery of possession. Worrall v. Munn, 53 N. Y. 185.

The plaintiff in this case was rightfully in possession under the agreement of sale from Mrs. Eastland. The defendants do not claim title, possession, or right of possession. Under the contract, the plaintiff had the right at any time to take this ore. It follows that, since the defendants have taken it, the plaintiff may recover its value, and payment therefor to the plaintiff would protect defendants against any claims of the vendor. Furthermore, after the action was begun and before the trial, the equitable title of the plaintiff became a perfect title in fee by the final delivery of the deed. Consequently the defect of title at the time the action was begun could not possibly have worked any injury to the defendants.

[5] 3. The defendants next claim that the action is barred by the statute of limitations, particularly by section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The action was commenced on July 10, 1902. The jury found specially that the ore for which the recovery was allowed was removed from the plaintiff's mine by defendants prior to July 1, 1899. By subdivision 2 of section 338, in connection with section 312, it is provided that "an action for trespass upon real property" is barred unless it is commenced within three years after the cause of action shall have accrued.

The plaintiff insists that an exception exists in cases where the trespass is fraudulently concealed by the perpetrator from the knowledge of the owner of the land, and that in such cases the period of limitation does not begin to run until the aggrieved party discovers the trespass, or with reasonable diligence might have discovered it. It is also contended that the case, as made by the pleadings and the findings of the jury, does not fall strictly within the class described in subdivision 2 of section 338, but that it is governed by subdivision 4, which reads as follows: "(4) An action for relief on the ground of fraud or mistake. The cause of action in such case not to be deemed to have accrued until the discovery, by the aggrieved party, of the facts constituting the fraud or mistake." The plaintiff did not discover the trespass, nor did it have any reasonable means of making such discovery until June 1, 1901, when its own workings encountered the wrongful excavation of the defendants. It was the settled rule in actions at law that the plaintiff's mere ignorance of the existence of the injury complained of, or of the facts constituting such injury, or of the identity of the person liable therefor, until the period of limitation had passed, will not prevent the running of the statute. This rule has been followed in this state in several cases in which the point that there was fraud involved in the cause of action itself, or a fraudulent concealment thereof, was not raised or considered. Gale v. McDaniel, 72 Cal. 334, 13 Pac. 871; People v. Melone, 73 Cal. 574, 15 Pac. 294; Paige v. Carroll, 61 Cal. 211; Lattin v. Gillette, 95 Cal. 317, 30 Pac. 545, 29 Am. St. Rep. 115; Lambert v. McKenzie, 135 Cal. 100, 67 Pac. 6. In the last-mentioned case the court said: "It is not true that, where damages result from negligence, the cause of action arises upon the date of the discovery of the negligence, or of the negligent person. It is the date of the act and fact which fixes the time for the running of the statute. * * * And so throughout the law, except in cases of fraud, it is the time of the act, and not the time of the discovery, which sets the statute in motion." Italics ours.

But in actions at law, where the party liable had fraudulently concealed the injury, or the essential facts thereof, from the party injured, there has been a great diversity of opinion on this question in the courts of this country and of England. The following cases hold that the period of limitation runs from the date of the commission of the injury, or of the acts from which it flows, notwithstanding such fraudulent concealment thereof: Somerset Co. v. Veghte, 44 N. J. Law, 511; Troup v. Smith, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 43; Leonard v. Pitney, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 30; Allen v. Mille, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 202; Fee v. Fee, 10 Ohio, 469, 36 Am. Dec. 103; Howk v. Minnick, 19 Ohio St. 462, 2 Am. Rep. 413; Atchison, etc., Ry. Co. v. Atchison Grain Co., 68 Kan. 585, 75 Pac. 1051; Cocke v. McGinnis, 8 Tenn. 361, 17 Am. Dec. 809; Callis v. Waddy, 16 Va. 511; Clarke v. Reeder, 1 Speer (S. C.) 398; Franklin v. Waters, 8 Gill (Md.) 322; Barnes v. Williams, 25 N. C. 481; Imperial G. Co. v. London G. Co., 10 Exch. 39; Hunter v. Gibbons, 1 Hurl. & Nor. 459; Brown v. Howard, 2 Brod. & Bing. 23.

The following declare that such fraudulent concealment delays the running of the statute until the injured party discovers, or with reasonable diligence might have discovered, the facts constituting the injury and cause of action: Porter v. Smith, 65 Ala. 169; Snodgrass v. Bank, 25 Ala. 161, 60 Am.

Dec. 505; Tillson v. Ewing, 87 Ala. 350, 6 South. 276; Moses v. Taylor, 6 Mackey (D. C.) 281; Traer v. Clews, 115 U. S. 537, 6 Sup. Ct. 155, 29 L. Ed. 467; Rosenthal v. Walker, 111 U. S. 185, 4 Sup. Ct. 382, 28 L. Ed. 395; Bailey v. Glover, 88 U. S. 346, 22 L. Ed. 636; Sherwood v. Sutton, 5 Mason, 143, Fed. Cas. No. 12,782; Campbell v. Vining, 23 Ill. 525 (Reprint Ed. 473); Cook v. Chicago, etc., Co., 81 Iowa, 551, 46 N. W. 1080, 9 L. R. A. 764, 25 Am. St. Rep. 512; Carrier v. Chicago, etc., Co., 79 Iowa, 86, 44 N. W. 203, 6 L. R. A. 799; District v. French, 40 Iowa, 601; First Mass. T. Ass'n v. Field, 3 Mass. 201, 3 Am. Dec. 124; Homer v. Fish, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 438, 11 Am. Dec. 218; Welles v. Fish, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 75; Shelby Co. v. Bragg, 135 Mo. 298, 36 S. W. 600; State v. Hawkins, 103 Mo. App. 255, 77 S. W. 98; Bowman v. Sanborn, 18 N. H. 206; Way v. Cutting, 20 N. H. 190; Quimby v. Blackey, 63 N. H. 77; McDowell v. Potter, 8 Pa. 190, 49 Am. Dec. 503; Campbell v. Boggs, 48 Pa. 524; Morgan v. Tener, 83 Pa. 305; Lewey v. Frick Co., 166 Pa. 536, 31 Atl. 261, 28 L. R. A. 283, 45 Am. St. Rep. 684; Reynolds v. Hennessy, 17 R. I. 177, 20 Atl. 307, 23 Atl. 639; Munson v. Hollowell, 26 Tex. 478, 84 Am. Dec. 582; Ripley v. Withee, 27 Tex. 17; Anding v. Perkins, 29 Tex. 348; Texas, etc., Ry. Co. v. Gay, 86 Tex. 608, 26 S. W. 599, 25 L. R. A. 52; Texas, etc., Ry. Co. v. Gay, 88 Tex. 115, 30 S. W. 543; Bulli G. M. Co. v. Osborne (1899) L. R. App. Cas. 351.

The leading cases in favor of the running of the statute in the foregoing list are Troup v. Smith, Somerset Co. v. Veghte, and Clarke v. Reeder. The argument is simple, and is the same in all of them. It is most forcibly and elaborately stated in Clarke v. Reeder. It is, in brief, that the statute of limitations makes no exception in actions at law in regard to fraud or fraudulent concealment, and that the courts are bound by the terms of the statute and cannot add to it or declare an exception which would nullify it in its application to cases properly embraced in its terms.

The leading cases declaring that a fraudulent concealment stays the operation of the statute are Bailey v. Glover, Sherwood v. Sutton, Lewey v. Frick Co., and Bulli C. M. Co. v. Osborne. In Bailey v. Glover the Supreme Court of the United States, by Justice Miller, says: "We are of the opinion that the weight of judicial authority, both in this country and in England, is in favor of the application of the rule to suits at law as well as in equity. And we are also of opinion that this is founded in a sound and philosophical view of the principles of the statutes of limitation. They were enacted to prevent frauds, to prevent parties from asserting rights after the lapse of time had destroyed or impaired the evidence which would show that such rights never existed, or had been satisfied, transferred, or extinguished, if they ever did exist. To hold that by concealing a fraud, or by committing a fraud in such a manner that it concealed itself until such a time as the party committing the fraud could plead the statute of limitations to protect it, is to make the law which was designed to prevent fraud the means by which it is made successful and secure. And we see no reason why this principle should not be as applicable to suits tried on the common-law side of the court's calendar as to those on the equity side. * * * We hold that when there has been no negligence or laches on the part of the plaintiff in coming to the knowledge of the fraud which is the foundation of the suit, and when the fraud has been concealed, or is of such a character as to conceal itself, the statute does not begin to run until the fraud is discovered by, or becomes known to, the party suing, or those in privity with him." There is perhaps no better statement of the rule and the reasons for it than the above. The precise question was decided in this state in the early case of Kane v. Cook, 8 Cal. 449. It was an action by a consignor against the consignee to recover the price of goods sold by direction of the consignor. It was held to be an action at law. The consignee had not reported the sale. Field, J., delivering the opinion, reviews at considerable length the conflicting decisions then existing on the question and concludes as follows: "In this diversity of opinion on the question, we are free to adopt that rule which will best tend to advance justice, and prevent the perpetration of fraud; and we therefore hold that in all cases a fraudulent concealment of the fact, upon the existence of which the cause of action accrues, is a good answer to the plea of the statute of limitations. By the system of practice adopted in this state there is no replication to the answer. The fraudulent concealment cannot, therefore, be replied to by pleading, but it may be established by proof on the trial, and will then just as effectually avoid the plea of the statute. In the present case the plaintiffs are residents of New York. They looked to their consignee in California to acquaint them of the sale of their goods. His delay of three years to impart any information cannot be reconciled with honest intentions, but necessarily leads to the conclusion that the sale was concealed for a fraudulent purpose."

This decision has never been questioned. It was rendered in 1857. Although it has not been cited, it has been followed in principle in subsequent cases. See Christensen v. Jessen, and other cases hereinafter cited. The statute then in force contained the provision now found in subdivision 4 of section 338 concerning actions for relief against fraud, but the decision was not based upon that provision, nor was it referred to. It was put upon the general ground that the rule was applicable to any statute of limitations, although not containing any express exception in relation to fraudulent concealment. The statutes of limitation have been re-enacted without change since the decision was made.

[6] The familiar rule is that when there is a re-enactment of a statute in the same language, after a construction by the courts, the new statute is presumed to be intended to have the same effect as that previously given to its predecessor. From this review of the authorities, in this and other jurisdictions, and for the reasons given, we hold that the rule stated in Bailey v. Glover, supra, and Kane v. Cook, supra, is applicable in all cases where fraud enters into the cause of action, and there has been a fraudulent concealment of the injury. Further than this, we need not go in the present case. Under the decisions particularly applicable to underground trespasses in mines, there was here both fraud in the taking and a fraudulent concealment of the fact thereafter. "It is, indeed, part of the equity doctrine of fraud not to define it, not to lay down any rule as to the nature of it, lest the craft of man should find ways of committing fraud which might escape the limits of such a rule or definition." 1 Bouv. Dic. (Rawles Ed.) 844. It has been defined as "the unlawful appropriation of another's property by design." Oldham v. Stephens, 45 Kan. 369, 25 Pac. 863. Also as, "what is done in secret, and where there is concealment from a party in a matter which concerns his interest." Dale v. Smith, 1 Del. Ch. 1. In Bulli C. M. Co. v. Osborne, supra, "the appellants, proceeding secretly with their workings," took coal from under respondent's land, with knowledge, and intentionally. The court said: "In the present case the coal was taken furtively. No one can deny that it is a fraud to rob your neighbor furtively of his property." The court also declared that, to constitute a fraudulent concealment of such a trespass, it was not necessary to show that the wrongdoer had taken active measures to prevent detection. It is one of the cases where the fraud "conceals itself," as stated by Miller, J., in Bailey v. Glover, supra. In Livingstone v. Rawyards, L. R. 5 App. Cas. 34, Lord Hatherly also treats of an underground trespass as a species of fraud. In the English decisions the willful and secret taking of coal from a neighbor's mine is usually characterized as fraudulent. Hilton v. Woods, L. R. 4 Eq. Cas. 440; Dean v. Thwaite, 21 Beav. 623; Ecclesiastical Coms. v. North E. Ry. Co., L. R. 4, Ch. Div. 860; Trotter v. McLean, L. R. 13, Ch. Div. 586. Such an act, so committed, has all the substantial elements of fraud. Where one by misrepresentation induces another knowingly to part with his property, because his mind is so beclouded by the falsehood that he is unaware of the wrong done him, it is called a fraud. It is a taking of another's property without his knowledge of the fact that it is really taken from him. The ignorance in that case is produced by artifice. Where one betrays a trust and appropriates trust property to his own use, it is called a fraud. The injured party allows the other to have the possession and the opportunity to convert the property secretly, because of faith and confidence in the wrongdoer. In the case of underground mining of a neighbor's ore, nature has supplied the situation which gives the opportunity to the trespasser to take it secretly and causes the ignorance of the owner. Relying upon this ignorance, he takes an unfair advantage of his natural opportunities, and thereby clandestinely appropriates another's property while appearing to be making only a lawful use of his own. The act in its very nature constitutes the deceit which makes it a fraud. It is a daily false representation that the ore he is taking is his own, with full knowledge that it belongs to another, and that that other is deceived by the artifice.

[8] It may be added that they also make a case coming within subdivision 4 of section 338, Code of Civil Procedure, relating to actions for relief against fraud. It was directly decided by this court in Christensen v. Jessen, 40 Pac. 747, that this subdivision applies to all actions for relief against fraud, whether such actions and the relief asked be legal or equitable according to the ancient classification. This case was decided in department, and a rehearing was refused by the court in bank. It is not reported in full in the official volume. See 107 Cal. xvii. This rule has been applied in Lataillade v. Orena, 91 Cal. 577, 27 Pac. 924, 25 Am. St. Rep. 219, Hayes v. Los Angeles Co., 99 Cal. 74, 33 Pac. 766, Gregory v. Spicker, 110 Cal. 150, 42 Pac. 576, 52 Am. St. Rep. 70, Archer v. Freeman, 124 Cal. 528, 57 Pac. 474, Simpson v. Dalziel, 135 Cal. 600, 67 Pac. 1080, and Marston v. Kuhland, 151 Cal. 102, 90 Pac. 188, each of which would have been classed as an action at law, when there were separate counts for law and equity cases. It appears to be settled in this state that, if fraud enters into a cause of action, the latter clause of this subdivision will apply and the cause of action will not be deemed to have accrued until the facts are discovered, regardless of the form or character of the action. This is not at all inconsistent with the rule followed in Murphy v. Crowley, 140 Cal. 141, 73 Pac. 820, and other similar cases holding that, where the action is one for which the statute of limitations prescribes a longer period than three years, section 338 will not control, and the period specially provided will be given. Here the discovery was made but 13 months before the action was begun, the plaintiff was not put on inquiry, and the trespass could not reasonably have been discovered sooner. Therefore, under the doctrines we have stated, the action is not barred.

[9] The rule of practice stated in Kane v. Cook, supra, still prevails. Under it, the fraudulent concealment could be proven without being pleaded. The secret and fraudulent taking was sufficiently alleged.

[10] Upon this branch of the case, the question whether the ore was taken by the defendants themselves, or by their agents without their knowledge or consent, is immaterial, provided it was taken willfully, intentionally, and secretly. The fraud of the agents will be imputed to the principal for the purpose of preventing the running of the statute of limitations, whether the principal was aware of it or not. The injustice of allowing such fraud to become successful by reason of lapse of time and concealment is an injustice to the owner, and it is precisely the same in effect and extent whether the fraud is that of the principal or his agent. The principal, having received the benefit of his agents' fraud, has no equity in his favor.

The defendants contend that the evidence shows that plaintiff was put on inquiry as to the existence of other trespasses than that on level No. 2, which defendants had admitted, and that with reasonable diligence it could have discovered, at least as early as 1897, the trespasses now complained of. But, as we have shown, some of the defendants' own agents in charge of the mine declared that these trespasses had not occurred at that time. After the trespass on level No. 2 was admitted in 1897, the officers of plaintiff visited defendants' mine, and were conducted through it by defendants' superintendent. They saw the admitted trespass and were shown into level No. 2, where the trespasses complained of here were made, but they were not shown or informed of those trespasses, if, indeed, they then existed, and they did not see them. The only information they had after that visit consisted merely of vague rumors. Under the circumstances, we are of opinion that the finding of the jury on this point cannot be disturbed.

[11] 4. The next question presented is that of the measure of damages. Twelve thousand tons of ore were taken from plaintiff's mine by the defendants. From this, after milling it at their own expense, defendants obtained gold of the value of $54,000. The cost of mining and milling it was $27,000. The verdict and judgment was for $54,000. Defendants claim that the cost of mining and milling should have been deducted from the value of the gold obtained. Plaintiff's counsel concede the rule to be that, if the invasion of the mine by defendants was the result of honest mistake and inadvertence, the measure of damages would be the value of the gold less the cost of mining and milling, but they say that, if it was intentional and with knowledge of plaintiff's rights, the defendants are chargeable with the value of the gold after reduction, without any deduction for expenses of mining and milling. The authorities sustain the latter proposition. 4 Suth. on Dam. §§ 1126, 1127, 1128; 2 Sedg. on Dam. §§ 500–504. The objection of the defendants is that to allow damages in excess of the value of the ore as it lay in the mine is to give plaintiff the benefit of defendants' labor without any equivalent in return, and is, in effect, punitive damages, allowable only where there is oppression, fraud, or malice, and which will not be given against principals for the fraud of their agent, unless such fraud was known to the principals, or was authorized or ratified by them. The authorities last cited assume that such enhanced damages are punitive in character.

Under the rules laid down in the Civil Code, it must be conceded that the plaintiff can be allowed the benefit of defendants' work in mining and milling the ore only upon the theory that it is given as a punishment of the defendants. The general rule of damages in tort is declared to be "the amount which will compensate the injured party for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, whether it could have been anticipated or not." Section 3333. For the wrongful conversion of personal property, the damage allowed is its value "at the time of the conversion," with interest, or, if "the action has been prosecuted with reasonable diligence," the highest market value at any time between the conversion and the verdict, without interest, at plaintiff's option. Section 3336. Treating the case as one for the conversion of chattels, the conversion was complete when the defendants had mined the ore and mingled it with ore from their own mine. Its value at that time would not include the cost of milling. No evidence was given as to the cost of mining alone. The subsequent "highest market value," referred to in the second clause of section 3336, ordinarily means the subsequent value of the thing in the condition it was in at the time of the conversion. It would not include a value added to it by reason of an improved condition given to it by the defendant after conversion. Of course, if the property taken can be identified in its changed condition, the rightful owner may retake it as it is, since the title remains in him, and he may thus in that case obtain the benefit of the improved condition. But in this case identification is impossible. It is not claimed that the unmilled ore was, or would have been, ever of any higher value than it was when it was mined. The giving to the plaintiff of the value added to it by the milling, as damages, is therefore not authorized by section 3336. It can be allowed only as exemplary damages, authorized by section 3294, as a punishment, where the defendants have been guilty of oppression, fraud or malice.

[12] It is the settled law of this state that exemplary damages cannot be given against a principal for the fraud of the agent, unless the principal either had knowledge of the fraud at the time, or authorized it, directly or by implication, or ratified it after it came to his knowledge. In the recent case of Davis v. Hearst, 116 Pac. 530, under the subtitle "Imputed malice in fact," the rule is thus stated: "It follows of necessity that no principal can be held in punitive damages for the act of his agent, unless the particular act comes within the principal's specific directions or general suggestions, or unless the principal has subsequently ratified it, such ratification presupposing, it is said, original authorization." We also refer to the authorities there cited on this point.

[13] We do not find in the evidence any substantial proof that the defendants had any knowledge of the trespass complained of, or of its fraudulent character, at the time of its occurrence, or that they either specifically or by general directions or suggestions authorized it. The management and supervision of the defendants' mining operations appear to have been committed to the defendant, C. D. Lane. Defendant Hayward was consulted, but he seldom visited the mine. Lane was in the mine in 1897 after the admitted trespass on level No. 2 occurred, and he immediately noticed it and condemned it. He gave instructions to those in subordinate control that they must mark the boundaries in the levels, so that the men would know when they came to it, and that they must take care not to trespass again on the Lightner mine. There is no evidence that either of the defendants were ever informed of the trespass here in issue until this suit was begun against them. The defendant Hobart Estate Company owned a one-third interest in the Utica mine, but it took no part in the management and none of its officers ever visited the mine. Its only participation in the enterprise was the receipt of dividends from the other partners and the payment of expenses when called on to do so.

[14] Plaintiff argues that the defendants ratified the wrongful and fraudulent acts of their agents by the denials thereof in their answer to the complaint, and their failure to investigate the matter or make restitution, after they were informed of the facts by the service upon them of a copy of the complaint. Where a party is sued, he has the legal right to make such defenses as he believes he can establish by proof. It is true, as we have said, that there is sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict of the jury holding that the ore in question was taken after November 21, 1896, when plaintiff first acquired an interest in the Lightner mine. But it must also be admitted that, although sufficient to raise a conflict, this evidence is not particularly strong or convincing, and that the defendants produced ample evidence to show their good faith in denying the trespass in issue and pleading the statute of limitations. The jury gave credit to the opposing testimony, but there is nothing in the case that would authorize the conclusion that the defendants alleged these defenses in bad faith, or that the pleading thereof should be taken as evidence of ratification of a fraudulent act which they obviously expected to prove had not been committed against the plaintiff at all. There may be some circumstances that would arouse a suspicion of knowledge on their part prior to the filing of their answer, but there was no substantial proof thereof. The service of the complaint in the former action in 1897, for the admitted trespass cannot serve as such proof, for the plaintiff's case rests entirely upon the theory that the ore in question here was taken subsequent to that date, and after the defendant Lane had given positive instructions to the men at the mine not to trespass again. There is no proof of knowledge, authorization, or ratification.

The result is that the verdict for $54,000 is excessive. It should have been for only $27,000, which the jury found to be the value of the ore before mining and milling.

5. Some of the instructions given by the court are contrary to the conclusions above stated, and are, as we conceive, erroneous. But, in view of the special findings of fact by the jury, we do not think any of them can be considered as affecting the right of the plaintiff to recover the $27,000 found to be the actual compensatory damages.

[15] Instruction 22 was to the effect that the statute of limitations for an underground trespass did not begin to run when the trespass was committed, but from the time of the discovery thereof by the injured party, or from the time when with ordinary diligence he might have discovered it. It omits the elements of secrecy and of fraud in the trespass and fraudulent concealment thereof by the trespasser, and for that reason it is erroneous. But the jury, in answer to interrogations, expressly found that the trespass was made by defendants, secretly, knowingly, willfully, and intentionally, and that the defendants, with knowledge thereof, concealed the trespass from the plaintiff. As we have before stated, for the purpose of staying the statute of limitations, the defendants are chargeable with the fraud and fraudulent concealment of their agents, although it may never have been brought to their personal knowledge. The finding of the jury, therefore, establishes, for the purposes of our review of the case, the fact that the trespass was fraudulently made and fraudulently concealed, and hence that the statute did not begin to run until the discovery was or should have been made, as stated in the instruction. Under these circumstances, the giving of the instruction was not prejudicial, since the jury have found the additional facts which should have been contained in it to make the instruction correct. This was held in Lowe v. San Francisco, etc., Co., 154 Cal. 578, 98 Pac. 678. There were other instructions suggesting the same view, and, upon the same ground, they must be considered as immaterial and harmless.

[16] One of the instructions objected to was to the effect that, if the jury should find that the ore taken by defendants from the Lightner mine was partly extracted before the Lightner Company entered into possession under its purchase and partly afterward, the burden rested upon the defendants to show how much was taken before the entry and how much was taken afterward, and that, if defendants failed to do so, then the plaintiff was entitled to recover for the entire amount taken. In view of the facts found, this was not error. As we have seen, the plaintiff's ore was taken by the defendant's employés in charge of the mine secretly and knowingly. It was wrongfully carried to defendants' mill, along with their own ore, and indistinguishably mingled with that ore. The doctrine of confusion of goods applies. "It has long been settled as the common law that where personal chattels, solid or fluid, are so mingled as to have become undistinguishable by the wrongful act of one owner, he cannot recover for his own proportion, nor for any part of the intermixture, but the entire property rests in him whose right was so invaded." 2 Schouler on Pers. Prop. § 47.

[17] Under some circumstances, he can obtain the benefit of that proportion of the mass which was originally his own. But it rests with him to show the proportion which belongs to him. "All the inconveniences of the confusion is thrown on the party who produces it, and generally it is for him to distinguish his own property or lose it." 6 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 596, citing First N. B. v. Schween, 127 Ill. 580, 20 N. E. 681, 11 Am. St. Rep. 174; Lehman v. Kelly, 68 Ala. 204; Mayer v. Wilkins, 37 Fla. 254, 19 South. 632; Diversey v. Johnson, 93 Ill. 547; Stuart v. Phelps, 39 Iowa, 20; Weil v. Silverstein, 69 Ky. 702; Loomis v. Green, 7 Me. 393; Kreuzer v. Cooney, 45 Md. 591; Robinson v. Holt, 39 N. H. 563, 75 Am. Dec. 233; James v. Burnet, 20 N. J. Law, 642; Hart v. Ten Eyck, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 108; Starr v. Winegar, 3 Hun, 494. The cases support the text. It matters not that the defendants' employés knowingly mingled the ore without the actual knowledge of the defendants themselves. Dillingham v. Smith, 30 Me. 383.

[18] Instruction 9 was to the effect that "the right of the plaintiff to recover is not at all affected by the fact that the trespass was not willful." This would be technically correct if it meant only that the plaintiff could recover compensatory damages for a trespass not willfully made. The right to recover exemplary damages would be affected by the fact that the trespass was willful, if by a willful trespass is meant a fraudulent or malicious trespass. But the right to recover compensatory damages is not affected by the fact that the trespass was not willful. Maye v. Yappen, 23 Cal. 306.

[19] Hence the giving of the instruction could be prejudicial only with regard to punitive damages included in the verdict, and the error can be sufficiently cured by reducing the judgment to the amount of damages allowed as compensation.

[20] This applies, also, to instructions 10 and 20, to the effect that every entry by the owner of one mine upon an adjoining mine is presumed to be willful, because a man is presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to know his own boundaries, and to instruction 21, that for a willful trespass the defendants were not entitled to deduct the cost of mining and milling. If the damages are reduced to the value of the gold after deducting that cost, all of these instructions are rendered harmless.

The case appears to have been fully and carefully tried, and we do not find any error which substantially affects the right of the plaintiff to recover the $27,000, found to be the value of the ore taken, as it lay in the ground before it was mined.

[21] Substantial justice demands that, instead of reversing the cause for a new trial, the plaintiff be at least given an opportunity to accept the part of the damages as to which the verdict is not vitiated by the errors aforesaid. See Salstrom v. Orleans, etc., Co., 153 Cal. 558, 96 Pac. 292.

It is therefore ordered that in the event that plaintiff, within 30 days from the date of the filing of this opinion, file with the clerk of this court its written consent to a modification of the judgment by the deduction of $27,000 therefrom, leaving the same to stand for the remaining $27,000 and costs of suit, said judgment be modified accordingly, and the order denying a new trial shall be affirmed, such modified judgment to bear interest at the legal rate from the date of the entry of the original judgment of the superior court; but that, if such consent is not so filed within said time, the judgment and the order denying a new trial shall be reversed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.

On Rehearing.

Emil Pohli, for plaintiff.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff having consented thereto in open court, it is ordered that the judgment appealed from be modified by the deduction of $27,000 therefrom, leaving the same to stand for the remaining $27,000 and costs of suit, such modified judgment to bear interest at the legal rate from the date of entry of said judgment, and the order denying a new trial be affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 8, 1912.) Rehearing Denied Feb. 7, 1912.)

1. CERTIORARI (§ 4*)—PROCEEDINGS REVIEWABLE—JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.

A writ of review under Code Civ. Proc. § 1068, authorizing the writ where an inferior board exercising judicial functions, exceeds its jurisdiction, lies only where the board when exercising judicial functions has exceeded its jurisdiction, and there is no appeal or other adequate remedy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Certiorari, Cent. Dig. § 4; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 224*)—IRRIGATION DISTRICTS — CREATION — STATUTES.

The Legislature may by statute passed without notice or hearing create an irrigation district, or it may delegate the power to do so to a local board to be exercised on specified conditions, and on the ascertainment of specified facts by such board after notice and hearing to the parties interested.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 315, 316; Dec. Dig. § 224.*]

3. CERTIORARI (§ 21*) — PROCEEDINGS REVIEWABLE—"JUDICIAL PROCEEDING."

Where, in a proceeding before a local board not having the character of an ordinary court, public notice is required, and a hearing of objections to the contemplated action is provided for, and the order to be made affects the property or rights of the citizens, the proceeding is judicial in character, and reviewable on certiorari within Code Civ. Proc. § 1068, authorizing writ of review.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3864-3866.]

4. CERTIORARI (§ 21*) — ESTABLISHMENT OF IRRIGATION DISTRICTS—JUDICIAL REVIEW.

A proceeding before the board of supervisors of a county for the organization of an irrigation district under St. 1897, p. 254, as amended by St. 1911, p. 509, providing for the organization of irrigation districts on petition presented to the board after hearing on notice, etc., is judicial in character, and the act of the board in organizing a district is reviewable on writ of review.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Certiorari, Cent. Dig. §§ 33, 34; Dec. Dig. § 21.*]

5. CERTIORARI (§ 4*)—ADEQUACY OF OTHER REMEDY—REVIEW OF ESTABLISHMENT OF IRRIGATION DISTRICTS.

St, 1897, pp. 276, 277, §§ 68-72, authorizing an action by the board of directors of an irrigation district created under the act or by a person whose property is assessable by the district to determine the validity of district bonds or assessments, and declaring that no contest shall be made other than within the time and manner specified, do not authorize an action to determine the validity of the organization of an irrigation district, and do not furnish a remedy to review proceedings resulting in the organization of a district, but such proceedings are reviewable on certiorari.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Certiorari, Cent. Dig. § 4; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

6. STATUTES (§ 64*)—VALIDITY—INVALIDITY IN PART—EFFECT.

The invalidity of a section of St. 1897, p. 254, as amended by St. 1911, p. 509, which provides for an appeal to the superior court from an order of the board of supervisors in proceedings for the establishment of an irrigation district, does not render the other separable provisions of the act invalid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 58-66; Dec. Dig. § 64.*]

7. STATUTES (§ 64*)—VALIDITY—INVALIDITY IN PART—EFFECT.

The rule that, where the invalidity of a provision of a statute is so important that it will be presumed that the Legislature would not have enacted the valid part alone, the entire statute must fall, is a mere rule of construction, and under the rule the invalidity of a section of St. 1897, p. 254, as amended by St. 1911, p. 509, which provides for appeals from an order of the county board of supervisors in proceedings for the establishment of an irrigation district, does not render the other provisions of the act invalid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 58-66; Dec. Dig. § 64.*]

8. STATUTES (§ 64*)—VALIDITY—INVALIDITY IN PART—EFFECT.

Where the Legislature amends the valid parts of a statute after a provision thereof has been declared invalid, the invalidity of the provision does not render the balance of the act invalid because the amendment shows that the Legislature deemed that the invalidity of such provision was so vital that the act would not have been passed without it.

9. CERTIORARI (§ 60*)—PLEADINGS—RETURN —REVIEW.

Where a return in pursuance of a writ of review issued on a complaint has been filed, the court will not consider the demurrer to the complaint or the motion to quash the writ, unless the return fails to show jurisdiction in the inferior board to make the order attacked or is otherwise insufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Certiorari, Cent. Dig. §§ 153–167; Dec. Dig. § 60.*]

10. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 225*)—ORGANIZATION OF IRRIGATION DISTRICTS—NOTICE—REQUISITES.

A notice of the time of the presentation of a petition for the organization of an irrigation district under St. 1897, p. 254, as amended by St. 1911, p. 509, need not be signed by all the petitioners, and a notice signed by some of them on behalf of all is sufficient, especially in view of the provision of the act that no defect in the form of the notice or signatures shall vitiate any proceeding thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 317; Dec. Dig. § 225.*]

11. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 225*)—ORGANIZATION OF IRRIGATION DISTRICTS—NOTICE—REQUISITES.

A notice of the presentation of a petition to the county supervisors for the organization of an irrigation district under St. 1897, p. 254, as amended by St. 1911, p. 509, which states that the petition will be presented to the board at the courthouse on a designated day and hour, which day is a day for the regular meeting of the board, sufficiently complies with the statute providing that the petition shall be presented to the board at a regular meeting, and that the notice shall state the time of the meeting at which the petition will be presented.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 317; Dec. Dig. § 225.*]

12. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 225*)—ORGANIZATION OF IRRIGATION DISTRICTS—NOTICE—REQUISITES.

Under St. 1897, p. 254, as amended by St. 1911, p. 509, providing for the organization of irrigation districts, a notice of the presentation of a petition for the organization of the district which is authorized by the petitioners and which purports to be signed by some of them for all, and which is regularly published, is valid, whether the purported signatures are actually written by the petitioners or some other person by their authority.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 317; Dec. Dig. § 225.*]

13. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 309*) — WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 216*)—DUE PROCESS OF LAW—CONSTRUCTIVE SERVICE OF PROCESS.

A notice by publication in proceedings for the establishment of an irrigation district under St. 1897, p. 254, as amended by St. 1911, p. 509, which consists of the petition for the organization of the district with all the names of the petitioners followed by the notice of the time of the presentation of the petition, purporting to be signed by a large number of the petitioners, is sufficient to inform all persons of the nature of the proceeding, the time and the place of hearing, the property affected, and the persons who are the actors, and the due process of law clause of the Constitution does not render invalid the provision of the act that a lack of signatures to the notice shall not vitiate any proceeding thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 929, 930; Dec. Dig. § 309;* Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 216.*]

14. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 225*)—IRRIGATION DISTRICTS — ESTABLISHMENT — NOTICE—PUBLICATION—PROOF.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2010, providing that evidence of the publication of a notice may be given by the affidavit of the publisher of the newspaper in which the notice was published, the proof of the publication of notice in proceedings under St. 1897, p. 254, as amended by St. 1911, p. 509, for the establishment of irrigation districts, may be made by the affidavit of the publisher of the newspaper in which the notice was published.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 317; Dec. Dig. § 225.*]

15. CERTIORARI (§ 66*) — PROCEEDINGS FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF IRRIGATION DISTRICTS—REVIEW.

Where, on certiorari to review proceedings for the establishment of an irrigation district, there was no charge that the signatures to the petition for the organization of the district were not genuine, that the evidence on which the court found their authenticity was not made a part of the return, and was not incorporated into the record, did not justify a determination that the proceedings were invalid for want of genuineness of the signatures to the petition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Certiorari, Cent. Dig. § 178; Dec. Dig. § 66.*]

16. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 224*)—IRRIGATION DISTRICTS — STATUTES — PETITION.

The Legislature is the sole judge of the propriety of the formation of irrigation districts, and the question of procedure is a mere matter of legislative policy, and the Legislature may authorize that the initiatory proposal for the organization of a district may be made by such persons as it sees fit, and it may make owners of possessory rights eligible petitioners.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 315, 316; Dec. Dig. § 224.*]

17. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 225*)—IRRIGATION DISTRICTS—JUDICIAL REVIEW.

One not interested in land lying outside of the original boundaries of a proposed irrigation district, but included by the board of supervisors in the district, may not attack the validity of the district because it includes such land, especially where the land is so insignificant a part of the district that the exclusion thereof will not nullify the creation of the district.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 317; Dec. Dig. § 225.*]

18. CERTIORARI (§ 68*)—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

The court on certiorari will not review the conflicting evidence as to jurisdictional facts given before the tribunal whose action is sought to be reviewed.

Rehearing denied in bank; Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

E. W. Britt, R. D. McPherrin, and Hunsaker & Britt, for plaintiff. Phil D. Swing, Dist. Atty., Eshleman & Swing, Conkling & Brown, and John M. Eshleman, for respondents.

SHAW, J. A writ was issued by this court to review the acts of the board of supervisors of Imperial county in the organization of an irrigation district under the act of March 31, 1897, and the amendatory act of 1911. Stats. 1897, p. 254; Stats. 1911, p. 509. A return having been filed, the cause was argued and submitted upon a demurrer to the complaint, a motion to quash the writ, and the return.

1. The defendants claim that the writ of review will not lie, for the alleged reason that the board of supervisors in organizing the district under the statute was not exercising judicial functions.

[1] Such writ cannot be issued to review the proceedings of the board except when it is exercising judicial functions, and has exceeded its jurisdiction in that respect, and there is no appeal, or, in the judgment of the court, any other plain, speedy, or adequate remedy. Code Civ. Proc. § 1068. The argument is that the act of creating such a public corporation or taxing district is a legislative act, and not a judicial proceeding.

It is not disputed that the mere creation of a district of this character is a legislative act. See Glide v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 21, 81 Pac. 225; In re Madera Irr. Dist., 92 Cal. 308, 28 Pac. 272, 675, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106; Potter v. Santa Barbara Co., 116 Pac. 1101. [2] The Legislature may either create such corporations itself by a statute passed without any formal notice or hearing, or it may delegate the power to some local board. People v. Sacramento Drainage Dist., 155 Cal. 386, 103 Pac. 207; Fallbrook Irr. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 174, 17 Sup. Ct. 56, 41 L. Ed. 369. It does not follow, however, that where the Legislature delegates such power to a local board, and provides that it can be exercised only upon certain conditions and upon the ascertainment of certain facts by such board, after a notice and hearing to parties interested, that the proceeding thus authorized is not of a judicial character. Although such boards do not have the character of an ordinary court of law or equity, they frequently are required to exercise judicial functions in the course of the duties enjoined upon them. In Robinson v. Board, 16 Cal. 208, the court says: "It is sufficient if they are invested by the Legislature with power to decide on the property or rights of the citizen. In making their decision they act judicially whatever may be their public character." There are many decisions to the same effect. People v. Supervisors, 8 Cal. 61; People v. Supervisors, 10 Cal. 344; El Dorado v. Elstner, 18 Cal. 149; Murray v. Board, 23 Cal. 494; Miller v. Board, 25 Cal. 97; Keys v. Marin Co., 42 Cal. 254; Smith v. Strother, 68 Cal. 196, 8 Pac. 852; Wulzen v. Board, 101 Cal. 24, 35 Pac. 353, 40 Am. St. Rep. 17.

[3] Where in a proceeding before such a board a public notice is required to be given, and a hearing of objections or protests to the contemplated action is provided for, and the order to be made thereon is one which affects the property or rights of the citizen, the proceeding is usually held to be judicial and subject to be reviewed on certiorari. It is sufficient to come within the purview of the writ if such proceedings are of a judicial nature and are exercised by a quasi judicial body. 6 Cyc. 752; 4 Ency. of Pl. & Prac. 74.

[4] The proceeding provided for by the act comes clearly within these definitions. Section 1 designates the persons who may initiate the proceeding before the board. Stats. 1911, p. 509. Section 2 provides that such proceeding shall be begun by a petition presented to the board, signed by the required number of persons, representing the majority in value of the land, and setting forth the boundaries of the proposed district and the source of the water supply. Stats. 1911, p. 509. The petition, together with a notice of the time of the meeting at which it will be presented to the board, must then be published for two weeks. At that time the supervisors must hear the same. They may change the boundaries as deemed advisable by including or excluding territory therefrom but they must not exclude land irrigable from the proposed source, or include land which will not be benefited by irrigation therefrom. Any person whose lands may be irrigated from the proposed source may, in the discretion of the board, have such lands included within the district. The board must hear all relevant and competent evidence offered, and thereupon determine whether or not the petition is signed by a majority in number of the holders of lands within the proposed district susceptible of irrigation from the same source or system, and whether or not the lands held by such signers represent a majority in value of such lands within the district. Section 3. They must also determine the genuineness of the signatures to the petition and the sufficiency of the publication made. If all these facts are determined in favor of the petitioners, the board may then make an order fixing the boundaries of the district and calling an election to submit to the voters within the territory thus fixed the question whether the same shall be organized as a district under the law. Section 6. If the election is favorable, the board shall then make an order declaring the territory organized as an irrigation district.

This scheme presents all the usual elements of a judicial proceeding, the notice, the hearing, the taking of evidence, and the judgment. The privilege of using a portion of the water from a common source upon a particular tract of land is one which directly and materially affects the value of the land, and is clearly a property right of great value. The right to be excluded from the burdens which the construction and operation of the water works will impose upon property within such a district is also a property right. By this act the Legislature has committed to the board of supervisors the power to determine and dispose of these rights. The decision of such a matter, after notice and a hearing, is clearly the exercise of a judicial function. The circumstance that the facts are to be established as a foundation upon which the subsequent legislative act of creating a public corporation is to be based does not destroy the judicial character of the determination, nor take away the fact that it does affect private property injuriously or beneficially as the case may be. It is, therefore, a proceeding subject to be reviewed in certiorari.

[5] Sections 68 to 72 of the act authorize an action by the board of directors of the district, or by any person whose property is assessable by the district, to determine the validity of any district bonds or assessment. It is suggested that in this action the validity of the organization of the district would be in issue, and that the action is a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy to accomplish the end here sought. The board cannot bring such action until after the election is held and the district is organized. The property owner cannot do so until 30 days after the bonds are issued or the assessment levied, and then only when the board has not brought such action. These sections do not purport to authorize any inquiry into the proceedings for the organization of the district. The action is authorized solely for the purpose of inquiry into the validity of the bonds or assessment of the district. Section 72 provides that "no contest of anything or matter herein provided shall be made other than within the time and manner herein specified." If the validity of the organization of the district could be questioned at all in such an action, it would clearly be a collateral attack and the only point of inquiry would be the sufficiency of the notice and petition. The provisions of this act are not similar to those of the so-called "Wright act of 1887" (St. 1887, p. 29) and the act supplementary thereto (St. 1889, p. 212), providing for a proceeding to test the validity of bonds. This supplementary act expressly provided that in such action the court should have power to determine the validity of all the proceedings for the organization of the district. No such provision is contained in the act here under consideration. The action provided for cannot be deemed a plain, speedy, or adequate remedy. Section 4 of the act was intended to give a remedy upon these questions by appeal to the superior court of the county from the order of the board calling the election. This section, however, has been declared unconstitutional. Chinn v. Superior Court, 156 Cal. 479, 105 Pac. 580. No adequate remedy for an attempt to exercise this power remains except the writ of certiorari.

[6] It is claimed that the invalidity of section 4 providing an appeal to the superior court of the county to review the initiatory order renders the entire act void. Petitioner here invokes the rule that where valid and void provisions of an act are so dependent on each other that one cannot stand and have the effect intended, without the other, or where the invalidity of the provision is so important that it will be presumed that the Legislature would not have enacted the valid part alone, the entire act must fall. The first reason for this rule does not here exist. The two parts of the act are easily separable and the provision for an appeal was not essential to the validity of the other parts of the act. The Legislature, as we have seen, had power to create such districts, or authorize their creation by the board of supervisors, without providing for a review of the preliminary determination as to the facts.

[7] The second reason for the rule, namely, that the Legislature would not have enacted the valid part of the act alone, does not have its foundation in any restriction or limitation of the Constitution. It is a mere rule of construction applied for the purpose of ascertaining the true intent of the Legislature with respect to the valid portions of the act.

[8] Whatever force this consideration may have had when the act was passed, we think it is entirely removed by a legislative construction evidenced by subsequent legislation. At every session of the Legislature since its original enactment, the act has been amended or supplemented. The decision holding section 4, providing for an appeal, unconstitutional, was made and published on November 19, 1909. It is well known that a number of districts had been organized under the act upon the supposition that it was valid. The Legislature is, of course, presumed to have knowledge of the decision holding section 4 unconstitutional. With that knowledge the Legislature of 1911 again amended and supplemented the act. The act of March 9, 1911, provides that all bonds theretofore regularly issued by any such district and duly registered as therein prescribed shall be legal investments for public funds, private trust funds, and certain corporate funds. Stats. 1911, p. 322. The act of March 26, 1911, amends sections 1, 2, 15, 15½, 17, 30, 32, 34, 39, 55, and 61, and adds thereto a new section. Stats. 1911, p. 509. It shows a legislative revision of the entire act, and it clearly implies that the Legislature deemed the remaining portions of the act valid, and did not consider section 4 so vital to the scheme that the law would not have been enacted without it. It is not to be construed as having the effect of a re-enactment of the entire act. In that case the act, if void before, would be in force only after such revision. It is, in effect, a declaration of the legislative department of the state government that section 4 was not considered a vital or necessary part of the plan of the original act, and that, notwithstanding the invalidity of that section, the remainder of the act was deemed to have been valid from the beginning. In view of this legislative declaration and construction and the further consideration that the provisions of section 4 were not necessary to make the remainder of the act constitutional, we are of the opinion that the invalidity of that section does not affect the remainder of the act. It has been so decided by this court in bank in Re Bonds of South San Joaquin Dist., 119 Pac. 198.

[9] 3. The complaint in this proceeding having served its purpose by virtue of the issuance of the writ of review and the return having been filed in this court, it becomes unnecessary to consider the demurrer to the complaint or the motion to quash the writ, unless we shall conclude that the return fails to show jurisdiction in the board of supervisors to make the order, or is otherwise insufficient. We will now proceed to consider the sufficiency of the return.

Section 1 of the act provides that the organization of such irrigation districts may be proposed by persons holding title, or evidence of title, to lands within such proposed district, provided such lands are susceptible of irrigation from a common source by the same system of works. A holder of possessory rights by entry under the United States or this state is declared to be a qualified person to propose such district. Lands not irrigable as above stated are not to be considered. A sufficient number of persons must join in the proposition to constitute a majority, in number, of the total number of persons holding title to such irrigable lands situated within the proposed boundaries, and the lands of that character owned by such proposers must comprise a majority, in value, of such lands within the district, according to the valuations shown by the last preceding equalized assessment roll. Section 2, as before stated, provides that such proposal shall be by petition to the board of supervisors of the county. The return includes all the papers on file and the minutes of the board, together with the documentary evidence taken by the board at the hearing. It is supplemented by a statement of the subjects to which the oral testimony taken at the hearing related, and avers that such testimony was not taken down in shorthand, and that no record thereof was preserved.

[10] Objection is made to the notice of the time of the presentation of the petition. The first objection is that it was not signed by all the petitioners. The answer is that the statute does not so require. Furthermore, a clause of section 2 declares that "no defect in the contents of the petition or in the title or form of the notice or signatures, or lack of signatures thereto, shall vitiate any proceeding thereon; provided such petition or petitions have a sufficient number of qualified signatures attached thereto." A large number of the petitioners appear to have signed the notice as published; the notice stating that they signed on behalf of all the petitioners. If any signatures are necessary under the clause quoted, it is clearly sufficient if the notice is signed by some of the petitioners in behalf of all.

[11] Another objection is that the notice does not state that the petition will be presented at a meeting of the board. It states that the "foregoing petition" will be presented to the board of supervisors of Imperial county at the court house thereof on Monday, June 5, 1911, at 10 o'clock a. m. That day was, in fact, a day for a regular meeting of the board. The statute provides that the petition shall be presented to the board at a regular meeting of that body, but with respect to the notice it provides only that it shall state "the time of the meeting" at which it will be presented. The board is not a board except while it is in session. At all events, it is not such for the purpose of receiving petitions. The notice given substantially complies with the provisions of the act concerning it.

[12] With respect to the genuineness of the signatures to the notice, we think the issues tendered did not require proof thereof. It is not claimed that the notice was unauthorized by the petitioners. Under the statute, a notice authorized by the petitioners and purporting to be signed by some of them for all, and regularly published as required by the act would be valid, whether the purported signatures of the petitioners thereto were actually written by the petitioners or some other person by their authority

[13] A further claim is made that the above quoted clause of the act makes the whole law unconstitutional. It is argued that it authorizes a notice without any signatures thereto, and that due process of law by constructive service requires that the notice published shall be signed by some officer or actor. In support of this proposition in Re Central Irr. Dist., 117 Cal. 382, 49 Pac. 354, is cited. That decision is not in point. It had to do with the irrigation act of 1887, which simply provided that a notice of the time of the meeting should be published. This was held to mean a notice signed by the petitioners. That act did not contain any clause declaring that a lack of signatures should not vitiate the proceedings. The case is no authority on the question of the meaning of a law declaring that signatures are not essential. It does not discuss at all the question whether due process of law can be had without a signed notice. We know of no authority to the effect that a signature to the published notice is a necessary part of such process, where the only notice given or required is a publication in a newspaper. The substantial thing is that such notice shall be given as, under the circumstances, would have a reasonable tendency to apprise the parties interested of the nature of the proceeding and the time and place of the hearing. Lent v. Tillson, 72 Cal. 413, 419, 14 Pac. 71. If its contents are such that one reading it would understand that it was given by those who intend to apply for the relief indicated, the authorization thereof would be sufficient. The notice here given consists of the petition itself, with all the petitioners' names, followed by the notice, as above stated, purporting to be signed by a large number of the petitioners. It is clearly sufficient to inform all persons of the nature of the proceeding, the time and place of hearing, the property affected, and the persons who are the actors.

[14] The proof of the publication of the notice and petition was made by the affidavit of the publisher of the newspaper in which it was made. This was competent and sufficient evidence thereof. Code Civ. Proc. § 2010.

[15] When the petition was presented to the board on June 5th, it made an order appointing F. N. Payton to compare the signatures to the petition with the names on the last assessment roll of the county for the purpose of verifying the sufficiency of the petition as to the number and qualifications of the petitioners. The hearing was continued to June 10th. Payton then made and filed his affidavit stating facts showing that the petition was signed by a sufficient number of qualified persons, both with regard to their number and the value of the lands owned by them. The affidavit also states that he testified before the board to the same facts. The order of the board recites that witnesses were sworn and testified before the board at the hearing, and that therefrom the board found that the petition was signed by the requisite majority of landowners, both in number and value. This finding implies that the signatures to the petition were genuine, and that the evidence taken was directed to that question. The complaint under which this proceeding in review was issued does not aver that any of the signatures to the petition were false or forged, or that the persons making them were unauthorized to sign for the owners of the land in cases where the signature was by agent. The plaintiff appeared before the board at the hearing and made various objections to the sufficiency of the petition and the qualifications of the signers thereto, but it did not dispute the authenticity of the signatures. We may assume for the purposes of this consideration that a finding in the record upon a question which affects the jurisdiction of a tribunal may on certiorari be disputed by evidence de hors the record. There are authorities holding that this cannot be done. Los Angeles v. Young, 118 Cal. 298, 50 Pac. 534, 62 Am. St. Rep. 234. But, whether this is the true doctrine or not, it must be conceded that upon a review on certiorari, where there is no charge that the signatures to such a petition are not genuine, the mere fact that the evidence upon which the court found their authenticity is not made a part of the return and was not incorporated into the record in detail, is a wholly insufficient basis upon which to declare that the proceedings are invalid. Under these circumstances, we must presume that the authenticity of the signatures was sufficiently established by the proof before the board.

There is no merit in the claim that there were not a sufficient number of qualified petitioners. If, as is claimed, town lots are not irrigable and the owners thereof not eligible as petitioners, the only result would be that the 600 town lot owners, alleged to have signed as petitioners, must be rejected from both sides of the calculation. In that event, the remaining petitioners would still constitute a majority, in number and value, of the landholders within the district having land of the character designated in the act as necessary to qualify such petitioners.

[16] The objection that owners of possessory rights cannot be made eligible petitioners is untenable. The Legislature is the sole judge of the propriety of the formation of such districts. The question of procedure is a matter of legislative policy. Conceding that a notice and hearing are required, under the authorities, it is nevertheless clear that the Legislative may authorize the initiatory proposal to be made by such persons as it sees fit. In re Madera Irr. Dist., 92 Cal. 320, 28 Pac. 272, 675, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106.

[17] It is claimed that the order of the board is void because it includes certain tracts of land not within the boundaries described in the petition. The statute expressly gives power to the board to include such lands in the district as finally established, provided the lands so included will be benefited by irrigation from the system of works contemplated by the petition. It also provides that any person whose lands are susceptible of irrigation from the source described may upon application, in the discretion of the board, have such lands included within said proposed district. The order declares that certain lands lying outside of the original boundaries are susceptible of irrigation from the proposed source and by the same system of works and will be benefited thereby, and thereupon it declared that such lands should be included in the district, and it was so ordered. The order is silent upon the question whether the owners of lands thus embraced applied to have such lands made a part of the district. It is not claimed that the present plaintiff the Imperial Water Company No. 1 is in any way interested in said lands. They comprise a very small proportion of the district as finally established. It is unnecessary here to determine whether the owners of these lands, in case they did not consent to the inclusion thereof in the district, could have the proceedings declared void as to them, and their lands excluded from the district by any appropriate proceeding in court or otherwise. Whatever the rights of the owners thereof may be, the consideration thereof is immaterial to the present case. The complainant has no right to invoke aid from them, and no right to represent them here. The lands comprise so insignificant a portion of the district that the exclusion thereof from the legal boundaries would not be sufficient to nullify the order providing for the organization of the district.

[18] 4. A motion was made to require the defendant to make a further return by certifying a statement of all the testimony and evidence produced and received before the board at the time of the hearing. This motion was not presented to this court upon the argument. It is not claimed that the oral testimony if produced would do anything more than present a conflict of evidence as to the facts necessary to establish jurisdiction. The authenticity of the signatures not being disputed, it is unnecessary, upon this hearing, to produce the evidence establishing that fact. Upon the issues made, the return shows that there was enough evidence before the board to establish the necessary facts. It is settled law that in certiorari the reviewing court will not consider the weight of conflicting evidence as to jurisdictional facts given before the tribunal whose action is sought to be reviewed (Golden Gate M. Co. v. Superior Court, 65 Cal. 189, 3 Pac. 628; 6 Cyc. 824), and no good end would be secured by requiring any further return or in continuing this proceeding to allow any further presentation thereof. The motion will be denied.

We find no other questions which we think of sufficient importance to notice. It appears that the board of supervisors had jurisdiction to make the order complained of, and that the board was acting in pursuance of a constitutional law.

It is ordered that the proceedings be affirmed and the writ discharged.

PEOPLE v. MARTINEZ. (Cr. 211.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 4, 1911.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 332*)—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO MURDER—APPEAL—REVIEW.

As the jury, in passing on the guilt of accused, charged with assault with intent to murder, must determine the intent, its conclusion must be considered as final on that issue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 699–704; Dec. Dig. § 332.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 230*)—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE—INTENT—TESTIMONY OF ACCUSED.

The mere assertion by accused, when testifying, that he had no intention of killing prosecutrix may be rejected by the jury, where, in view of the facts, they are satisfied, beyond a reasonable doubt, that his intent included the intent to murder.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 230.*]

3. HOMICIDE (§ 89*)—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO MURDER—EVIDENCE.

To establish an assault with intent to murder, it is not essential that the person assaulted should have been desperately or even seriously wounded to show murderous intent, and such intent is shown by proof of an assault with a large knife and the infliction of wounds, indicating that the knife used was of a deadly character, and that a more dangerous injury did not result because of the struggles of the person assaulted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 115–118; Dec. Dig. § 89.*]

4. HOMICIDE (§ 257*)—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO MURDER—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to support a conviction of assault with intent to murder.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; John G. Covert, Judge.

George Martinez was convicted of assault with intent to murder, and he appeals. Affirmed.

W. R. McQuiddy, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

JAMES, J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of assault with a deadly weapon, with intent to commit murder. The sentence pronounced against him was that he be imprisoned in state prison for the term of two years. He has appealed from this judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

For several months, and until about three weeks prior to the date upon which the alleged assault was committed, defendant and one Mary Rodrigues, the complainant, had lived together, without the sanction of any marriage ceremony, at the town of Hanford, in Kings county. The woman finally left the house of defendant, and went to live at another place, and with another man, in the same town. On the morning of March 31, 1911, defendant went to the house where the woman then was and attacked her with a knife, inflicting, besides a small wound on the wrist, a cut across her shoulder of about four inches in length and from one-half to three-quarters of an inch in depth. The complaining witness testified that Martinez came in at the door and asked her why she had left his house, to which she replied that she had left because he had ordered her to, and that the man immediately advanced upon her in an angry manner with a knife, the blade of which was about five inches in length; that she parried his blows in part; and that, after striking her on the shoulder and wounding her, he left the room and went away. A young woman, Petra Gomas, who was in the room with the complainant when defendant arrived, and who had gone out to obtain assistance upon discovering the angry manner of the latter, did not see defendant commit the assault, but did hear the complainant scream when she was attacked. After he had cut the woman in the manner described, defendant went out, and when discovered by the peace officers he was running toward the outskirts of the town. By this time, he had thrown away the knife which he had used in making the assault, and the weapon was not found nor produced at the trial. Defendant, testifying in his own behalf, asserted that he had gone to see the woman on a peaceful errand to ask her for some money of his, which he claimed she had taken from his house. He admitted having used the knife upon her person, but testified that it was a small knife, and that the woman had thrown a stick of wood at him before he cut her, and that he had had no intention of killing her at the time.

[1-3] Defendant complains that there was no evidence warranting the jury in determining that he was guilty of an assault with intent to commit murder. In passing upon the question of the guilt of defendant, the jury assumed the duty of determining with what intent the accused made the assault; and as to this matter its conclusion must be considered as final. The mere assertion of defendant, when he testified, that he had no intention of killing complainant the jury was entitled to reject altogether, if, upon a survey of all the other facts and circumstances shown in evidence, the jurymen were satisfied, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant's intent at the time he committed the assault was of the kind charged. An assault with intent to commit murder in its execution necessarily falls short of the crime of murder itself. The victim of such an assault still lives; and it is not essential that he or she should have been desperately or even seriously wounded, in order to establish that the assault was committed with murderous intent.

[4] In the brief summary of the evidence which we have given, there appears ample proof to support the verdict of the jury. It was shown by the testimony of the complaining witness that the assault was made with a large knife. The wound inflicted clearly demonstrated that the instrument used was of a deadly character; and that a more dangerous injury did not result was no doubt due to the struggles of the complainant, rather than to any nice care exercised by defendant to avoid the inflicting of a mortal wound. In order to uphold the appellant in his position, it would be necessary to say that no evidence was presented to the jury from which the intent necessary to make out the crime charged could be legally inferred. The record does not present such a case.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

1. INSURANCE (§ 771*)—FRATERNAL INSURANCE—BENEFICIARIES—BY-LAWS.

Where the by-laws of a fraternal beneficial association provide that the beneficiary must be a relative or dependent on the member, the beneficiary must stand in that relation to the member; neither the society nor a member, nor both, can divert the fund due on a certificate from a person within the by-laws, and the designation of an ineligible person is ordinarily ineffectual.

2. INSURANCE (§ 771*)—FRATERNAL INSURANCE—BY-LAWS—CONSTRUCTION.

The court must construe the rules of a fraternal beneficiary society liberally to effect the benevolent purposes of the order; and where any doubt exists as to whether the mother of a deceased member or a stranger is entitled to the fund due on the certificate the court must construe the rules so that the mother will receive the fund, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1866, requiring that an ambiguous statute be construed in favor of a natural right, rather than against it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1935; Dec. Dig. § 771.*]

3. INSURANCE (§ 771*)—FRATERNAL INSURANCE—BY-LAWS—CONSTRUCTION.

A by-law of a fraternal beneficiary society, stipulating that the benefits on the death of a member shall be paid to his legal heirs designated in his application, and that, where one or more beneficiary shall die during the lifetime of the member, the surviving beneficiaries shall be entitled to the benefits equally, and where all the beneficiaries shall die during the lifetime of the member, and he shall have made no other provision, and no legal heir shall appear, the certificate shall be void, gives the benefit, on the death of a member, to his mother, who is the sole heir, though she is not mentioned in the certificate, as against a person, not a relative of the member, though mentioned as beneficiary in the certificate, since the naming of an ineligible person is equivalent to the failure to designate any one.

Appeal from Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Complaint in interpleader by the Journeymen Butchers' Protective & Benevolent Association of the Pacific Coast against Alice Bristol and Josephine Aubrey to determine the rights to a fund due under a benefit certificate. From a judgment for defendant Alice Bristol, defendant Josephine Aubrey appeals. Reversed.

H. W. Hutton, for appellant. Harris & Hess and Knight & Webster, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. The plaintiff is a fraternal and beneficial organization, of which Charles R. Aubrey was, at the time of his death, a member in good standing. While such member, in accordance with the laws of the plaintiff corporation, there was issued to him a benefit certificate for $500, in which certificate he named as the beneficiary thereof the respondent, Alice Bristol. She, although sometimes known by the name of Aubrey, was not related to the deceased, and the sole heir left surviving him is his mother, the appellant. Upon the death of Aubrey, both respondent and appellant demanded payment of the certificate, whereupon the plaintiff filed a complaint in interpleader against them, in which, while it denied the claim of appellant to any interest in the fund, it offered to pay the money into court "for the use and benefit of the person or persons, if any, found to be entitled thereto." Subsequently the $500 was by plaintiff deposited with the clerk of the superior court for that purpose.

The provision of the laws of the plaintiff which governs the question as to who is entitled to this fund reads as follows: "In case of the death of a member in good standing, the benefits shall be paid to his legal heirs designated in the application for endowment certificates. If one or more members of the beneficiaries shall die during the lifetime of the member, the surviving beneficiary or beneficiaries shall be entitled to the benefits equally, unless otherwise provided in the application for endowment certificate; and if all the beneficiaries shall die during the lifetime of a member, and he shall have made no other provision, or no legal heir shall appear within twelve calendar months from the death of a member, the certificate shall be null and void."

[1] Organizations like the plaintiff are generally created and instituted for the aid and relief of the families of deceased members, and usually their laws provide that the beneficiary of the fund must be a relative and dependent on the deceased member, and that the appointee must be one of that class. Caldwell v. Grand Lodge, 148 Cal. 195, 82 Pac. 781, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 653, 113 Am. St. Rep. 219; 3 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 1042; 29 Cyc. 111. Where the class of persons to whom the benefits shall be paid is prescribed by the society, neither the society nor the member, nor both, can divert the fund from that class, and the designation of an ineligible person is ordinarily void or ineffectual. 29 Cyc. 107, 108.

Respondent does not dispute these general principles; nor does she dispute that the intention of the plaintiff corporation, as manifested by the quoted by-law, was to confine members to nominating heirs as beneficiaries. Respondent does, however, contend that the appellant, not having been designated in the endowment policy, she has no interest in the fund, and that therefore no one but the fraternal association could question the ineligibility of the person designated, and the society, having paid the money into court, has waived its right to object and the respondent is therefore entitled to recover the fund.

There is a conflict in the authorities as to whether the society, by paying the money into court, waives its objection to the ineligibility of the person nominated. 29 Cyc. 105; Keener v. Grand Lodge, 38 Mo. App. 543-550; Bacon on Benefit Societies and Life Ins. vol. 1, §§ 242, 252; McLaughlin v. McLaughlin, 104 Cal. 171, 37 Pac. 865, 43 Am. St. Rep. 83. But here the plaintiff in the complaint denied that the respondent had any interest in the fund, and ultimately paid the money into court expressly for the limited purpose of having the court determine who, under the laws of the society, was entitled thereto. Hence the soundness of the respondent's position, both as to the law and the facts, may, to say the least, be seriously doubted. But whatever may be the correct view of these matters is unimportant here, for we think the mother of the deceased is entitled to the fund under the laws of the association.

[2] As before stated, the object of a society of this kind is to assist and benefit the families and heirs of deceased members; and courts are bound to construe its rules and regulations liberally to effect the benevolent purposes of the order. 3 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 1067; Niblack, §§ 160-175; Keener v. Grand Lodge, 38 Mo. App. 553. Again, if there were any doubt as to which of these two claimants is entitled to the fund, the policy of our law would be to give the by-law the interpretation that would favor the mother; she having the natural right. Code Civ. Proc. § 1866.

[3] Liberally construing the laws of the plaintiff corporation, if a liberal interpretation is necessary, we think the mother, being a legal heir of the deceased member under the statute of successions (Civ. Code, § 1386), is the beneficiary of the fund, although she was not nominated as such. It is true that the first paragraph of the by-law mentioned, as claimed by respondent, limits, in a negative way, the payment of the certificate to designated legal heirs; but what immediately follows in effect provides that, if all the nominated heirs die before the member, and no other heir is designated, and an heir appears within 12 calendar months from the date of the member's death, such heir shall be entitled. For example, if Charles R. Aubrey had named several heirs, and they had all died before him, or if he had failed to nominate any beneficiary, and the mother in either case had claimed payment of the certificate within the stated time, she would have been entitled to such payment. Here the naming of an ineligible person is equivalent to the failure to designate any one, and the mother, being an heir, must prevail.

The judgment is reversed.

DINKELSPIEL v. NASON et al. (Civ. 870.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 4, 1911.)

Brokers (§ 57*)—Limitation of Actions (§ 50*)—Right to Commissions—Accrual of Cause of Action.

Where a broker is given a contract, to continue in force till withdrawn in writing, entitling him to commissions on sale of the property by him, the owner, or any one else, while the contract is in force, and the owner gives a lease of the property, with an option to the lessee to purchase at any time during the five-year term of the lease, the broker is not entitled to a commission, and therefore his cause of action does not accrue till the lessee exercises his option; an option not amounting to a sale; and his contract giving him no right to a commission on withdrawal of the property from sale, even if the lease, with the exclusive option to the lessee, amounts to such a withdrawal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; A. J. Buckles, Judge.

Action by Edward Dinkelspiel against James E. Nason and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

T. T. C. Gregory, for appellant. W. U. Goodman, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. On July 28, 1904, plaintiff entered into a broker's contract with defendants for the sale of certain real property. Plaintiff was authorized to sell the property for $30,000, or any less sum accepted by defendants, and he was to receive a commission of 5 per cent. This provision was also in the agreement: "We also agree to pay said Edward Dinkelspiel, in the event of the sale of said property by him, or by any one else, including ourselves, while this agreement is in force 5 per cent. as and for his compensation thereunder." The contract was to continue until withdrawn by defendants in writing, and it was in force during all the time herein mentioned. On April 17, 1905, defendants leased the property to one William Pierce for the term of five years from April 1, 1905. The lease contained the following provision: "It is agreed that at any time during the said term, the said party of the second part [Pierce] may, at his option, purchase from the said parties of the first part [defendants] the said premises for the sum of $18,000.00 in gold coin; and the said parties of the first part will, in consideration of the said $18,000.00, convey to the said party of the second part a good, clear and valid title."

The complaint is in two counts. In the first, it is alleged that: "On or about December 6, 1909, said William Pierce tendered to defendants the sum of $18,000 in gold coin. Said defendants, and each of them, refused to accept the said sum. At said time, the said William Pierce was ready, willing, and able to buy the said property in accordance with the terms of said Exhibit B [the lease], and so informed the said defendants, and each of them, and offered to purchase the said property for the sum of $18,000 on the said date." In the second count it is alleged that, "on or about April 2, 1910, the real property was sold by defendants for the sum of $18,000 to said William Pierce." Hence, the claim for $900 as commissions.

A demurrer, on various grounds, including the statute of limitations, was interposed, and the court made the following order: "It is hereby ordered that the demurrer to the complaint of plaintiff, and each cause of action set forth therein, is hereby sustained, upon the ground that the action is barred by the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and said demurrer is overruled as to all other points." The appeal was taken from the judgment of dismissal of the action.

It is stated by appellant that: "It is the theory of defendants, and the one adopted by the court, that the cause of action arose in favor of plaintiff when the option was given to Pierce on April 17, 1905. Our position is that no cause of action arose until the tender or sale was made." The only controverted question, then, is: When is a broker, under such a contract, entitled to his commission? The agreement provided, in clear and simple language, that plaintiff was to receive the 5 per cent. in the event of a sale by himself or by defendants or by any one else. It is not disputed that the sale of the premises did not take place until the 10th day of April, 1910. So, if we are to follow the ordinary signification of the terms employed, we would reach the conclusion that plaintiff's cause of action arose on that date. But when it is provided that a broker shall receive a commission for the sale of property it is universally held that he earns his commission when he has produced a purchaser who is ready, able, and willing to purchase upon the terms prescribed. See Justy v. Erro, 117 Pac. 575, and cases therein cited. If the same rule should be applied to a case like this, where the broker is to receive a commission for a sale by the owner, then, according to the allegations of the complaint, the cause of action arose on December 6, 1909, for the reason that Pierce was at that time ready, able, and willing to purchase the property according to the terms of his option. At all events, it seems entirely clear that plaintiff had not earned his commission at any time prior to December 6, 1909; and therefore the action was not barred by the statute of limitations.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It seems to be held, without conflict, that a mere option to purchase does not entitle the broker to his commission. It is not a "sale," as that term is used in his agreement with the owner. The rule is stated in 19 Cyc. 251 and 252, as follows: "To entitle a broker to a commission, the customer produced by him and the principal must come to a final agreement on the terms of the transaction. Consequently the conclusion of a preliminary or tentative agreement which is not binding upon the party, and which is not carried into effect, does not give a right to compensation. Nor is a broker entitled to a commission where he procured a contract between the parties, subject to a condition not authorized by the terms of his employment. So if a broker, employed to effect a transaction, merely secured from a customer a contract, by which the latter becomes entitled to enter into the transaction at his option, the broker is not entitled to his commission. Thus a broker employed to sell property is not entitled to compensation for procuring a customer who takes an option on the property."

The same doctrine is announced in the well-considered case of Brown v. Mason, 155 Cal. 155, 99 Pac. 867, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 328. The two essentials to a broker's right to recover are stated by the court, through Mr. Justice Melvin, as: "(1) That he should produce and introduce to the seller a customer ready, able, and willing to take the property upon the terms stipulated; and (2) that this should be done within the time limit of the option." The court mentions certain exceptions to the rule, not in point here, and concludes that: "Wanting any of these exceptions, however, a broker is strictly held to the terms of his contract." In that case the plaintiff, Brown, was to get a commission for selling the property. He took a Mr. Long to defendant, and Long obtained an option to purchase the property, but did not purchase it under that option. The Supreme Court held that Brown was not entitled to any commission.

In Brackenridge v. Claridge, 91 Tex. 527, 44 S. W. 819, 43 L. R. A. 593, it is held that: "A contract by a broker to find a purchaser for land is not performed, so as to entitle him to a commission, where he procures one who merely obtained an option on the land, and made no offer to purchase." Other cases to the same effect, cited by appellant, are. Lawrence v. Rhodes, 188 Ill. 96, 58 N. E. 911; Bennett v. Egan, 3 Misc. Rep. 421, 23 N. Y. Supp. 154; Ward v. Zborovski, 31 Misc. Rep. 66, 63 N. Y. Supp. 219; Walsh v. Gay, 49 App. Div. 50, 63 N. Y. Supp. 543; Dwyer v. Raborn, 6 Wash. 213, 33 Pac. 350; Tousey v. Etzel, 9 Utah, 329, 34 Pac. 291; Lawrence v. Pederson, 34 Wash. 1, 74 Pac. 1011; Brown v. Keegan, 32 Colo. 463, 76 Pac. 1056.

On the same principle, manifestly, the broker would not be entitled to the commission in a case like this, when the owner, instead of selling the property, had only given an option for its sale.

But respondents contend that, by the execution of the lease to Pierce, the property was withdrawn from sale; and therefore the commission became immediately due. In support of this position, they cite Rucker v. Hall, 105 Cal. 425, 38 Pac. 962. In that case the defendant, in writing, appointed the plaintiffs her agents for the sale of certain lands, and the authorization contained the following clauses: "The said J. E. Rucker & Son shall have complete control of all sales to purchasers furnished by them or through their agency, and I agree in case I shall sell or dispose of such property to any customer furnished by said J. E. Rucker & Son, to pay them three per cent. commission on such sales. Should I find a purchaser independent from said J. E. Rucker & Son, or withdraw the property from sale I agree to pay said J. E. Rucker & Son one-half of the above commission as compensation for their services in advertising." Mrs. Hall leased the property for a term of five years, giving the lessee "the sole and exclusive privilege of purchasing the property." It was held that the plaintiffs were entitled to their commission. It is true that certain language is used in the opinion that tends to support respondents' contention that the lease here, as far as plaintiffs' right to commission is concerned, is equivalent to a sale. For instance, the court said: "The fifth finding is not justified by the evidence, in so far as it finds that Mrs. Hall did not find a purchaser or sell the property while her agreement with plaintiffs was in force. It is true the lease for five years, with the exclusive privilege of purchasing, did not bind the lessee to purchase, but Mrs. Hall bound herself to sell to the lessees at any time during the continuance of the lease, and to convey upon payment of $5,000 of the purchase money. She thus placed it out of her power to complete any sale plaintiffs might make for the space of five years, or forever, as the case might be. Such contracts must have a reasonable construction. The transaction must be considered as to its effect upon her contract with the plaintiffs, and not simply as to whether she had made a contract of sale, such as she could, in any event, enforce against a purchaser. This is apparent from the further provision of the contract with the plaintiffs that, if she should withdraw the property from sale, she was bound to pay plaintiffs the same commission as though she had made a sale to an independent person." This last sentence, as we view it, presents really the substantial ground for the decision. The property was withdrawn from sale in consequence of the lease, and therefore, under the express terms of the agreement with the brokers, they were entitled to their commission. We have no such condition in the case before us. There was no agreement here to pay a commission if the property should be withdrawn from the market. We repeat, the plaintiff here was to be paid only in case of a sale. There is nothing in their agreement that precluded defendants from leasing the property or granting an option to any one to purchase it, without incurring any pecuniary obligation to plaintiff. Of course, we must construe the opinion of Rucker v. Hall, supra, in accordance with the peculiar facts there in evidence. Thus the decision can be justified, and we will not be required to attempt the hopeless task of reconciling an expression or two, not necessary to the decision, with what we understand to be the universal trend of authority.

As we view it, the contention of respondents introduces an entirely new element into the broker's agreement. It is equivalent to interpolating into said contract the provision that the broker shall be entitled to his commission if the owner of the property should lease the same, with the option of purchase to the lessee. If, immediately after said lease was executed, appellant had brought an action to recover his commissions, the only conceivable grounds for recovery would be as follows: (1) That a "sale" was consummated, within the meaning of the broker's contract when a third person had taken "an option to purchase." This position is entirely untenable, as we have already seen. (2) That the property, by the act of the owners, was withdrawn from sale, and thereby the broker was prevented from obtaining a purchaser; and hence he should be held entitled to his commission. The answer to this is that there was no agreement to this effect. The parties contracted that the plaintiff should have his commission only in case of a sale. If, during the life of the option, he had produced a purchaser ready, willing, and able to buy, he probably would have earned his commission, notwithstanding the lease; but no such question arises here. (3) That there was an implied covenant, when the brokerage contract was executed, that the owners would not lease the property with an exclusive option to purchase, or, if they did, that the broker would be entitled to his commission. We are not aware of any principle of law or justice that demands such construction. The contract, as we have construed it, was quite favorable to the broker. He certainly had no right to demand any further indulgence than that he receive his commission when he procured a purchaser, or the owners themselves obtained one, ready, willing, and able to buy during the existence of the brokerage contract.

The other cases cited by respondents are in harmony with the views herein expressed, as will be seen by a brief reference to them.

In Phelan v. Gardner, 43 Cal. 306, it is held that: "If the owner of land employs another person to sell for him his land, at an agreed rate of commission, and the broker finds a purchaser who is willing to take the land at the price fixed, the owner cannot, by a refusal to sell to him, or by a sale to another, avoid the contract, and escape the payment of the commission." As well said by the court: "The plaintiff could do no more than procure a purchaser who was acceptable to the defendant, and willing and able to purchase the land upon terms satisfactory to him."

Gonzales v. Broad, 57 Cal. 224, was a similar case, as far as the broker's rights were concerned. There the plaintiff, having been employed by the defendant to find a purchaser for real estate, brought to him a party who was ready and willing to purchase, and with whom the defendant was satisfied and entered into an agreement to sell. Afterwards the purchaser refused to take the property, solely on the ground that the defendant's title was not satisfactory. It was held that the plaintiff did all that was required of him, and was entitled to his commission.

Smith v. Schiele, 93 Cal. 144, 28 Pac. 857, is to the same effect. There it was held that: "A written contract between the owner of land and real estate brokers, authorizing the brokers 'solely to sell' the land upon certain commissions, will be construed as simply conferring upon the brokers the exclusive right to sell the property, and not as limiting the contract of employment solely to the consummation of a sale, so as to make the payment of the broker's commission contingent upon such consummation."

In Quitzow v. Perrin, 120 Cal. 255, 52 Pac. 632, the agent was to receive his commission at the time of the actual transfer, when the "deeds of conveyance are executed"; and it was provided that: "If no deeds of conveyance are executed or actual transfers of property made, there will be no commission earned." It was held that there was sufficient evidence of an actual transfer to support the verdict of the jury in favor of the agent.

In Coward v. Clanton, 122 Cal. 451, 55 Pac. 147, the main controversy was as to whether the contract between the owner of the realty and the real estate broker constituted a partnership. The court determined that no such relation was created; but it was held that evidence tending to show that purchasers for the entire tract, who were acceptable to and accepted by defendant, and with whom satisfactory contracts were made, were found by the plaintiff, as defendant's agent, notwithstanding conflicting evidence to the contrary, is sufficient to sustain a decision that plaintiff had performed the contract on his part to sell the real estate.

In Hoadley v. Savings Bank of Danbury, 71 Conn. 599, 42 Atl. 667, 44 L. R. A. 321, the disputed question was whether the broker was the procuring cause of the sale; and it was held that, although the broker was not given the exclusive sale of the property, and the owner himself made the sale, the broker will be entitled to his commissions if he was the procuring cause of the sale, and after he has rendered the services which made him the procuring cause the owner cannot escape liability by telling him that no commission will be paid, in case the property brings only a certain price.

Lunney v. Healey, 56 Neb. 313, 76 N. W. 558, 44 L. R. A. 593, simply reaffirms the familiar doctrine that, "where a real estate broker contracts to produce a purchaser who shall actually buy, he has performed his contract by the production of one financially able, with whom the owner actually makes an enforceable contract of sale." In the notes to the last two cases, the whole subject of real estate brokers' commissions is ably and exhaustively treated, and a vast number of cases is cited; but we find nothing therein inconsistent with appellant's position here.

Hill v. McCoy, 1 Cal. App. 159, 81 Pac. 1015, was decided upon conflicting evidence as to whether the agent was the procuring cause of the sale; and it was held that the finding of the lower court that the agent was entitled to his commission was sufficiently supported.

This is not a case, we may repeat, where the owners, by the execution of their lease and option to purchase, were acting in bad faith, or were attempting to avoid their contract with the agent. On the contrary, they were acting entirely within their rights, and, as a matter of fact, the lease, with its option to purchase, was a step towards the consummation and in contemplation of a sale that would entitle the agent to his compensation. All parties in interest had a right to assume that no claim for commission could be successfully asserted, unless the agent or the owners should secure a purchaser ready and willing to buy the property.

We cannot avoid the conclusion that it was erroneous to hold that the plaintiff was entitled to his commission when said lease was executed. We think, therefore, the action was not barred by the statute of limitations, and the judgment is reversed.

MERRITT v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 17, 1912.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 509*)—RECORD—STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS.

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 951, 952, defining the record on appeal, applies to records on appeal prepared under sections 953a, 953c, providing for the preparation of papers on appeal, and a copy of the notice of appeal is a necessary part of the record on appeal and must be included in the transcript.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2317; Dec. Dig. § 509.*]

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 12*)—WATER RIGHTS—ACQUISITION.

On July 18th one filed in the United States land office a declaratory statement under the desert land act to obtain patent for land situated several miles distant from a place of diversion of water. Two days later he posted a notice of appropriation on the creek, claiming a specified quantity of water for use on the land. Nothing further was done in pursuance of the notice. Held that, under Civ. Code, § 1419, providing for the forfeiture of the right to the use of water as against a subsequent claimant, he did not acquire any rights under the notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 33*)—WATER RIGHTS — DETERMINATION OF CONFLICTING CLAIMS.

One who posts a notice of appropriation of water from a running stream, as authorized by Civ. Code, §§ 1410–1422, providing for the acquisition of rights to water by appropriation, has an incomplete, conditional right in the water, which is a vested interest in real property, and which may be adjudged to be such in a civil action to determine conflicting claims under Code Civ. Proc. § 738, authorizing actions to quiet title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 33.*]

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 33*) — WATER RIGHTS—ACTIONS.

Where a plaintiff, within 60 days after the posting of notice of appropriation of water of a running stream, had a survey and map made of the route of the proposed ditch from the proposed dam to the proposed place of use, to be used in applying for a permit from the federal government to construct the same over land in a forest reserve, and the survey was completed within 60 days, and plaintiff within 60 days filed his application with the United States authorities for permission to build the proposed dam, which application was pending, and plaintiff acted in good faith and prosecuted his application with reasonable diligence, he acquired such interest against subordinate adverse claims as to enable him to maintain an action to determine conflicting claims to the use of the water, but the judgment should not declare that plaintiff was absolutely entitled to the water, but it should only describe plaintiff's contingent right to use the water and enjoin adverse claims injurious thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 33.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Inyo County; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by C. Howard Merritt against the City of Los Angeles. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. P. Thompson and W. J. Clark, for appellant. John W. Shenk, City Atty., Leslie R. Hewitt, Ex-City Atty., Ben H. Yandell, and W. B. Mathews, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff sued for the purpose of obtaining an adjudication of the alleged conflicting claims of the plaintiff and defendant, respectively, to the use of the water of Haiwee creek in Inyo county, and to enjoin the defendant from claiming or using the same and from interfering with plaintiff's use. The defendant in its answer alleged that it is the owner of the first and paramount right to take from said creek all the water flowing therein to the extent of 300 inches constant flow, under a 4-inch pressure. Upon the trial the evidence showed that the normal flow of the creek did not exceed 75 inches, although for about a month of each year, while the mountain snows were melting, it far exceeded that quantity. The court found that the defendant is the owner of the right to take all the water therein to the extent of 75 inches, and that the plaintiff owned no interest therein. There was no affirmative adjudication of the defendant's title. The judgment merely declares that the plaintiff shall take nothing by his action and that defendant recover of him its costs.

[1] The record on appeal appears to have been prepared in the manner provided in sections 953a and 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure. It contains no copy of the notice of appeal. In the brief for plaintiff, counsel say that appeals were taken from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial. This statement is not questioned by counsel for defendant, and no motion to dismiss the appeals has been made. Consequently, we ignore the objection and assume that the appeals were properly taken and that we have jurisdiction accordingly. Inasmuch as there has recently been on the part of many members of the profession, who have chosen this mode of presenting the record, neglect in observing the requirements of the statute availed of, we take this occasion to state that sections 951 and 952 obviously apply to records prepared under sections 953a and 953c, as in other cases, and that a copy of the notice of appeal is a necessary part of every record on appeal and should be included in the transcript in all cases.

[2] The plaintiff on July 18, 1905, filed in the United States land office a declaratory statement under the desert land act to obtain patent for a half section of land situated several miles distant from the place of diversion of the water in question. On July 20, 1905, he posted a notice of appropriation on Haiwee creek claiming 500 miners' inches of the water for use on said land. Nothing further was done in pursuance of this notice, and, under section 1419 of the Civil Code, it lapsed after 60 days, so far as subsequent bona fide claimants under valid notices were concerned. The lack of diligence was so great that the court below was justified in holding, as the findings imply, that no rights ever accrued under this notice. Senior v. Anderson, 115 Cal. 504, 47 Pac. 454.

On September 20, 1906, plaintiff posted at the same place another notice of appropriation of the same quantity of water from said creek for the same purpose. No work was ever done under this notice. The notice showed that the place of diversion was upon public land within a forest reservation of the United States. Section 1422 of the Civil Code, as amended in 1903, provides that a person appropriating water upon such land shall begin his diversion works within 60 days after he shall have received permission to do so from the United States, provided that within 60 days after posting his notice of appropriation he must in good faith begin the surveys and other work necessary for use with his application for such permission and diligently prosecute the same to completion, and must, on completion of that work, in good faith apply for such permission and diligently prosecute such application. There was no proof of any survey or other work in compliance with this section. Some vague testimony of the making of a survey was introduced, but the date thereof was not stated. The claim under this notice appears to have been abandoned. At all events, the court was justified in so finding.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Another notice of appropriation was posted on February 10, 1908. Nothing appears to have been done in pursuance of it, and this claim also must be deemed to have been abandoned.

On June 14, 1908, plaintiff posted at the same place another notice of appropriation of 100 inches of water of said creek for use on the same land. The notice states that the proposed dam and ditch would be within the Sierra National Forest, a forest reservation of the United States. Within 60 days after the posting of this notice plaintiff had a survey and map made of the route of the proposed ditch from the proposed dam to the proposed place of use, to be used in applying for a permit from the United States to construct the same over the land in the forest reserve. The survey was completed on July 23, 1908. On August 10, 1908, plaintiff filed his application to the United States authorities for permission to build the proposed dam and ditch or pipe line. This application was still pending and undetermined at the time of the trial. It appears to be conceded by defendant's counsel that it was made in good faith, and that the survey was made and the application prosecuted with the reasonable diligence required by section 1422 of the Civil Code.

[3] Defendant attempts to support the judgment solely on the ground that one who has posted a notice of appropriation of water from a running stream, under the provisions of the Civil Code, sections 1410 to 1422, has no vested estate, right, or interest in the water, present or future, until he has actually diverted and used the water in pursuance of his notice, and that in the meantime he has no standing in court to ask for protection of the right to use the water, which he expects to have upon the completion of the work necessary for that purpose, against hostile claims or diversions which may ripen into a prescriptive right by continuous use, and no right to invoke the aid of the courts to determine and adjudge whether or not a hostile diversion is in fact prior or paramount to his own. In the case entitled Inyo Consolidated Water Company v. Jess et al. (L. A. No. 2,638) 119 Pac. 934, decided on December 11, 1911, we had occasion to consider this proposition; made there also on behalf of the city of Los Angeles. The briefs were substantially the same as those on file in the present case. It was there decided that such a claimant to the use of water has an incomplete, incipient, conditional right in the water, which is a vested interest in real property, and which may be adjudged to be such in an action to determine conflicting claims under section 738, Code of Civil Procedure.

[4] Upon the authority of that decision, we hold that the plaintiff showed sufficient interest to entitle him to a judgment of the court protecting that interest against all adverse claims which would be subordinate to plaintiff's right if he should comply with all the requirements of the statute and thereupon take the water and apply it to a useful purpose. Such judgment, of course should not declare the plaintiff absolutely entitled to the water, nor enjoin the defendant from taking or using it during the intervening time prior to the completion of plaintiff's works to a stage which will enable him to divert and use it. It should only declare and describe the plaintiff's contingent right to use the water and enjoin adverse claims or uses injurious thereto. If the plaintiff's right shall have terminated at or before the time of trial, the judgment should be for the defendant. If the defendant's right is paramount, but does not include all the waters of the stream, the judgment may so declare and fix the plaintiff's contingent right in the surplus at such time as there is an excess over defendant's use. We think the court below erred in refusing relief to the plaintiff.

The judgment and order are reversed.

TITLE INS. & TRUST CO. v. KING LAND & IMPROVEMENT CO. et al.

(L. A. 2,728.)

1. Judgment (§ 153*)—Default—Application for Relief—Time of Presentation—Proceeding Taken.

An application to set aside a default and a judgment thereon, made under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, authorizing the granting of relief on application made within six months, from a proceeding taken against the petitioner for relief, is made too late, where the application by the defaulting defendants, who were personally served with summons and personally appeared, is not made until after the expiration of six months from the time of the default, though within six months after entry of judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 153.*]

2. Judgment (§ 135*)—Default—"Proceeding Taken Against."

The taking and entering of a default is a "proceeding taken against" the party in default, within Code Civ. Proc. § 473, authorizing the court to relieve a party from proceedings taken against him on application therefor within a specified time.

Department 1. Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon F. Moss, Judge.

Action by the Title Insurance & Trust Company against the King Land & Improvement Company and others. From an order denying the motions of defendants Charles Kern and others to set aside a judgment and to relieve them from a default entered against them, they appeal. Affirmed.

E. E. Keech, for appellants. Stephens & Stephens, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The appeals here presented were taken from an order denying the several motions of the appealing defendants to set aside a judgment and to relieve them from a default entered against them. The action was upon a promissory note executed to the plaintiff by the King Land & Improvement Company, Charles Kern, W. J. King, G. W. Burleigh, A. C. Black, H. E. Smith, H. C. Cartmell, C. R. Ward, Robert McFadden, William L. Inness, and Albert Fuller, all of whom were made defendants. The appealing defendants are Black, Smith, Cartmell, Inness, Fuller, and Kern, each of whom had suffered a default to be taken and entered against him. The defaults of all except Kern were entered by the clerk on January 4, 1909. Kern joined in an answer with the other defendants, Ward, Burleigh, and McFadden; but at the beginning of the trial, to wit, on June 1, 1909, he withdrew therefrom, and thereupon his default was duly entered by the court. The judgment was rendered on March 3, 1910. The motion to have the defaults and the judgment set aside was made on May 16, 1910.

[1] It is apparent that the applications to set aside the defaults came too late. They were made under the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. All of the appellants were personally served with summons, and Kern personally appeared. In such cases, the court, under that section, is without power to grant such relief unless the application therefor is made within a time not exceeding six months after the proceeding from which relief is sought was taken. As to all except Kern, the default was entered more than 16 months before the application to vacate it was made. As to Kern, it was more than 11 months before the application.

[2] The proposition that the taking and entering of a default is not a "proceeding taken against" the party in default, within the meaning of section 473, that the judgment is the only effectual proceeding, and that its date fixes the beginning of the period of six months within which a motion to set aside the default may be made, is not tenable. A default is entered by the clerk or by the court, at the instance of the adverse party. It is clearly a proceeding against the delinquent party. Burns v. Superior Court, 140 Cal. 5, 73 Pac. 597; Stonesifer v. Kilburn, 94 Cal. 43, 29 Pac. 332; Lukes v. Logan, 66 Cal. 33, 4 Pac. 883. If it were not a proceeding, or order, the party could not obtain relief from it at all under that section. It is not a judgment, and the section authorizes relief only from a judgment, order, or proceeding. The argument is really self-destructive. If the default cannot be set aside, because it is not a proceeding or order, of what avail would it be to set aside the judgment? The default would stand undisturbed.

[3] A default cuts off the defendant from making any further opposition or objection to the relief which plaintiff's complaint shows he is entitled to demand. A defendant against whom a default is entered "is out of court and is not entitled to take any further steps in the cause affecting plaintiff's right of action." 6 Ency. of Pl. & Pr. 126. He cannot thereafter, nor until such default is set aside in a proper proceeding, file pleadings, or move for a new trial, or demand notice of subsequent proceedings. Id., 127. "A default confesses all the material facts in the complaint." Rowe v. Table M. W. Co., 10 Cal. 441. Consequently, if the judgment were vacated, it would be the duty of the court immediately to render another of like effect, and the defaulting defendants would not be heard for the purpose of interposing any denial or affirmative defense.

Under these circumstances, the court below was justified in refusing appellants any relief. We are not to be understood as intimating that on the merits there was a sufficient case of excusable neglect established.

The order is affirmed.

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REPETITION.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; E. P. McDaniel, Judge.

Hardie Lewis was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

A. L. Frick and Frank M. Carr, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, for the People.

LENNON, P. J. The defendant was tried upon an information charging him with the crime of murder, and was convicted of manslaughter. His appeal, which is from the judgment and an order denying a new trial, presents for determination the single point of the trial court's refusal to give a requested instruction upon the subject of self-defense, defendant claiming, in support of his plea of not guilty, that his acts were justified upon that ground.

The circumstances leading up to the crime need not be related. With reference to the immediate facts of the killing which have any bearing upon the point under consideration, it appears from the evidence that the defendant fired at least five shots, three of which found lodgment in the body of the deceased. Two of the latter shots inflicted only superficial wounds which in no wise contributed to the death of the deceased. One of the three shots penetrated and fractured the skull of the deceased, and was necessarily fatal. The shooting commenced in a Pullman car which was standing in the West Oakland yards of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, and, when it ceased, the deceased was lying on the ground at or near the end of the car. The defendant did not take the stand to give his version of the difficulty, and, as none of the witnesses testified exactly as to what occurred during the affray, it is difficult to say when and where, whether in the car or out of it, all of the several shots which took effect were fired. It is certain, however, that at least one shot was fired at the deceased while he was lying on the ground, but whether this last shot reached its mark is not made manifest by any direct evidence.

It is the contention of counsel for the defendant that, considering the nature of the wounds and the course of the bullets, the evidence fairly indicated that the two men must have been standing in an upright position and about on a level when the shot which caused the wound in the head was fired, and that the defendant must have been at an elevation above the deceased when the two shots which inflicted only superficial wounds were fired. From this assumption of fact it is inferred that the fatal wound in the head was inflicted by one of the shots fired in the car, that of the two remaining shots which reached the deceased the first was fired as he was fleeing or falling from the rear steps of the car, and the second while he was prostrate on the ground. This contention, and the inference deduced therefrom, formed the basis of a requested instruction which the court refused to give, and which in effect required a verdict of not guilty if the jury found as a fact, regardless of how many shots the defendant fired into the body of the deceased, that the first shot was fatal and fired in necessary self-defense.

Upon an examination of that portion of the record pertinent to the point presented, we are unwilling to concede that the evidence is fairly susceptible of the construction placed upon it by counsel for the defendant; but, even if it were conceded that the evidence shows all that counsel claims for it, the requested instruction was properly refused. Assuming that the instruction in question correctly stated the law, that it was free from the vice of being argumentative and in the nature of a special plea, which singled out and gave undue prominence to a particular phase of the case, it was in its ultimate analysis but a reiteration of that portion of the charge of the court wherein the jury were told, in substance, that in deciding to what extent a man may go in resisting an assault he may act upon the circumstances as they appear to him, and will not be held to the same strict accountability for an error in judgment or for the use of force disproportionate to the impending danger as one who is not required to act quickly.

No complaint is made that the charge of the court as a whole did not completely and correctly cover every phase of the case, including the law and the evidence applicable to the defendant's claim of self-defense; and therefore it cannot be said that the refusal of the trial court to give the particular requested instruction prejudiced the defendant or tended to his prejudice in respect to any of his substantial rights.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error (§ 1195*)—Former Appeal—Law of Case.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 408*)—RETROACTIVE STATUTES.

Act Feb. 27, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 36), making assessment bonds conclusive evidence of the regularity of all proceedings had prior to the making of the certified list of assessments, affected a right of property, and was not a mere rule of evidence, so that the amendment of 1899 (St. 1899, p. 40), making such bonds prima facie evidence only, did not apply to bonds, the validity of which was involved in an action begun before the amendment was enacted.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 339*)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—SPECIFICATIONS—CONDITIONS.

A provision in the specifications of street improvements that the contractor shall be responsible for all damage to water pipes, etc., under the street, and liable for damage to fences, trees, etc., was not objectionable, so as to vitiate bonds issued for special assessments.

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 167*)—BAR OF PERSONAL ACTION—EFFECT AS TO LIEN.

Civ. Code, § 2911, provides that a lien is extinguished by the lapse of the time within which an action can be brought under the principal obligation. Act Feb. 27, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 36), provides that assessments for street improvements shall be a first lien upon the property affected until the bonds issued for its payment and the accrued interest thereon shall be fully paid. Held that, as the only remedy for enforcing payment of assessment bonds is by public sale of the property, that remedy is not barred by failure of the city treasurer or the bondholder to bring a personal action against the property owner within the period of limitations applicable to such action.

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 169*)—IMPAIRMENT OF CONTRACT—STATUTES AFFECTING REMEDIES.

An amendment of Act Feb. 27, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 36), enacted in 1899 (St. 1899, p. 40), required notice of sale of property to satisfy a street assessment bond to be published for only two weeks, instead of three weeks, as provided by the original statute, and also provided that the cost of publication and 50 cents for a certificate of sale should be collected by the city treasurer. Held, that the amendment worked a mere change of remedy, and did not impair contractual obligations, so that it would apply to sales, made after it became effective, in street improvement proceedings terminated before its enactment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by H. P. Lantz, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of George Locke, against J. E. Fishburn and Walter M. Rheinschild, as special administrator of the estate of George Rheinschild, deceased. From the judgment and an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff and defendant Rheinschild appeal. Order denying new trial affirmed, and judgment reversed and remanded, with directions to enter judgment.

See, also, 91 Pac. 816.

Charles Lantz, for plaintiff. J. L. Murphey, for defendant Rheinschild.

JAMES, J. After decision heretofore rendered in this action by this court, a rehearing was granted. Upon a re-examination of the case, we are satisfied with the conclusions expressed in our former decision, except as to the matter discussed in the concluding paragraphs of the opinion filed, and we therefore adopt, as stating our present views, the major portion of that opinion, which is as follows:

"This action was brought to secure a decree quieting title to lots 7 and 9, in block 4, of the Brooklyn tract in the city of Los Angeles. The trial court by its judgment determined that the fee title was held by the estate of George Locke, subject to liens of defendant Rheinschild, acquired under street improvement proceedings. Plaintiff has appealed from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, and there is also an appeal taken by defendant Rheinschild from the judgment. The appeals of the two parties are presented on the same transcript.

"Under the proceedings for the improvement of Bridge street, assessments were levied against the two lots mentioned, the assessment on lot 9 being for the sum of $452.90, and that against lot 7 for the sum of $148.22. Under the proceedings for the improvement of Echandia street, an assessment for the amount of $105.43 was levied against lot 9. The ordinance of intention for the improvement of Bridge street was adopted on May 19, 1893, and that for the improvement of Echandia street was adopted March 15, 1893. In accordance with the provisions of the act, bonds Nos. 20 and 21 were issued on June 19, 1894, on account of the improvement of Bridge street, and bond No. 4 was issued on January 12, 1894, on account of the Echandia street assessment. The term of the bonds was for 10 years from their date, with annual payments required to be made as is provided for by the bond act. On May 26, 1900, defendant Rheinschild, then the owner of bonds Nos. 20 and 21, there not having been paid any part of the principal or interest installments which had theretofore matured, gave notice to the city treasurer of the city of Los Angeles that default had been made, and then elected to declare the whole sum of principal and interest of said bonds due, and directed the city treasurer to sell lots 7 and 9 to satisfy the amounts due upon said bonds. Notices of sale were published, and a sale was had thereafter, at which defendant Fishburn was the successful bidder, and to whom a certificate of sale was issued, followed by a deed upon the expiration of the period for redemption. Default had also been made in the payment of the installments due upon bond No. 4; but no notice thereof was given to the city treasurer until June, 1907. Defendant George Rheinschild performed the work of improvement upon the streets mentioned under a contract regularly awarded to him. The complaint in this action was filed on March 6, 1902. Defendants in their answer set up the various proceedings had for the improvement of Bridge and Echandia streets, and claimed title to the lots under and by virtue of the sale made as before mentioned, and the deeds issued thereunder. The first trial of the action in the superior court on the issues so made resulted in a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and the defendants appealed therefrom. The appeal was heard in this court and decided on May 29, 1906. See Lantz v. Fishburn, 3 Cal. App. 662 [91 Pac. 816]. It was there held that all of the bonds were regularly issued, but that the sale of the property made to satisfy payments delinquent thereon was void because of irregularity in the notices given, et cetera. The case was remanded for a new trial.

[1] "The questions, as to the validity of the bonds, and the validity of the sale made of the property, were fully considered, and the determination of this court, as thereon announced in that decision, became the law of the case. Klauber v. San Diego St. Car Co., 98 Cal. 105 [32 Pac. 876]. This, notwithstanding the fact that in the order made thereafter, denying the application for a rehearing, it was recited that the decision of the court rested upon the determination that the evidence was insufficient to justify the findings. The original opinion as filed was not modified, and for that reason we think it was controlling upon the court upon a retrial as to all other matters therein considered, and which were presented and properly involved upon the appeal.

[2] "Counsel for plaintiff suggests that the decision, wherein the validity of the bonds was treated of, and wherein it was held that any defects in the specifications could not be considered, in view of the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Chase v. Trout, 146 Cal. 350 [80 Pac. 81], should not be deemed conclusive of that question. In the decision in the case of Chase v. Trout, supra, it was held that the matter of the irregularity in the specifications could not be inquired into, because the act of 1893, under which the bonds were issued, contained a clause making the bonds upon their issuance conclusive evidence of the regularity of all proceedings had previous to the making of the certified list of assessments. In 1899 [St. 1899, p. 40] the street improvement act of 1893 was amended, and by the amendment the conclusive evidence clause was changed, so as to provide that the bonds should only be prima facie evidence of the regularity of the proceedings. Counsel now contends that the conclusive evidence clause prescribed a rule of evidence governing the trial of an action only; and that as the first trial of this cause was had after the adoption of the amendment referred to, he would not be foreclosed from raising the question as to the sufficiency of the specifications, according to which the improvement work on Echandia and Bridge streets was performed. Even though it be conceded that this point can now properly be considered, notwithstanding the former decision in this case, we do not think that the proposition advanced by counsel can be maintained. In the absence of limiting words in the statute expressing a contrary intention, the provision making the bonds conclusive evidence of the regularity of the proceedings up to a certain point is given a reasonable and fair construction by holding that it was the intention of the Legislature to affect a right of property, and not to establish a mere rule of evidence. Cook v. Cockins, 117 Cal. 140 [48 Pac. 1025].

[3] The clause in the specifications to which attention is directed, to wit, that 'the contractor shall be responsible for all damages to water pipes, gas pipes, sewers and other underground improvements of the street; he shall also be held liable for damages done to fences, trees, etc.,' does not embody such a condition as was considered objectionable in the case of Blochman v. Spreckels, 135 Cal. 662 [67 Pac. 1061, 57 L. R. A. 213], and Woollacott v. Meekin, 151 Cal. 701 [91 Pac. 612]. The property affected by the assessment proceedings was described as is required by the act of 1893, and that description was sufficiently definite and certain, and the ordinances of intention appear to have been properly published and posted.

"It was determined by the former decision in this case that the sales made of the lots, because of delinquency in payments of the installments and interest due on bonds Nos. 20 and 21, were invalid. It does appear that the proceedings were regular and valid up to and including the notice given by the holder of those bonds to the city treasurer, demanding that a sale be made of the property to satisfy the amounts due.

[4] "The money collected from the property owner is set apart in a special fund from which the bonds are paid, and the bonds on their face, following the form prescribed by the statute, provide that payment of amounts due thereunder shall be made exclusively from that fund. There is no authority given to the city treasurer or to the bondholder under the street bond act to bring any action to compel payment from the property owner of the amount of the assessment; the only method of enforcing payment provided for is that of subjecting the property to a public sale. Therefore no statute of limitations is made to run against the collection of the assessment by such means. This observation is made in view of the point urged by appellant Lantz that the liens of the bonds have been extinguished. In support of that contention, he cites section 2911, Civil Code, which provides as follows: 'A lien is extinguished by the lapse of the time within which, under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, an action can be brought upon the principal obligation.' By express provision of the bond act (Stats. 1893, p. 36), the amounts of the assessments are made 'a first lien upon the property affected thereby, until the bond issued for the payment thereof, and the accrued interest thereon, shall be fully paid.' The power conferred upon the city treasurer to enforce payment in the same manner as a tax collector is authorized to enforce collection of delinquent tax assessments does not, as before noted, include any right to bring a personal action against the property owner. A tax collector has no such authority, although by the statutes of 1880, page 136, such a right is specially given to a city, county, or city and county. Section 2911, Civil Code, is therefore not applicable here, and it follows that the liens of the assessments against the property of plaintiff's testator have not been extinguished by limitation of time."

[5] In the concluding portion of the opinion from which we have quoted, it was noted that, after this action had been decided upon, the former appeal, as hereinbefore referred to, defendant Rheinschild, as the owner of the three bonds, had again given notice to the city treasurer, requiring that the property holden as security for the payment thereof be sold; this notice covering bond No. 4, which had not been included in the first notice of sale. Further, that the city treasurer had again proceeded with the sale of the property, but that the notice of sale was published for only two weeks, instead of three weeks, as required by the provisions of section 3766 of the Political Code; also that charges claimed against the property, and for which it was sold, included an item of $10 costs, for the collection of which no authority seemed to be given. Our conclusion was that the second sale was invalid, and that a new trial should be had, for the reason that the evidence was insufficient in that view to sustain the judgment. For the first time upon petition for rehearing, it was called to our attention that by the statute of 1899 the street bond act of 1893 was so amended as to require notice of sale to be published for two weeks only, and also providing that the cost of such publication, and 50 cents for a certificate of sale, should be collected by the city treasurer. The amendatory act became effective before the sales were had, but after the proceedings for the improvement of the streets described had all been concluded. If the effect of the amendatory act was to work a change only in the manner by which a remedy was provided to be pursued, then the city treasurer was justified in giving only such notice, and in making such charges by way of costs, as the amendatory act provided should be given and made. On the other hand, if, by applying the amendatory provision to proceedings instituted prior to the adoption thereof, a right of property would be affected, and in consequence contract rights interfered with, then the amendatory act should be held inapplicable to the street improvement proceedings considered in this case. We are of the opinion that the amendment worked a mere change of remedy, and did not affect or impair contract obligations. As was said in the case of Mill & Lumber Co. v. Olmstead, 85 Cal. 84, 24 Pac. 649: "The authorities are numerous to the effect that a change of remedy, or in the time within which it must be sought, does not impair the obligation of a contract, provided an adequate and available remedy be left. Thus it has been held that an enactment reducing the time prescribed by the statute of limitations in force when the right of action accrued is not unconstitutional, provided a reasonable time be given for the commencement of an action before the bar takes effect. Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 628 [24 L. Ed. 365]. In that case the court, by Waite, C. J., said: 'The parties to a contract have no more a vested interest in a particular limitation which has been fixed than they have in an unrestricted right to sue. They have no more a vested interest in the time for the commencement of an action than they have in the form of the action to be commenced; and, as to the forms of action or modes of remedy, it is well settled that the Legislature may change them at its discretion, provided adequate means of enforcing the right remain.' "

As to the matter of costs, the street act, as amended, provides for the collection of the cost of publication of notice of sale, which was not theretofore included in the charges to be made against the delinquent property. We believe that this provision also may be classed as one affecting remedy only. It may be likened to a case where, after judgment and execution issued in an ordinary action, but before execution sale, the Legislature had changed the amount of fees to be collected by the officer making execution sale. It could scarcely be contended, in the event that by such change the fees were increased in amount over those which such officer would have been entitled to charge at the time judgment was rendered or execution issued, that some vested right of property was disturbed, and that the increased charges could not be collected.

[6] We conclude that the last sales made by the treasurer were legal and valid, and had the effect of vesting in Rheinschild, as purchaser, title to the property. Therefore, at the time the issues were made up in the action upon which the trial court based its judgment, there was no title left in the plaintiff, and no right, except the right to redeem within the time fixed by the street act. The title of such a purchaser, pending the issuance of a deed, is only qualified by this right of redemption, and unless such latter right is exercised within the limit fixed by the law, such title becomes absolute. Duff v. Randall, 116 Cal. 226, 48 Pac. 66, 58 Am. St. Rep. 158. The trial court properly held that the proceedings had, with respect to all matters conferring jurisdiction upon the treasurer to make the second sales, were regular and valid. Upon these findings, the judgment should have been that defendant Rheinschild held title to the lots in question, subject only to the right of plaintiff to redeem within the time allowed by law.

The order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial is affirmed. The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment upon the findings in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

RASSAERT et al. v. MENSCH. (Civ. 834.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 12, 1911.)

1. Partnership (§ 344*)—Accounting and Settlement—Disposition of Assets.

Though generally a judgment cannot be entered against a partner in a suit for an accounting and settlement of the firm until the firm assets have been disposed of and a final balance ascertained, yet where the assets are of but little value which is ascertained, the court may award the assets to a partner, if he is willing, and charge the assets as cash, where, in the settlement, he is entitled to judgment against the copartners.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 813–818; Dec. Dig. § 344.*]

2. Partnership (§ 344*)—Firm Debts—Liabilities of Partners.

The partners of a firm are each individually liable for the whole of firm debts after the firm assets are exhausted, and a decree in a suit between the partners that one partner shall pay firm debts is not binding on the firm creditors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 813–818; Dec. Dig. § 344.*]

3. Partnership (§ 344*)—Dissolution—Accounting—Payment of Firm Debts.

A court of equity may not decree a dissolution of the firm and an accounting until the liabilities of the firm are adjusted to the satisfaction of the creditors, and the fact that the firm debts are small, only amounting to $104.50, does not permit the court to dissolve the firm and render an accounting and adjudge that a partner shall pay the firm debts, the amount of such debts not being within the maxim "de minimis non curat lex."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 813–818; Dec. Dig. § 344.*]

4. Appeal and Error (§ 1032*)—Questions Reviewable—Rulings on Evidence.

A party complaining of the sustaining of objections to questions asked witnesses must show that he was prejudiced by the ruling by showing that the matter sought to be brought out would have aided him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4047–4051; Dec. Dig. § 1032.*]

5. Partnership (§ 330*)—Dissolution—Liabilities of Partner to Copartner for Breach of Obligations—Recovery of Damages.

An order dissolving a firm, pending a further hearing, in a suit for an accounting and for a dissolution, does not preclude proof of damages to plaintiff arising from defendant's breach of the firm agreement and breach of duty in winding up the firm affairs, and plaintiff may show that defendant used some of the material of the firm in his private business which he charged to the firm, and that he recklessly conducted the firm business in a way to involve loss.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 787; Dec. Dig. § 330.*]

6. Partnership (§ 278*)—Dissolution—Effect.

A mere dissolution of a firm has no effect on the property of the partners or their interest in the firm property, or their power over existing debts due to them or due from them, except they have lost the power of acting for each other any further than joint debtors or joint creditors may do.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 625; Dec. Dig. § 278.*]

7. Partnership (§ 298*)—Obligation of Partners—Special Agreements.

Where there was no special agreement defining the powers of the partners after dissolution, each partner had a right to require, and, through equity, to compel, a final settlement and adjustment of all questions and property, and each had the same power as to this and all details connected with it as any other.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 680–686; Dec. Dig. § 298.*]

8. Partnership (§ 280*)—Liquidation—Obligation of Partners.

A partner charged with the duty of liquidating the business of the firm after the partners had ceased to act as such, pursuant to an agreement, must so act as to conserve the interests of the partners, and a copartner could visit the place of business and learn of the manner in which the business was being wound up.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 631, 632; Dec. Dig. § 280.*]

9. Partnership (§ 327*)—Dissolution—Breach by Partner of Partnership Agreement—Damages—Pleadings.

A complaint, in a suit by a partner for the dissolution of the firm and for an accounting, which alleged that defendant had breached the firm agreement in that he had failed to furnish the money necessary to carry on the firm business, and that his conduct in the management of the business, departments of which were intrusted to different partners, caused dissensions and interfered with the orderly management of the business, resulting in damages in a specified sum, sufficiently alleged a cause of action for damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 769–778; Dec. Dig. § 327.*]

10. EVIDENCE (§ 474½*) — BREACH OF PARTNER'S AGREEMENT—DAMAGES.

Where, in a suit for the dissolution of a firm and for an accounting, plaintiff demanded damages for defendant's breach of agreement and duty in the management of the firm business, the opinion of witnesses as to whether a certain line of policy would not have been profitable if pursued was inadmissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2220–2233; Dec. Dig. § 474½.*]

11. EVIDENCE (§ 441*) — PAROL EVIDENCE — VARYING TERMS OF WRITTEN AGREEMENT.

Where a partnership agreement reduced to writing set forth minutely what was to be done by the partners, the duties of each, and the general scope of the venture, parol evidence of prior conversations was inadmissible, since the written instrument must be presumed to contain the entire agreement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2030–2047; Dec. Dig. § 441.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Oscar Rassaert and another against L. J. Mensch. From the judgment, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Francis Dunn, for appellants. Louis H. Brownstone, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. In plaintiffs' amended complaint they pray that the partnership existing between plaintiffs and defendant be dissolved, for an accounting, and "for such other further and separate relief as may be meet in the premises." The original complaint was filed November 23, 1907, and prayed, among other things, that defendant be restrained from interfering with the partnership property. In their amended complaint plaintiffs allege that plaintiffs and defendant entered into a written agreement of copartnership on September 17, 1907, under the name of the Concrete Products Company, and that said partnership "is engaged in the business of manufacture and selling various products of concrete"; that "defendant has failed to perform his duties under said agreement, and in many respects has violated the terms of said agreement." Defendant's shortcomings are thus specified: "Said defendant agreed to furnish the money necessary to carry on said business, but he has neglected and refused to do so; by said agreement plaintiff above named, Oscar Rassaert, was made superintendent of construction, and was given superintendence of all the construction work of said partnership; said defendant has interfered with said plaintiff in said work in many ways, countermanding orders given to the employés of said partnership by said plaintiff without the knowledge or consent of said plaintiff, and has himself assigned employés to construction work without the knowledge or consent of said plaintiff, and has taken said employés from work of said partnership and assigned them to his own individual work; that said conduct of said defendant has led to frequent quarrels and dissensions among the members of said partnership, and has interfered with the orderly management of the business of said partnership; that by the premises said partnership has been damaged in the sum of three thousand dollars."

Averring the ownership of "certain property located in the city and county of San Francisco and the county of Alameda," the amended complaint closes with the prayer. Defendant answered the amended complaint without demurring thereto.

A referee was appointed who had the parties before him. From his report, which is in the record, and from the evidence submitted at the trial, the court found that, by stipulation made in open court, it had made an order dissolving the partnership and ordering an accounting; that defendant has not violated the terms of the partnership agreement in any respect; but has in all respects complied therewith; that he has not failed or refused to furnish the necessary money to carry on the business nor has he done any of the acts complained of in plaintiffs' complaint as specified therein; that on November 18, 1908 (the evidence shows that 1908 should read 1907), a dispute arose between the parties, and as a result thereof "the said plaintiffs and defendant agreed between themselves to separate, and thereafter the said plaintiffs abandoned the business, and said defendant liquidated the said business."

In the matter of the accounting the court found: That defendant advanced in the business $3,872; that plaintiffs advanced no money; that the money received by the defendant in the business was $1,800; that the value of the partnership assets remaining undisposed of was $143.50; that defendant is entitled to have said assets set over to him; that the amount paid by defendant on account of said partnership in excess of the amount received by him is $1,828.70, which the court finds is the loss sustained by the partnership and is to be borne equally by the partners. The court, therefore, found that defendant is entitled to judgment against each of plaintiffs for one-third of this amount—$609.56. Judgment passed accordingly, from which and from the order denying their motion for a new trial plaintiffs appeal.

In his oral decision (which appears in the record) the trial judge states that he arrived at his figures as follows: After deducting the charge made by defendant for rent the expenditures were $3,767.70, to which the court adds $104.50, being the outstanding indebtedness which is charged to defendant and to be paid by him, making $3,872.20. The receipts from work done were $1,800, to which the court adds $143.50, the value of the remaining assets, making $1,943.50. This amount, deducted from the expenses, leaves $1,928.70. The findings state this latter sum to be $1,828.70, or $100 less than as shown by the oral decision—manifestly an error in subtraction.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The first point made is that the decision is against law because there remained liabilities unpaid and assets not reduced to cash.

There was evidence as to the value of the assets, which consisted of some forms, or molds, and equipment. Plaintiffs offered no evidence in rebuttal of this value, the amount being $143.50. No evidence was offered to show that the value was not fairly ascertained or that any greater amount could have been realized by ordering a sale which would necessarily have involved some expense.

[1] The rule, generally stated, is that a judgment cannot be entered against a partner in a suit for an accounting and settlement of the partnership until all the assets of the copartnership have been disposed of and a final balance ascertained. Clark v. Hewitt, 136 Cal. 77, 68 Pac. 303. Where, however, the assets are of but little value, and that value is ascertained and is not called in question, we can see no objection to awarding these assets to one of the partners, if he is willing, and charge him with them as cash, where, in the settlement, under any view of the case, he would be entitled to judgment against the other partners.

[2, 3] The matter of the liabilities presents a question of greater difficulty. The adjustment made might be said, in one view, to protect plaintiffs, as between them and defendant, to the extent of two-thirds of the indebtedness, but they are individually liable for the whole of it after the assets are exhausted. Defendant may not pay the liabilities and the creditors might look to plaintiffs for payment and subject them to an action for enforcement. The creditors are not bound by the decree in this action. The judgment would leave the partnership business unsettled and the liabilities unpaid. Before there can be a decree finally settling the partnership accounts the liabilities must be paid or adjusted to the satisfaction of the creditors. No dissolution of any kind affects the rights of third parties, who have had dealings with the partnership, without their consent. Parsons on Partnership, §§ 296, 297. When equity undertakes to adjust the differences between partners, it adjusts them all; the account and decree must include all these matters, and leave nothing open for future litigation or controversy. Griggs v. Clark, 23 Cal. 427. The fact that the amount is not large does not affect the principle. It certainly is not so small as to come within the maxim "de minimis non curat lex."

There was evidence from which the court was justified in finding that the partners had practically dissolved the partnership about the 18th day of November, 1907, and that after that date—either the 18th or 20th of November—the defendant was engaged exclusively in liquidating or winding up the business. Plaintiffs filed their original complaint for a dissolution and accounting on November 23, 1907; and there was evidence that they took no part in the management of the partnership business thereafter.

Plaintiffs endeavored, in many ways and by various forms of questions, to prove damage to the partnership, resulting from the conduct of defendant in the particulars set forth in their amended complaint, and otherwise. The court sustained objections to practically all these questions and such offers, and these rulings are alleged as error.

The partnership contract provided that defendant Mensch should "have charge of the office end of the business" and that plaintiff Rassaert should "have charge of the manufacturing end of the business, while Mr. McCarthy shall have charge of negotiation and acquisition of business, provided, that the system followed by each party in the conduct of his part of the firm's affairs shall be such as will enable the other parties at all times to ascertain and understand their details, and further provided that each and every party shall not do any act or pursue any course in the conduct of his part in the firm's affairs which appear to the other parties to be impolitic, imprudent or unsafe as a business proposition." It was also agreed that defendant "Mensch is to furnish the money necessary to run the business as long as the other parties are not able to realize or borrow money on whatever property they may possess or as long as they are unable to make their earnings in the business offset the money invested by Mr. Mensch." There are many other provisions in the contract showing that it was the intention of the parties to subdivide the work but that no one partner should have the right to act independently of the others in managing the business.

Appellants thus classify the questions which were objected to and objection sustained: (1) Questions relating to the matter of alleged damage caused the partnership by defendant's breach of the contract. (2) Questions relating to the exclusion of plaintiffs from participating in the winding up of the partnership affairs. (3) Questions relating to the weight of defendant's testimony and the matter of laying a foundation for rebutting it.

[4] We cannot take up these questions in detail; they are numerous and in some instances counsel for plaintiffs stated at some length what they were prepared to prove if permitted. Some of the questions were objectionable in their form and others were proper, but were not followed up in a way to show prejudice by the ruling; i. e., it did not appear that the matter sought to be brought out would have aided plaintiffs.

But there is enough in the record to show that plaintiffs were not permitted to go into matters which were relevant and material under the issues presented by the pleadings. At a point when plaintiffs endeavored to show that defendant had not supplied money for the business as he had agreed to do, and after plaintiffs had offered to show other alleged breaches of duty, objection was sustained, and the court said: "I know perfectly well why you ask it, and in a moment more you will see why I have ruled this way. You have some things here that would be pertinent to dissolution, and some of them would be impertinent to dissolution. In so far as they are pertinent to dissolution, you have obtained your remedy in that behalf, that they have become functus officio—we are no longer concerned with them at all. Then you have got some other things here, and you wind up with a prayer for damages in the sum of $3,000. Mr. Brownstone: That is the original complaint your honor is reading from. The Court: No; I have the amended complaint, and it winds up with asking for damages in the sum of $3,000. Now, Mr. Dunn, the complaint does not state any cause of action for damages. If you have any idea that you have been damaged in any respect, there has been no cause of action for damages pleaded here. Mr. Dunn (after citing 109th California, 130): We claim that this decision decides that it would be perfectly pertinent in this action to give the partnership a judgment against the defendant for any damages by reason of misconduct on his part caused to the partnership. The Court: Under an appropriate pleading, unquestionably so."

It appears that, on October 19, 1908, the cause came on for trial, and on that day defendant consented to the entering of an order dissolving the partnership and appointing "a referee to take the account," and thereafter, on November 30, 1908, the "cause came on regularly for trial" and was tried. The court consistently, throughout the subsequent efforts of plaintiffs to sustain their claim of damages, ruled against them.

[5] We do not think that the order dissolving the partnership pending the further hearing precluded proof of damages arising from defendant's alleged breach of the partnership agreement. Nor do we think it precluded evidence of defendant's breach of duty while winding up its partnership affairs. If it could be shown that, during the continuance of the partnership, he had interfered with his partners in the discharge of their separate duties in a way to result in damage to the partnership or refused to supply money for the business and the circumstances were such as to import a breach of duty on his part and the resulting damages were proximately chargeable to his misconduct and could be estimated in terms of money, we see no reason why such evidence was not admissible.

[6] The dissolution of the partnership was a distinct issue apart from the issue of damages and did not affect the rights of the parties in the matter of the accounting. "A mere dissolution has no effect whatever on the property of the partners, or their interest in the joint stock or joint rights, or their power over old existing debts due to them or due from them; excepting always that they all entirely lost the power of acting for each other, any further than all joint debtors or joint creditors may do."

[7] And where, as here, there was no special agreement as to the powers of the partners after dissolution, "each one has a perfect right to require, and through equity to compel, a final settlement and adjustment of all questions and all property; and each one has the same power as to this, and all the details connected with it, as any other." Parsons on Partnership, § 286.

[8] We think that defendant was charged with the duty of liquidating the business (if it be true that he was liquidating the business after the partners had apparently agreed to disagree and ceased to act as partners) in a manner to conserve the interests of all the partners, and plaintiffs had the right to visit the works and to know something of the manner in which the business was being wound up. If defendant used some of the material of the partnership in his own private business, which he charged to the partnership, it was competent to show this; if he recklessly or improvidently conducted the business at this stage in a way to involve loss which by ordinarily prudent management might have been avoided, it was competent to so show; if, during the partnership, defendant neglected his duties and devoted his time to his private business, to an extent not authorized by their agreement, to the detriment of the partnership business, this could be shown.

[9] The case of Bremner v. Leavitt, 109 Cal. 130, 41 Pac. 859, is authority for holding that the trial court was in error in its ruling that no cause of action for damages was pleaded. We cannot undertake to point out the specific questions and rulings of which complaint is made. It may be that some of the alleged resulting damages claimed are too remote—indeed, we think they are.

[10] In some instances the opinion of the witness was asked as to whether a certain line of policy would not have been profitable if pursued. Such an opinion alone would have been immaterial and so of other mere opinions sought to be shown.

[11] A line of questions was objected to and sustained in which plaintiffs sought to show what the parties talked about and agreed to do before they had entered into the written agreement.

The agreement is quite an elaborate document, consisting of 20 separate paragraphs setting forth minutely what was undertaken to be done by the parties, the duties of each, and the general scope and purposes of the venture. It was not competent for plaintiffs to show by previous conferences something in addition to or in variance of this written instrument, which latter must be presumed to contain all matters that were agreed upon.

Upon a careful review of the record we are impressed with the belief that plaintiffs' rights were not adequately conserved, and, for the reasons stated, the judgment and order are reversed.

O'DONNELL et al. v. MURPHY et al.

(Civ. 1,034.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 12, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 9, 1912.)

1. Trusts (§ 35*)—Secret Testamentary Trusts—Establishment and Enforcement—Jurisdiction.

A court of equity may impose and enforce a trust on a legatee who has procured a legacy by a promise, express or implied, to take and hold the same for a particular person or use.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 45–50; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

2. Wills (§ 688*)—Secret Testamentary Trusts—Invalidity.

Where a secret testamentary trust is for a purpose prohibited by law, and no other disposition is made of the legacy, equity will adjudge that the legacy shall belong to the heirs at law; but, before this may be done, the evidence must establish that the legacy was given on a promise, express or implied, that it would be taken and used for the particular trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 688.*]

3. Wills (§ 672*)—Testamentary Trusts—Secret Trusts.

A testamentary gift to a legatee solely to enable him, if he sees fit, to dispose of it in a particular way, does not create a trust, where there is no promise by him, express or implied, to so dispose of it, and he may apply the gift to his own use.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1579–1581; Dec. Dig. § 672.*]

4. Wills (§ 675*)—Testamentary Trusts—Secret Trusts.

Where a will shows that a secret trust was not intended, but shows that testator expected that the gift would be applied in accordance with his known wishes, the legatee, who has made no promise, and none has been made in his behalf, takes an absolute title, and no legal obligation rests on him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1587–1589; Dec. Dig. § 675.*]

5. Wills (§ 671*)—Testamentary Trusts—Secret Trusts.

Testatrix declared that she had abandoned her idea of providing for the erection of a memorial gate at the entrance of a public park of a city because of a doubt as to the validity of a gift for that purpose, and then gave to two persons, who were park commissioners of the city, a specified sum, and stated, "This is an absolute bequest to them, without any trust or understanding, either express or implied, as to its use or appropriation or otherwise." The executor knew nothing of the will until after its execution, and he made no promise as to the use of the gift for the erection of a memorial gate. One of the commissioners knew nothing of the will until after the death of testatrix, and the other commissioner, who knew of the will at the time of its execution, made no promise, express or implied, as to the use of the gift. After the death of testatrix and the probate of the will, the commissioners executed a declaration of trust to secure the gift for the erection of such a gate as testatrix had wished to be erected. Held not to show that a secret trust was imposed on the gift.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 671.*]

6. Wills (§ 487*)—Construction—Declaration of Testator.

A declaration of intention of testator made subsequent to the execution of his will is inadmissible as hearsay for any purpose.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by James O'Donnell and others against Samuel G. Murphy, as executor of Honora Sharp, deceased, and others. From an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 10 Cal. App. 1, 100 Pac. 1071.

Maguire, Lindsay, Houx & Barrett, for appellants. Charles S. Wheeler and A. Heyneman (J. F. Bowie, of counsel), for respondents.

HALL, J. This is an appeal by plaintiffs from an order denying their motion for a new trial. This action was brought, by the next of kin and heirs at law of Honora Sharp, deceased, for the purpose of obtaining a decree of the superior court that certain bequests made by said Honora Sharp, deceased, in her last will and testament, are held by respondents in trust for appellants. The action as brought involved a bequest of $200,000 to Adolph B. Spreckels and Reuben H. Lloyd, a bequest of $25,000 to the Kings Daughters' Home for Incurables, and one of $25,000 to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals; but the action was dismissed as to the two latter named legatees, and the action as tried involved only the bequest of $200,000 given to Spreckels and Lloyd.

By the first paragraph of the will of Honora Sharp, she appointed Samuel G. Murphy sole executor thereof.

The second paragraph is as follows: "I have no near relatives nor any to whom I desire to give any part of my estate; my late husband, George F. Sharp, now deceased, having derived profit from the dedication and opening of Golden Gate Park in said city and county, and I, during my later years, having obtained much enjoyment out of said park, it was my desire to erect some suitable memorial to my said late husband in said park; for that purpose I intended to donate a large portion of my fortune (all of which was inherited by me from my late husband), towards erecting a memorial gate at the entrance to what is known as the Panhandle of the park; but there being some doubt as to whether or not a donation for that purpose would or would not be considered a charity, or unlawful trust, and be set aside at the instigation of some one claiming heirship to me, to whom I had left nothing and to whom I desire to leave nothing; I have therefore abandoned that idea; and do now devise and bequeath to Adolph B. Spreckels and R. H. Lloyd, two of the park commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco, the sum of two hundred thousand dollars ($200,000). This is an absolute bequest to them, without any trust or understanding, either express or implied, as to its use or appropriation or otherwise."

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

By the third and fourth paragraphs of her will she gave to the Kings Daughters' Home $50,000, and to the Salvation Army $25,000. The bequest to the Kings Daughters' Home was subsequently in a codicil cut to $25,000.

By the fifth and sixth paragraphs she gave to certain named persons a total of $30,000.

By the seventh paragraph she directed the executor to pay all inheritance taxes.

The eighth and ninth paragraphs are as follows:

"Eighth. In case any bequest or devise in this will hereinbefore specified shall fail, or be declared inoperative or void for any cause, then the amount of such devise or bequest shall go to and be a part of my residuary estate; and shall go to and be the property of my residuary legatee hereinafter named.

"Ninth. All the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, be it real, personal or mixed, and wheresoever situate, and all illegal or inoperative bequests or devises, I give, devise and bequeath to my said executor, Samuel G. Murphy."

By the terms of her will exclusive of the eighth and ninth paragraphs, said Honora Sharp disposed of a total of $280,000, which exceeded the net value of her estate. Therefore, if it should prove to be a fact that the bequest of $200,000 was given in trust for a charitable use, it would in great part be void by reason of the statute providing that a testator may devise or bequeath not more than one-third in value of his estate to charitable uses. Civ. Code, 1313.

It is manifest from the reading of the will that before the appellants as the heirs at law, can have any interest or claim upon the $200,000, it must be established not only that the $200,000 was given in the second paragraph upon an invalid secret trust, but that the same trust followed the said $200,000 in case it should fall into the residuum of the estate, and pass under paragraphs eight and nine of the will to Samuel G. Murphy. Consequently it was alleged in the complaint, in substance and effect, that said $200,000 was given by said Honora Sharp in said will in trust and upon the promise of said Lloyd, Spreckels, and Murphy, and each of them, made to her by them and each of them, to apply and use the said bequest, when received by them or any of them, from her estate, towards the erection of a gate at the entrance to the Panhandle of Golden Gate Park. The defendants, Spreckels, Lloyd, and Murphy, denied these allegations, and set forth that said $200,000 was bequeathed as in said will set forth and not otherwise, and the court found upon these issues in favor of respondents, and entered judgment that appellants take nothing by their action. It is upon the alleged insufficiency of the evidence to support these findings that appellants rely for a reversal of the order.

[1] That a court of equity may impose and enforce a trust upon a legatee who has procured a legacy to be given to him by a promise, express or implied, to take and hold the same for some particular person or use, is not disputed. Edson v. Barstow, 154 N. Y. 218, 48 N. E. 541; O'Hara v. Dudley, 95 N. Y. 403, 47 Am. Rep. 53; Amherst College v. Ritch, 151 N. Y. 283, 323, 45 N. E. 876, 37 L. R. A. 305.

[2] Where the secret trust is for a purpose prohibited by law, and no other disposition is made of the legacy, the legatee will be held by a court of equity to hold the legacy for the heirs at law. See cases above cited. But before this may be done the evidence must establish that the legacy was given upon a promise, express or implied, that it would be taken and used for the particular trust.

[3, 4] "While a testator may make a gift to a legatee solely for the purpose of enabling him, if he sees fit, to dispose of it in a particular way, still, if there is no promise by him, express or implied, to so dispose of it, and the matter is left wholly to his will and discretion, no secret trust is created, and he may, if he chooses, apply the legacy to his own use. When it clearly appears that no secret trust was intended, even if it is equally clear that the testator expected that the gift would be applied in accordance with his known wishes, the legatee, if he has made no promise, and none has been made in his behalf, takes an absolute title, and can do what he pleases with the gift. Whatever moral obligation there may be, no legal obligation rests upon him." Amherst College v. Ritch, supra. See, also, Rowbotham v. Dunnett, 8 L. R. Ch. Div. 430; McCormick v. Grogan, 4 L. R. Eng. & Iri. App. 82.

[5] This brings us to a discussion of the evidence. As before indicated, unless the finding as to Mr. Murphy is not sustained, appellants have no claim upon any part of the $200,000. So far as Mr. Murphy is concerned, we are unable to find anything in the evidence to support the contention that any promise was made by him or for him, either express or implied. He knew nothing about the will or its contents until after it had been executed. It was then brought to him by Mr. Lloyd, at the direction of Mrs. Sharp, when he read it and placed it in his safe. It did not on its face indicate that any trust was intended by the legacy of $200,000 to Spreckels and Lloyd or by the residuary bequest to him. Though the will on its face indicated that Mrs. Sharp at one time did intend to give by her will a large sum for the erection of a memorial gate at the park, it showed that she had fears that such a bequest might be held invalid, to the advantage of her heirs at law, to whom she desired to leave nothing, and contained her solemn declaration to the effect that for that reason she had abandoned the idea once entertained. After bequeathing to Spreckels and Lloyd $200,000 the testatrix is careful to state in her will that "this is an absolute bequest to them, without any trust or understanding, either express or implied, as to its use or appropriation or otherwise."

Mr. Murphy, during the short period that Mrs. Sharp survived the making of the will, visited her several times. On the occasion of one of these visits, Mrs. Sharp told him that she wanted him to see that her will was carried out, and this he promised to do. But there is not a suggestion in the evidence that either he or she in any way spoke of any gate for the park, or of any purposes she had as to the disposition of her estate other than as shown upon the face of her will. He did tell her the story of the boy eating an apple, who, being asked by a companion for the core, replied, "There isn't going to be any core"; but it would be a strained construction to say that this contained a promise to apply any money that might come to him to the erection of any gate. The story was probably told as indicating his opinion that, in view of the amount of her bequests and the value of the estate, there would be no residuum to come to him—no "core" for him.

We have not overlooked the fact that Mr. Murphy, after the will had been admitted to probate, executed an instrument designed to further and assist in the purpose of Spreckels and Lloyd, as evidenced by a declaration of trust executed by them, to apply whatever should be realized from the bequest of $200,000 to the erection at the park of a memorial gate. While this indicates public spirit on the part of the gentlemen concerned, and shows that the hope that Mrs. Sharp doubtless entertained, as to what disposition her legatees might make of her bounty, was not without foundation, it does not in itself prove that this action was taken by the legatees because of any promise so to do. Mr. Murphy, so far as the record shows, made no promise regarding the $200,000 legacy or any other, and no promise was made for him in that regard.

It is thus clear that the findings of the court, so far as they relate to Mr. Murphy, are supported by the evidence. Indeed, we are of the opinion that a contrary finding could not be justified by the evidence.

This conclusion is sufficient for a disposition of the contention that the findings are not supported by the evidence, for, as before stated, the appellants have no interest in the disposition of the $200,000 or any part of the estate of Mrs. Sharp, unless they can charge Mr. Murphy as a trustee for them, and this they have failed to do.

We have, however, examined the record with care as to the findings with regard to respondents Spreckels and Lloyd, and are unable to agree with the contention of appellants. Mr. Lloyd, on the day before the will was drawn, visited Mrs. Sharp at her request, and found her confined to her bed with the sickness of which she within two months thereafter died. She explained to him, as her attorney, her wishes as to the disposition of her estate, and among other things told him that she wished to leave $200,000 (which would constitute the major portion of her estate) for the purpose of erecting a gate at the park as a memorial to her deceased husband. In view of the amount of the intended bequest and her estate, he suggested doubts as to its validity, but told her that he would consult his partner and advise her further the next day. He returned the next day and told her that such a bequest would be invalid, and gave the reasons therefor. She then suggested that the bequest be made to himself and Mr. Spreckels as park commissioners. He told her that they would take as public officers and in trust, and the bequest would still be void. She then asked him if she could not give the money to Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Spreckels individually, and he then proceeded to explain to her that she could as follows: "I said: 'You can give it to anybody individually, providing you can't put any strings on it, but you can't give it to anybody with a secret trust in it, express, implied, or understood in any way. If you want to give it absolutely to any one, you can do so. You can give your property to anybody you please—do as you like, but you can't make a trust of it. If you do, that will be investigated, and, if it turns out that it is a trust, of course it has to take the result.' 'Well,' she said, 'I want to give it to you absolutely, without any strings on it.' I said, 'You can do that if you wish.' 'Well,' she said, 'that is what I wish to do. Do with it as you please; put it in your pocket, or do anything you like with it.' I said, 'You can do that if you wish, Mrs. Sharp.' She said, 'Well, that is what I wish to do.'" The will was thereupon drawn with the provisions as hereinbefore set forth, and containing her explicit declaration that she had abandoned the idea of providing for the erection of the memorial gate, with her very cogent reasons therefor. In addition, Mr. Lloyd answered categorically that he, neither for himself, Mr. Spreckels, or Mr. Murphy, made any promise, express or implied, with relation to the use of the legacy in question.

We think it hardly needs argument to demonstrate that the above evidence amply supports the findings of the court in question. There is no pretense that Mr. Spreckels ever knew anything about the will or its contents, or the purposes of Mrs. Sharp, until after her death. While it is true that Mrs. Sharp knew that each of these gentlemen was a park commissioner, and had for years taken great pride and interest in its development; that they were men of ample private fortune; that she had great confidence in them as men of integrity and public spirit—these matters but justified her hope and expectation that the legacy would be applied in accordance with her known wishes. Their prompt action, after her death and the probate of her will, in executing a declaration of trust as to the legacy for the purpose of securing its application to the erection of such a gate as she had wished to be erected, shows that her confidence was not misplaced, but does not necessarily show that the bequest was made upon any promise, express or implied.

The whole evidence and circumstances simply bring the case within the rule stated near the beginning of this opinion in the excerpt from the case of Amherst College v. Ritch, supra. The most that can be reasonably claimed for the evidence is that it possibly exhibits a case in which either of two opposite conclusions might be drawn by the trial court, in which case we are bound by the conclusions of the trial court. Edson v. Barstow, supra.

The findings of the trial court are amply supported by the evidence in the record.

[6] The only other point presented as a reason why a new trial should be granted is that the court erred in refusing to permit appellants, over the objection of respondents, to prove a declaration claimed to have been made by Mrs. Sharp to one McManus, after the execution of the will, that she had made her will and had done handsomely by the park. We have been cited to no authority that holds that the intention of a testator may be proved by evidence of her declarations to third parties, made subsequently to the execution of her will, and we know of none. Such evidence is clearly hearsay and inadmissible for any purpose. Vreeland v. Williams, 32 N. J. Eq. 734.

The order should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

(Civ. 585.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 12, 1911.)

Trusts (§ 359*)—Establishment of Secret Trusts—Jurisdiction.

Where a will, finally admitted to probate, imports on its face an absolute gift, heirs of testator, who seek to establish a secret and invalid trust, must bring an independent action in equity against the legatee to establish the trust, and the probate court, in proceedings for the distribution of the estate, has no jurisdiction.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Proceedings by Samuel G. Murphy, executor, for the distribution of the estate of Honora Sharp, deceased, in which James O'Donnell and others, heirs at law of deceased, filed a petition, cross-complaint, and answer to the petition of Adolph B. Spreckels and another for distribution. From a decree of partial distribution, the heirs appeal. Affirmed.

Maguire, Lindsay, Houx & Barrett, for appellants. Chas. S. Wheeler and A. Heyneman (J. F. Bowie, of counsel), for respondents.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from a decree of partial distribution, made by the superior court (in probate), whereby it distributed to Adolph B. Spreckels and Reuben H. Lloyd $80,000 of the $200,000 bequeathed to them by the will of deceased, and which was the subject-matter of the litigation in the case of James O'Donnell et al. v. Samuel G. Murphy et al. (No. 1,034), 120 Pac. 1076, this day decided by this court.

In the case at bar the respondents Spreckels and Lloyd filed a petition, on June 6, 1907, for the distribution to them of the $200,000 bequeathed to them in terms by the will of said decedent, Honora Sharp. To this petition the appellants, claiming to be the only heirs at law of said decedent, filed a demurrer, and subsequently, before the court had passed thereon, filed an answer, petition, and cross-complaint. This pleading was filed subsequently to the commencement by respondents of the action in equity, above referred to as this day decided by this court, and the "petition and cross-complaint" consisted of the complaint filed in the action in equity. The answer also set forth the commencement of such action in equity, and made the complaint therein a part of such answer. Respondents demurred to the answer, petition, and cross-complaint, and this demurrer was sustained without leave to amend, and the court in due time granted the petition of respondents in part, and from this order or decree appellants appealed. As stated by counsel for appellants at the oral argument (the two appeals were argued together before this court), appellants opposed the petition for distribution of the $200,000, given by the will to Spreckels and Lloyd, on the ground that it was void because given as a secret but invalid trust, and that appellants had a right to litigate this question in the probate proceedings. The court, however, was of the opinion that appellants had mistaken their remedy; that the court in probate could not consider the matter; that their remedy was to bring an independent action in equity to charge the legatee of the void legacy with a trust in favor of the heirs at law. Counsel at the oral argument admitted that such was the usual course, but, as appellants had appealed from the decree of distribution, the matter was submitted to this court.

That the course adopted by the heirs at law in bringing the action in equity was the proper one to pursue to enforce their alleged rights is abundantly established by the authorities called to our attention through the learning and industry of counsel for appellants upon the appeal in the equity case. Matter of Will of O'Hara, 95 N. Y. 403, 47 Am. Rep. 53; Edson v. Bartow, 154 N. Y. 199, 215, 48 N. E. 541; Amherst College v. Ritch, 151 N. Y. 282, 45 N. E. 876, 37 L. R. A. 305. In that action the appellants in this action sought to litigate against the same parties the very same matters that they seek to litigate in this proceeding. In the other action all parties whose interests could be affected were impleaded, in a court of appellants' own choosing, whose jurisdiction has not been, and could not successfully be, challenged by any one. These same appellants prosecuted that action to a judgment which determined the matters sought to be litigated in this proceeding. This court has this day affirmed that judgment; and upon the going down of the remittitur such judgment will become final and conclusive against these appellants as to the very matters that they seek to litigate in this proceeding. It is thus manifest that a reversal of the judgment in this proceeding, and the remanding of the matter for further proceedings in the court below, could result in no practical good to appellants. The respondents could at once plead the judgment rendered in the other action as a bar to the right claimed by appellants in this proceeding. For this reason we think we might well affirm the judgment appealed from in this proceeding without further examination. However, we are of the opinion that where, as in this case, the will has finally been admitted to probate, and upon its face imports an absolute gift, and it is sought to establish a secret and invalid trust, as against the legatee, not only the proper, but the only, remedy is by an independent action to charge the legatee as a trustee.

No trust or invalidity appearing upon the face of the will, it must be given effect in probate according to its terms, and the secret trust can only be established through an independent action in equity against the legatee. This certainly has been the uniform practice, as is abundantly shown by the authorities referred to in this opinion and in the opinion filed in the equity case.

In the cases of Fairchild v. Edson, 154 N. Y. 199, 215, 48 N. E. 541, 61 Am. St. Rep. 609, and Edson v. Bartow, 154 N. Y. 199, 215, 48 N. E. 541, the court had before it two appeals involving the same bequest. It determined in the first case that the bequest in question was upon its face absolute, and therefore valid on the face of the will. In the second case it was held that the same bequest was upon a secret and invalid trust; but the court pointed out that no intestacy resulted therefrom, but that the bequest passed to the legatee, where it would be impressed by a court of equity with a trust in favor of the heir at law.

The judgment is affirmed.

Application for a writ of prohibition by the John Heinlen Company against the Superior Court in and for the County of Kings and the judge thereof. Granted.

Houghton & Houghton, for petitioner. Lamberson & Lamberson and M. L. Short, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an application for a writ of prohibition directed to the superior court of Kings county and to Hon. John G. Covert, judge of said court, commanding and directing said court and judge to desist and refrain from taking any proceeding or making any order in a certain proceeding pending therein, wherein the Lake Land Canal & Irrigation Company is plaintiff and petitioner is defendant, other than an order transferring said cause to the nearest or most accessible court not subject to objection upon the ground that the judge thereof is disqualified to act in the trial of the cause.

An alternative writ was issued, in response to which the respondents have interposed a general demurrer. The application grows out of a special proceeding instituted by the Lake Land Canal & Irrigation Company against petitioner in the superior court of Kings county, the purpose of which was to condemn certain riparian rights appurtenant to the lands owned by petitioner and situated in said county. At the time set for the trial of the cause, the defendant therein, pursuant to notice, made a motion to change the place of trial upon the admitted fact that Hon. John G. Covert, judge of the court, was disqualified by reason of the fact that he was interested in the subject-matter involved in the proceeding. The court denied the motion, and postponed the trial to a future date, stating that he would apply to the Governor of the state of California to designate a judge in his place and stead to preside at the trial of the proceeding in the superior court of Kings county.

The point involved is whether or not the provisions of section 398 of the Code of Civil Procedure apply to special proceedings in eminent domain. Section 1243 of title 7 of the Code of Civil Procedure, entitled "Eminent Domain," provides: "All proceedings under this title must be brought in the superior court of the county in which the property is situated." It is the contention of respondents that such proceedings must not only be brought in the court of the county wherein the property is situated, but that the trial thereof must be had in such county. This contention is based upon what was said by the Supreme Court in California Southern R. R. Co. v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 65 Cal. 395, 4 Pac. 344, and a case of the same title, reported in 65 Cal. 410, 4 Pac. 388, and Santa Rosa v. Fountain Water Co., 138 Cal. 579, 71 Pac. 1123, 1136, in all of which the proceedings were for the condemnation of land, and the sole point involved was the application for a change of the place of trial based, not upon the disqualification of the judge, but upon the ground that the owner of the land resided in another county than that wherein the land was situated. What was said in those cases had reference alone to the facts there presented, and all that the court decided was that the cases were brought in the proper county, as required by section 1243 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that such proceedings were not within or affected by the provisions of section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Hence, they should be tried in the county where brought, notwithstanding the fact that the defendants therein resided elsewhere. The cases cited furnish no authority for respondents' position.

The proceeding to condemn the riparian rights of petitioner was brought in the proper county, as required by section 1243 of the Code of Civil Procedure. By reason of his interest in the result of the suit Judge Covert was disqualified. Section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that no judge shall sit or act as such in any action or proceeding in which he is interested. While title 7, entitled "Eminent Domain," is silent as to the steps which shall be taken in proceedings thereunder where the judge of the court of the county wherein the suit is brought is disqualified, section 1256 thereof provides that: "Except as otherwise provided in this title, the provisions of part two of this Code are applicable to and constitute the rules of practice in the proceedings mentioned in this title." Hence, in determining the rules of practice in a case where the judge is prohibited from acting and as to which no provision is made in the title, we must look to title 4, pt. 2, of the Code. Section 398 of the Code of Civil Procedure (found in part 2) provides: "If an action or proceeding is commenced or pending in a court, and the judge * * * thereof is disqualified from acting as such * * * it must be transferred for trial * * * to the nearest or most accessible court, where the like objection or cause for making the order does not exist." It has been held that proceedings in eminent domain are not actions, as defined in section 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for which reason it was likewise held that certain provisions of the Code treating of actions only did not apply to proceedings of this character. Santa Rosa v. Fountain Water Co., supra. Section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure, however, specifies what shall constitute disqualification of a judge in a proceeding, and when the fact of such disqualification is made to appear in an application for change of the place of trial of a proceeding, then, as expressly provided in section 398 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the disqualified judge has no discretion other than to perform the duty imposed upon him by this section. Parrish v. Riverside Trust Co., 7 Cal. App. 95, 93 Pac. 685; Livermore v. Brundage, 64 Cal. 300, 30 Pac. 848. He cannot transfer either an action or a proceeding, wherein he is interested in the result of the trial to a judge of his own selection, a right, however, which would exist if section 160 of the Code of Civil Procedure should be deemed to control. Under the provisions of that section, he may, in case he is unable to hold court by reason of sickness, absence, disability, or other (like) causes, request another judge to sit for him, or the fact of such disability may be certified to the Governor, who may request a judge to act. There is a marked distinction between inability to hold court, as mentioned in section 160, and disqualification of the judge, as defined in section 170. The former section cannot be construed to refer to disqualification of a judge on account of his interest in the matter involved in the proceeding.

Respondents direct our attention to section 4481 of the Political Code, which declares: "If the provisions of any title conflict with or contravene the provisions of another title, the provisions of each title must prevail as to all matters and questions arising out of the subject-matter of such title." This section can have no application to the case at bar, for the reason that, as we have seen, no provision is made in title 7 for the trial of a proceeding wherein the judge is disqualified, and hence there is no conflict as to a matter concerning which the title is silent. In such case we must, as directed by section 1256, Code of Civil Procedure, look to title 2 for a rule of practice.

It follows from what has been said that the writ should be granted. It is therefore ordered that the respondents refrain and desist from any action or proceeding in that certain cause entitled Lake Land Canal & Irrigation Company (a corporation) v. John Heinlen Company (a corporation), now pending in the superior court of Kings county, other than to make an order changing the place of trial of such proceeding to the nearest or most accessible superior court the judge of which is not disqualified from trying the same.

Ex parte TOM. (Cr. 225.)

1. INFANTS (§ 68*) — CRIMINAL LIABILITY — JURISDICTION OF JUSTICE.

Where, at a preliminary hearing of one accused of crime, the counsel for the accused stated that he was a boy 18 years of age, St. 1911, p. 658, providing that, whenever it is suggested in a court other than the superior court that the accused is under the age of 18 years, the magistrate shall refer the case to the juvenile court, did not require the justice of the peace, under this statement of counsel, to so refer the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Infants, Cent. Dig. §§ 174, 175; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

2. INFANTS (§ 69*)—CRIMES—JURISDICTION—SENTENCE.

Relator having been charged with crime in the justice court, and ordered held for trial, was informed against in the superior court where he pleaded guilty. He claimed that he was under 18. Before sentence he filed a written application stating that he was 17 years old, and asking to be released on a probationary term, which matter was referred to a probationary officer, and hearing thereon continued from time to time until finally he was sentenced to be imprisoned in the state prison. Held, that the superior court had jurisdiction to enter the judgment of imprisonment, and that St. 1911, p. 658, providing for the certifying of cases against parties under the age of 18 years to the juvenile court, did not require any other course than that pursued.

JAMES, J. Application by petitioner on habeas corpus for discharge from custody after plea of guilty and sentence of imprisonment. Petitioner was informed against in the superior court under the provisions of section 288 of the Penal Code, which denounces as a crime the committing of certain lewd and lascivious acts with or upon a child under the age of 14 years.

The contention made on behalf of petitioner is that the charge should have been heard in and punishment determined by the juvenile department of the superior court, and not by the regular criminal trial department, in which it was heard and considered, for the alleged reason that petitioner at the time of the filing of the information against him was under the age of 18 years.

[1] The act of the Legislature, commonly called the juvenile court law (Stats. 1911, p. 658), provides that, whenever it is suggested in a court other than a superior court that a person against whom a crime is charged is under the age of 18 years, it shall be the duty of the magistrate to certify the case to the juvenile court for further proceedings. It appears by the petition in this case that petitioner was first charged in a justice's court, and therein ordered to be held to answer for trial in the usual way. It does not appear that any suggestion was made, while the charge was pending before the justice of the peace on preliminary examination, that petitioner was under the age of 18 years; but, on the contrary, it appears that a statement was made by petitioner's counsel before the justice to the effect that petitioner then was "a boy 18 years of age." The justice of the peace was not required, under such a statement, to refer the case to the juvenile court.

[2] After being held to answer for trial on the charge mentioned, without making any claim that he was of such an age as to entitle him to consideration under the juvenile act, petitioner entered a plea of guilty in the superior court to the information there filed against him. The petition recites that before sentence he filed a written application with the court, asking to be released from custody on a probationary term, in which application he stated that at the time the information was filed he was of the age of 17 years. The petition further recites that the court then referred the matter to a probationary officer and continued the hearing thereon from time to time until finally sentence was pronounced that petitioner be imprisoned in the state prison for a period of two years.

We are of the opinion that the superior court had jurisdiction to enter the judgment of imprisonment and that the juvenile court law does not, under the circumstances shown in this case, require that any other or different course be pursued than that followed. The court, under the provisions of section 1203, Penal Code, after a plea of guilty, could in its discretion have allowed petitioner to be released from custody on probationary term, but no doubt, for good reasons, it was considered that petitioner was not deserving of such leniency.

The writ is discharged and petitioner remanded to the custody of the sheriff.

CRACKEL v. CRACKEL. (Civ. 964.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 5, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 1, 1912.)

1. Divorce (§ 184*)—Review—Evidence.

Code Civ. Proc. § 670, provides that, in case of default judgment, the judgment roll shall contain the summons with the proof of service, the complaint with a memorandum indorsed thereon of entry of defendant's default in answering, and a copy of the judgment. Section 650 provides for the settling of a bill of exceptions taken at trial, and section 953a provides that one desiring to appeal from a judgment, etc., may, in lieu of preparing a bill of exceptions, have a transcript of the testimony, and all rulings, instructions, etc., prepared and filed with the trial judge for approval, which when so settled and allowed shall become a part of the judgment roll and may be considered on appeal in lieu of the bill of exceptions. Held that, where defendant in a divorce case defaulted, plaintiff's evidence would not be reviewed on defendant's appeal, though in fact incorporated in the record, notwithstanding Civ. Code, § 130, providing that the court shall in defaults in divorce cases require proof of the facts alleged, and before granting the relief.

2. Appeal and Error (§ 204*)—Exceptions—Evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Mogan, Judge.

Action by John T. Crackel against Martha P. Crackel. From an interlocutory decree for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. E. White, for appellant. Fitzpatrick & Greeley, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an interlocutory decree of divorce granted the plaintiff from the defendant upon the ground of the defendant's extreme cruelty.

[1] In due time after service of summons the defendant appeared in the action and filed a demurrer, which was overruled, and, having failed to answer within the time allowed by the court's order, her default was regularly entered; whereupon the cause was placed upon the calendar, and after hearing the testimony of the plaintiff and of two corroborating witnesses, an interlocutory decree of divorce was regularly rendered and entered.

The defendant urges four grounds upon which she seeks a reversal of the judgment, all of which depend upon, and require an examination of, the evidence taken at the hearing of the case. This, however, being an appeal from the judgment in a default case, and therefore no issue of fact having been raised by the pleadings, the defendant was not entitled to have the testimony incorporated in the transcript (sections 670, 650, 953a, Code Civ. Proc.; Spelling on New Trial & Appellate Prac., § 3); and the mere fact that the evidence is inserted in the record here does not warrant the court in reviewing or considering it for any purpose (Sutton v. Symons, 97 Cal. 475, 32 Pac. 588; Thomson v. Thomson, 121 Cal. 11, 12, 53 Pac. 403; Lane v. Tanner, 156 Cal. 135, 138, 103 Pac. 846).

The defendant concedes as a general rule that these propositions are true; but she contends, on the other hand, that as section 130 of the Civil Code provides that the court shall, in defaults in divorce causes, require proof of the facts alleged before granting the relief, the law thereby raises an issue of fact, and consequently provides for a trial. But the contrary of this was expressly held in the case of Foley v. Foley, 120 Cal. 33, 37, 52 Pac. 122, 123 (65 Am. St. Rep. 147). There the defendant defaulted, and the court, after the hearing required by the statute, made a decree of divorce. Subsequently the defendant moved for a new trial, and his motion was denied. He appealed from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. The Supreme Court, in refusing to entertain the appeal from the order denying a new trial, said: "A new trial is a re-examination of an issue of fact; * * * and unless such an issue has been raised and tried, there is nothing which can be reviewed by this method." There, as here, the defendant contended that in divorce cases there was always of necessity a trial of issues of fact; that the law raises such issues whether the defendant answer or not. But this the court declared to be a misapprehension of the effect of section 130 of the Civil Code, and in referring to that section said: "The effect of that provision is not to raise issues of fact, nor to constitute the taking of proof submitted by plaintiff in cases where the defendant has not answered a 'trial,' as those terms are used in the provisions relating to new trials. Such an issue arises only where a material averment of fact is made on the one side and is controverted upon the other (Code Civ. Proc., §§ 588, 590); and the re-examination provided for in section 656 is when there has been a trial of such an issue."

We think it clearly appears from the reasoning of that case that a defendant who has defaulted is not entitled to a new trial, nor to have a bill of exceptions settled, nor the certification of the evidence "in lieu" thereof, both of which proceedings are intended to review issues of fact "after a trial." Here, as we have seen, there were no issues of fact and no trial. Where a defendant fails to answer, the only question that can arise upon an appeal is a legal one, and the appellate court is limited in its examination in such a case to the judgment roll, i. e., the papers mentioned in subdivision 1 of section 670 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The defendant knew of the entry of the default at or about the time it was made; and we are unable to perceive why, if she desired to contest the action, she did not seek relief under the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Turning now from this preliminary objection interposed by plaintiff to the propositions advanced by the defendant, these propositions involve the sufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment, and some purely formal objections to the admission of evidence. As we have seen above, the evidence is not legally before us, from which it follows that the defendant is not entitled to have any point reviewed by this court which involves a resort to the record of such evidence. Nevertheless we have considered these points, and are satisfied that they are without substantial merit. The evidence is amply sufficient to sustain the decree. It shows that the plaintiff resided in the city and county of San Francisco, the place where the action was brought, for more than one year prior to its commencement; that defendant's treatment of the plaintiff caused him grievous mental suffering; and the evidence given by the plaintiff was corroborated by other witnesses in every essential feature.

[2] As to the other points urged by defendant, all concern the admission of evidence, and the simple and complete answer to them is that, no objection having been made at the trial to the admission of such evidence, defendant cannot now be heard to complain. Section 646, Code Civ. Proc.; Randall v. Freed, 154 Cal. 299, 97 Pac. 669; Bullard v. Stone, 67 Cal. 477, 8 Pac. 17; Roper v. McFadden, 48 Cal. 346.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West.

Action by M. Takekawa against W. J. Hole. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Anderson & Anderson, Watkins & Blodget, E. W. Freeman, and Victor Montgomery, for appellant. John W. Kemp, J. S. Noyes, L. B. Stanton, N. Blackstock, and Chas. F. Blackstock, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. The action was one for specific performance. The judgment and decree sought to be reversed in this proceeding is based upon a certain written agreement for the purchase and sale of described real property, together with certain executed oral modifications thereof agreed to between the parties. These oral modifications provided for the extension of certain deferred payments specified in the written agreement; a sufficient consideration therefor being shown. The trial court found that these oral modifications and the obligations thereby imposed upon plaintiff had been fully performed, and found all other facts necessary to entitle plaintiff to the relief demanded. A decree was accordingly entered in plaintiff's favor, from which judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Defendant in his answer pleaded in bar a former judgment rendered in defendant's favor by a court of competent jurisdiction in an action wherein specific performance was sought by plaintiff against defendant on account of and based upon the terms of the original written agreement without modifications. Upon the trial defendant tendered in evidence the judgment roll and record of such former adjudication. The court sustained an objection to the introduction of this record and defendant assigns as error such action of the court, and the same is practically the only question presented upon this appeal.

[1] Appellant contends that the complaint in the original action was sufficient and under which all competent evidence in the second action was admissible. We think there is no merit in this contention. By the terms of the original written agreement set out in the first action, it affirmatively appeared by the complaint that plaintiff was in default as to deferred payments stipulated in the agreement. This affirmatively appearing, the bare allegation that he had performed all of the obligations imposed upon him by the agreement may be disregarded; the contrary being made to appear by other allegations of the complaint. The complaint did not state a cause of action warranting the equitable relief sought, and no evidence in that action could have been received under the allegations of the complaint with reference to the modifications and extensions of time.

[2] The rule as to what may be deemed adjudged in a former judgment is declared by section 1911 of the Code of Civil Procedure: "That only is deemed to have been adjudged in a former judgment which appears upon its face to have been so adjudged, or which was actually and necessarily included therein or necessary thereto." It is settled law that in a judgment of any character pleaded in bar it must appear that the parties are the same and the subject-matter the same. Considering the allegations of the complaint in the two actions, while the parties are the same, the subject-matter, to wit, the right of the plaintiff to a specific performance under a particular contract, was not the same. The right to the relief in the second action was based upon entirely different facts from those set out in the first action. It may be conceded that the judgment in the first action, which was one ordered upon the pleadings, was in effect a judgment upon the merits as distinguished from a judgment of nonsuit. Bailey v. Ætna Indemnity Co., 5 Cal. App. 746, 91 Pac. 416. There is under our practice no distinction to be drawn, as affecting the character of judgment, between a judgment rendered upon the pleadings and a judgment rendered upon demurrer. Our Supreme Court in Flood v. Templeton, 152 Cal. 158, 92 Pac. 83, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 579, has said: "While a judgment rendered upon the sustaining of a demurrer to a former complaint will be a bar to another action based upon the same allegations of fact, yet where the facts are different and present different questions of law, as they do here, no such bar can be asserted." It cannot be said that, upon the face of the record in the former case, the rights of the parties as to the modified agreement could have been or were adjudged. City of Los Angeles v. Mellus, 59 Cal. 444; Newhall v. Hatch, 134 Cal. 269, 66 Pac. 266, 55 L. R. A. 673. This modified agreement was, in effect, a new agreement. It imposed new obligations upon the parties and each, in consideration of new promises then made to the other, agreed to do acts which, according to his own contention, he was not then bound to perform. The agreements upon the part of plaintiff were each and all executed, as found by the court, and the obligations imposed upon him fully performed. This action was therefore based upon an entirely different statement of facts, and the first judgment was not a bar to this action. We see no error of the court in sustaining the objection to the introduction of the record in the original action.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

No other questions are presented requiring consideration.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

BANK OF VENICE v. CLAPP. (Civ. 1,012.)

1. Banks and Banking (§ 140*)—Bills and Notes (§ 26*)—Checks—Implied Promise to Pay.

Where one issues a check on a bank, there is a dual implied promise that the bank on which it is drawn will pay the amount thereof, and that, should the bank fail to make the payment, the drawer will pay the same to the holder.

2. Bills and Notes (§ 26*)—Checks—Liability of Drawer to Drawee.

Defendant, having agreed to loan W. $425, issued to him two checks payable to plaintiff bank or order, and drawn on another bank in which defendant kept his account. These checks were received by W. in lieu of money, and were transferred to plaintiff by W. for value. Defendant stopped payment by the bank on which the checks were drawn. Held, that the checks were negotiable instruments, and, while defendant possessed the right to notify the drawee bank not to pay them, such notice did not relieve him from the legal obligation to pay the holder on demand.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon F. Moss, Judge.

Action by the Bank of Venice against C. F. Clapp. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

G. P. Adams, for appellant. Tanner, Taft & Odell, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Action to recover upon two checks issued by defendant on a bank at Covina, payable to the order of plaintiff, payment of which was refused by the bank at Covina. Judgment went for plaintiff, from which, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals.

The facts are these: Defendant and one Widrig had some dealings through which defendant agreed to loan Widrig $425. Pursuant to such agreement, on Saturday, the 26th of December, 1908, he delivered to Widrig a check for $225, payable to plaintiff or order, and drawn upon the First National Bank of Covina. On the following Monday, the 28th of December, he delivered to Widrig another check, drawn upon the same bank and payable to plaintiff, for $200. Widrig, having dealings with plaintiff and having issued checks on plaintiff which had not been paid for want of funds, but which checks were nevertheless being held by plaintiff awaiting a deposit by Widrig of sufficient to cover the amount thereof, sent these checks so by him received from defendant to the Bank of Venice, which gave Widrig credit for the amount thereof and paid the checks of Widrig on and before the 29th of December, 1908. These checks of defendant delivered to plaintiff by Widrig were forwarded by plaintiff to the First National Bank of Covina, and payment was on December 30th refused because of defendant's instructions in that regard. Thereupon plaintiff brought this action upon said checks.

It is appellant's contention that the effect of the issuance of the checks by defendant, under these circumstances, was an agreement to deliver the money to Widrig when he collected the checks; that there was no authority to request plaintiff to pay any money to Widrig before the same had been received by it from the Bank of Covina; that the only duty of plaintiff was to forward the checks for collection and to pay out of the proceeds, as ordered, after, but not before, collection thereof. As we regard the transaction, no question of agency is involved. In discharge of an agreement to make a loan, defendant issued these two checks, which were received by Widrig in lieu of cash, and plaintiff, to whom they were made payable, paid the amount thereof to Widrig, the effect of which was, under the agreement between Widrig and defendant, to make plaintiff a creditor of Widrig to the extent of the amount of such checks. Sims v. Trust Co., 103 N. Y. 472, 9 N. E. 605, is an authority to the effect that, where checks upon one bank payable to another are delivered to a third person, the use of the payee's name indicates the drawer's intention to lodge the money in the payee's control, and nothing further is inferable from the language of the check. This may be accepted as the rule in the absence of any other agreement, but, where checks are delivered to a third person under an agreement of the character disclosed by this record, the agreement, and not the inference, must control.

[1] When one issues a check upon a bank, there is a dual promise implied: First, that the bank upon which it is drawn will pay the amount thereof; and, second, if such bank should fail to make the payment, the drawer will pay the same to the holder thereof.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[2] These checks delivered to Widrig were negotiable instruments, and, having been given and received in lieu of money under an agreement, the title thereto vested in Widrig, and, when delivered by Widrig to plaintiff, the title thereto was transferred from Widrig to plaintiff. While defendant possessed the right to notify the Covina Bank not to pay the checks, such notice did not relieve defendant from the obligation to pay the negotiable instruments to the holder upon demand, which demand was made and refused.

We see no error in the action of the trial court in rendering judgment in favor of plaintiff, or in its order denying a new trial, and the same are affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

PETERSON v. FREIERMUTH et al.

(Civ. 830.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 9, 1911.)

1. Mechanics' Liens (§ 73*) — Contract with Owner — Filing — "Materialman"— "Original Contractor."

Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, provides that contracts between the owner and the contractor for improvements exceeding $1,000 in cost shall be in writing and filed in the office of the county recorder, otherwise the contract shall be void, and no recovery shall be had thereon by either party. Plaintiff contracted with a lessee to raise a number of old buildings above the street level and remodel them, and "furnish all of the necessary labor and material to be used to fully complete the work," plaintiff to receive the actual cost of the materials and labor, plus 10 per cent. and the reasonable value of the work, to be determined by the amount of work and labor done when it was completed. Held, that the labor to be performed was not merely incidental to the furnishing of the materials, and hence plaintiff was an original contractor within the meaning of the statute, and not a materialman, and was not entitled to a mechanic's lien where the contract was not in writing and filed with the county recorder; the fact that the contract did not specify the price or total value of the labor and materials not excusing the parties from reducing it to writing, it being apparent that the cost of the work would exceed $1,000.

2. Mechanics' Liens (§ 74*)—Contractor's Lien—Filing Specifications—Necessity.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, providing that contracts for labor and materials between the owner and contractor shall be in writing, and shall be filed in the office of the county recorder before the work is commenced, plans and specifications to which the work is required to conform must be filed with the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 109, 110; Dec. Dig. § 74.*]

3. Mechanics' Liens (§ 73*)—Sufficiency of Contract—Payment of Price.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1184, provides that no part of the contract price shall be made payable in advance of the commencement of the work, but shall by its terms be made payable in installments at specified times thereafter, or on the completion of specified parts of the work, or of the whole, provided that at least 25 per cent. of the whole price shall be payable at least 35 days after completion of the contract. A building contract provided that the contractor should be paid "the actual cost of the said materials and the labor, plus 10 per cent. and the reasonable value of the same, to be determined by the amount of work and labor done * * * when the same was actually finished and completed." Held, that the contract did not comply with the statute, and was void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

4. Landlord and Tenant (§ 157*) — Improvements by Lessee—Liability of Owners.

A lessor is not personally liable to a contractor for improvements made upon the leased premises under a contract with the lessee, in the absence of express or implied authority from the lessor to make the improvements; the mere leasing not impliedly authorizing the lessee to make improvements.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 571–607; Dec. Dig. § 157.*]

5. Landlord and Tenant (§ 157*) — Improvements by Lessee — Liability of Owner.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1192, provides that every building or improvement constructed upon any land to the owner's knowledge shall be subject to a mechanic's lien, unless the owner shall, within 10 days after obtaining knowledge thereof, give notice that he will not be responsible for the same by posting notice in writing upon the land or improvements, and section 1185 provides that the land upon which any improvement is constructed shall also be subject to a lien, if at the commencement of the work, or the furnishing of materials, the land belonged to the person who caused the improvements to be made. Held, that the failure of a lessor to post the prescribed notice on the premises would not impose a personal liability upon him for improvements made under a contract with the lessee, but would only entitle the contractor to a lien upon the fee.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Mogan, Judge.

Action by George Peterson against George H. Freiermuth and others. From a judgment for defendants on demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

James W. Cochrane and R. P. Henshall, for appellant. H. M. Anthony, for respondents.

HART, J. This is an appeal from the judgment entered after and upon the order sustaining a demurrer.

The action is for the foreclosure of a lien upon certain property for labor and materials furnished in the alteration and remodeling of certain buildings situated on said property.

It appears from the complaint that the respondents are the owners of certain real estate situated in the city of San Francisco, that said respondents leased said property to the defendant Overman, and that the latter held and enjoyed the possession of the same, as lessee under the lease so executed, from the 1st day of August, 1906, up to and including the 16th day of July, 1907.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The complaint further alleges that on or about the 22d day of August, 1906, the plaintiff entered into a contract with the said Overman under and by the terms of which said Peterson agreed to "raise the old buildings then situate upon the front and rear of the premises hereinbefore described to a height of 18 feet from the level of the street; to remodel said buildings throughout with the exception of the residence of George H. Freiermuth, known as No. 1562 Ellis street; to put in new brick foundations, wood columns, girders, etc.; to roof and floor the entire ground of said premises; to put in partitions in four stores; to install patent chimneys necessary for the use of said premises in its remodeled, altered and reconstructed condition." Said agreement further provided "that said Peterson should furnish all of the necessary labor and material to be used to fully complete the work of altering and repairing said premises, millwork, ironwork, cartage of débris, tinning and roofing of said premises; that all of the said materials were to be furnished, and all work and labor were to be done and performed in said building in accordance with * * * certain plans and specifications agreed upon by the parties and to the satisfaction of the said Overman; * * * that it was agreed between the plaintiff and said Overman that the said Peterson should be paid therefor the actual cost of the said materials and the labor, plus 10 per cent., and the reasonable value of the same, to be determined by the amount of work and labor done and performed by said Peterson, when the same was actually finished and completed." It is alleged that the actual cost of the materials so used by said Peterson and the labor performed under said agreement is the sum of $5,076.26. It is also averred that said Peterson has fully performed all of the obligations of said contracts on his part to be performed.

It is alleged that said contract was oral or verbal, and was not signed by the parties thereto; that the same or a memorandum thereof was never recorded in the office of the county recorder of said city and county of San Francisco. The complaint further alleges that the respondents and each of them had knowledge on or about the 22d day of August, 1906, of the remodeling and reconstruction of the buildings on the real property described in the complaint, and of the furnishing of materials for said purpose and the performance of labor on said buildings by plaintiff, but that, notwithstanding the possession of such knowledge by them, they did not post on the premises or give the notice prescribed by section 1192 of the Code of Civil Procedure within the time after the acquisition of the knowledge as designated by said section. The work under said oral contract with Overman was completed by the plaintiff on the 15th day of May, 1907, and on the 11th day of May, 1907, the last named filed and recorded his claim of lien in the office of the county recorder.

The demurrer is both general and special. The grounds of the special demurrer are that the complaint is uncertain, unintelligible, and ambiguous in the following particulars: That it cannot be ascertained therefrom whether the contract referred to therein "was an oral or a written contract"; that it cannot be ascertained therefrom whether "the plans and specifications" mentioned therein are signed by the parties to the contract; and that it cannot be told from the complaint whether said "plans and specifications" were recorded, and, "if so recorded, when and where recorded." We think the complaint is amenable to the criticisms of the special demurrer; but, as we are further of the opinion that the pleading wholly fails to state a cause of action of any character against the respondents, it will not be necessary to give extended notice to the grounds of the special demurrer.

[1] The first proposition advanced by the appellant is that the plaintiff was only a materialman, and that, therefore, he is entitled to a lien for the value of the labor bestowed upon and the materials furnished in the making of the improvements described in the complaint. If this contention be sound, the complaint would manifestly state a cause of action for the enforcement of the lien filed upon the premises for the value of such materials. Section 1183, Code Civ. Proc. We think the proposition is untenable. The complaint directly alleges that by the contract between Overman and the plaintiff the latter agreed to provide all the labor and furnish all the materials necessary for the making of the alterations and improvements as specified and in accordance with certain plans and specifications; that the plaintiff did perform all the labor and provide all the materials for that purpose; and that the actual cost of said labor and materials, with the addition of 10 per cent. provided for by the agreement, amounted to the sum of $5,076.26. We cannot perceive how it can reasonably be maintained, under these allegations, that plaintiff was not an original contractor.

One of the tests for the determination of the question whether under agreements such as the one here the party agreeing to furnish both the labor and the materials is an original contractor or only a materialman is: Was the amount or value of the labor trifling or insignificant when compared to the value of the materials furnished? Or, in other words, was the labor a mere essential incident only of the agreement to furnish the materials? Bennett v. Davis, 113

Cal. 337, 340, 45 Pac. 684, 54 Am. St. Rep. 354. And in James on Mechanics' Liens, § 55, it is said: "The materialman who merely furnishes materials for a building must not be confounded with the contractor who furnishes both materials and labor for and who constructs the building; nor with the laborer who furnishes his individual labor only upon the building. Nor must the common and statutory meaning of the word 'materialman' be lost sight of when the person who furnishes the materials also, and by the same contract, furnishes or performs labor upon and in the construction of the building for which he furnishes the materials. In such cases the persons who furnish materials cease to be materialmen and become original contractors or subcontractors as the facts of the case may be."

Tested by the rules thus stated, it seems to be very clear that there can be no room for doubting that the plaintiff was an original contractor. Under the terms of his contract with Overman, as we have seen, he was to raise the old buildings on the premises to a height of 18 feet above the level of the street, to remodel said buildings, to put in new brick foundations, wood columns, girders, etc., to roof and floor the entire ground of said premises, to put in partitions in four stores, to install patent chimneys, etc., and to "furnish all of the necessary labor and material to be used to fully complete the work," etc.

The facts alleged in the complaint here are materially different from those in Sparks v. Butte Co. Grav. M. Co., 55 Cal. 389, where it was alleged that the appellant merely furnished "certain materials to be used * * * in the construction of a certain building," etc. The case here is also wholly different from the case of Hinckley v. Field's Biscuit, etc., Co., 91 Cal. 136, 27 Pac. 594, where the plaintiffs, under a contract with the defendant, agreed to and did install a steam plant in the latter's factory. The court held that the plaintiffs were merely materialmen, having manufactured at their own shop the boiler, engine, heater, feed pipes, and necessary attachments, and that the work in setting the machinery up and in placing it in proper position on the premises "was only the completion of their contract to deliver such finished machinery, and did not convert them into contractors for the erection of the factory, or any part of it, within the true intent of the statute." But in the case of La Grill v. Mallard, 90 Cal. 373, 27 Pac. 294, it was held, in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, that a person who contracts to paper and decorate several rooms in a building and furnishes the material is an original contractor. Speaking of the two cases last mentioned, the Supreme Court, in Bennett v. Davis, supra, says: "The labor required to place the engines and machinery in proper position in the case of Hinckley v. Field's Biscuit Co., supra, was evidently much greater than the labor performed in La Grill v. Mallard, supra, but relatively to the material furnished it was much less. In the one case the material was not only the principal thing, but compared to it the work was trifling. In the other the work was the important matter."

In the case at bar, the relative amount or value of the labor and materials does not appear from the complaint, but it is evident, from the extent of the alterations and the different kinds of work required to make them, that the labor to be performed was the principal feature of the contract. The complaint most certainly does not disclose that plaintiff merely agreed to sell Overman materials. He was to perform the labor and furnish the materials for the completion of a specified contract, according to certain plans and specifications, and we can see no distinction between such a contract and one by which a contractor obligates himself to the owner of property to construct thereon a building and furnish the necessary labor and materials therefor.

Nor, as is suggested may be done, can the fact that the contract here does not specify the contract price or the total value of the labor and the materials be set up as an excuse for failure to commit such contract to writing and to file it as prescribed by law. It was the duty of the parties to have first ascertained, which they easily could have done, at least the approximate, if not the precise, cost of the labor and materials essential to the completion of the contract and thus have determined whether, in order to entitle the contractor to a lien, the contract was one which the statute imperatively requires shall be in writing and filed in the office of the county recorder. Smith v. Bradbury, 148 Cal. 43, 82 Pac. 367, 113 Am. St. Rep. 189. Particularly is this true in a case where, as here, it must have been apparent to the parties, when the contract was made, from the extent of the work to be done and the materials to be furnished, that the aggregate contract price would be far in excess of $1,000. That the contract in this case is one which does not entitle the contractor to a lien on either the fee in the property or the leasehold interest of Overman therein, whatever that may amount to, is a proposition as to which there can exist no degree of doubt. Of course, it follows that the plaintiff cannot maintain an action for the enforcement of his pretended lien upon the premises.

Section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure, among other things, provides: "* * * All such contracts shall be in writing when the amount agreed to be paid thereunder exceeds one thousand dollars, and shall be subscribed by the parties thereto; and the said contract, or a memorandum thereof, setting forth the names of all the parties to the contract, a description of the property to be affected thereby, together with a statement of the general character of the work to be done, the total amount to be paid thereunder, and the amounts of all partial payments, together with the times when such payments shall be due and payable, shall, before the work is commenced, be filed in the office of the county recorder of the county, or city and county, where the property is situated; otherwise, they shall be wholly void, and no recovery shall be had thereon by either party thereto; and in such case, the labor done and materials furnished by all persons aforesaid, except the contractor, shall be deemed to have been done and furnished at the personal instance of the owner, and they shall have a lien for the value thereof."

We need not quote from the numerous decisions of the Supreme Court to show that the language thus extracted from section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure means precisely what it says. It will be enough to say that the decisions uniformly hold, as the Code section plainly declares that all contracts, or proper memoranda thereof, between the owners and original contractors for labor to be performed and materials to be furnished, where the amount agreed to be paid under such contracts exceeds the sum of $1,000, shall be wholly void unless the same be in writing, and, before the commencement of the work, filed as said section requires. Willamette, etc., Co. v. College Co., 94 Cal. 229, 29 Pac. 629; Morris v. Wilson, 97 Cal. 644, 32 Pac. 801; Greig v. Riordan, 99 Cal. 316, 319, 33 Pac. 913; Donnelly v. Adams, 127 Cal. 24, 59 Pac. 208; Laidlaw v. Marye, 133 Cal. 170, 65 Pac. 391; Smith v. Bradbury, 148 Cal. 41, 82 Pac. 367, 113 Am. St. Rep. 189; Burnett v. Glas, 154 Cal. 249, 255, 97 Pac. 423.

[2] And in the case of Burnett v. Glas, supra, it is said, following many previous adjudications of the proposition by the Supreme Court, that, where a building contract provides that the construction of the building shall conform to certain plans and specifications, the latter constitute an essential part of the contract, and must be filed therewith, otherwise there is a failure to file the contract within the contemplation of section 1183 of the Code. The complaint in the case at bar alleges, as we have shown, that the work to be performed under the contract was to be in accordance with certain plans and specifications, and that such plans and specifications were not filed with the recorder for recordation. Had the contract specifying the contract price and the terms of payment agreeably to the code requirement been in writing and filed and the filing of the plans and specifications therewith had been omitted, such omission would have vitiated the contract.

[3] The contract, moreover, as to payments of the contract price, does not, according to the averments of the complaint, comply even approximately with the requirements of section 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The complaint alleges that it was agreed between the parties to the contract that the plaintiff should be paid for the labor and materials "the actual cost of the said materials and the labor plus ten per cent. and the reasonable value thereof, to be determined by the amount of work and labor done by said Peterson, when the same was actually finished and completed." This is a substantial departure from the requirements of the statute, and would have rendered the contract void, even if it were otherwise valid, or otherwise prepared and filed as required by law. Merced Lumber Company v. Bruschi, 152 Cal. 372, 92 Pac. 844.

[4] But it is urged by appellant that, if he has not stated a case for the enforcement of a lien on the premises, the respondents are, nevertheless, personally responsible and liable, and that against them the allegations of the complaint disclose a cause of action in assumpsit. Therefore, it is contended, the demurrer should not have been sustained. If the position of appellant as thus declared were sound, there could be no doubt that the complaint would stand as against the demurrer. But we think the point cannot be maintained. The argument in support of this point is that, since the complaint shows by its averments that the improvements to be made and which were made upon the buildings under the contract between Overman and the plaintiff "were of such a character as that the same attached to and became a part of the realty" and further alleges that the sum sued for constituted "the reasonable value of said materials and labor," a cause of action is, therefore, stated against the respondents on an implied contract, and that, by reason of their failure, as alleged, to give the notice required by section 1192 of the Code of Civil Procedure, they are estopped from denying such contract or their personal liability.

In reply to these contentions, it is first to be remarked that there is absolutely no showing made by the complaint that the respondents authorized the improvements called for by the contract between Overman and Peterson, or that respondents were in any manner connected with said contract. There is, in other words, no privity of contract disclosed by the complaint to have existed between the respondents and Overman, or that the latter acted as their agent in contracting with Peterson for the making of the improvements. So far as we are advised to the contrary by the complaint, the respondents might have leased the demised premises to Overman with an understanding or an agreement that the latter might or might not improve the buildings on said premises, according to whether the purposes for which he intended to use them might or might not require their alteration and improvement. In such case, no one will deny the right of Overman to make a contract upon his own responsibility with a third party for that purpose, or, under such circumstances, that the lessors could not be held personally liable to the contractor for the value of the labor and materials employed in the construction or making of such improvements. If A. leases a tract or piece of land to B. for a long term of years, and the latter, in order to better facilitate the use of the land for the purpose to which he desired to put it, should construct a building thereon without consulting the owner or without express or implied authority from him to make the improvement, could it be held within any reasonable contemplation of the law of contracts that A. would nevertheless become personally liable to the contractor for the value of the labor and materials used in the construction of the building? We think the question answers itself. If, as in the case of Moore v. Jackson, 49 Cal. 109, cited by appellant, the lessee was authorized as agent of the lessor to construct the building or, as here, to make the alterations and improvements, then manifestly a different question would be presented. In the case mentioned the Supreme Court, in its opinion, declares that the evidence showed that the lessor authorized his tenant, or the lessee, to make the repairs. Here, as we have seen, there is no such authority shown by the pleaded facts. It certainly will not be argued that the mere allegation that the premises were demised to Overman is sufficient to show authority from the respondents to the former to make the improvements specified in the contract; but most surely we would be compelled to so hold if we were to sustain the argument of counsel.

[5] In the second place, we think that counsel's construction of section 1192 of the Code of Civil Procedure is erroneous. Said section provides, among other things, that "every building or other improvement mentioned in section one thousand one hundred and eighty-three of this Code, constructed upon any lands with the knowledge of the owner * * * shall be subject to any lien filed in accordance with the provisions of this charter, unless such owner or person having or claiming any interest therein shall, within ten days after he shall obtain knowledge of the construction, alteration, repair, or work or labor, give notice that he will not be responsible for the same, by posting a notice in writing to that effect, in some conspicuous place upon the said land, * * * or upon the building or other improvements situated thereon. * * *" It is very clear that the effect of failure on the part of the lessor to post the notice prescribed by the foregoing section is merely to entitle the contractor to a lien upon the fee in the demised real property, and not to impose a personal liability upon the lessor. This announcement is in consonance with the decisions. Phelps v. Maxwell's Creek Gold Mining Company, 49 Cal. 336; West Coast L. Co. v. Newkirk, 80 Cal. 275, 22 Pac. 231; Russ Lumber Co. v. Newkirk, 87 Cal. 596, 25 Pac. 747; Buell v. Brown, 131 Cal. 158, 161, 63 Pac. 167; Hubbard v. Lee, 6 Cal. App. 602, 92 Pac. 744; James on Mechanics' Liens, § 121.

Under the provisions of section 1185 of the Code, where the lessor of property, upon which the lessee has constructed improvements, has given the notice required by section 1192 of said Code, the leasehold interest of the lessee is subject to the lien for the value of the labor and materials, provided, of course, that the contract for the construction of the building has been reduced to writing and recorded as required; but there is no language either in section 1185 or 1192 of the Code of Civil Procedure imposing upon the lessor, or the owner of the property, in such a case, a personal liability for the labor and materials bestowed upon the work. This is not to say, however, that a personal liability does not exist against some one, for, indeed, one does so exist, but it arises, not from the provisions of our mechanic's lien act, but "upon general principles of law, and irrespective of the provisions of the act." Phelps v. M. C. G. M. Co., supra; West Coast L. Co. v. Newkirk, supra.

Thus it will be observed, as sound principle dictates, that, in order to personally bind the respondents here for the consequences of the contract between Overman and the plaintiff, it should have been shown by clear and direct averments that there existed, as to said contract, contractual privity between Overman and the respondents—that is, that the latter were in legal contemplation parties to the contract or authorized the work and materials called for by it to be done and furnished. This as we have pointed out, has not been shown. In other words, Overman, so far as the complaint discloses, was the lessee in actual possession of the premises when the contract was made, and, without any suggestion or authorization from the respondents, himself alone made the contract with the plaintiff.

We see no possible ground upon which the complaint may be held sufficient as against the demurrer, and the judgment is accordingly affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon F. Moss, Judge.

Action by Clara W. Hovey against C. I. Thorp. From an order granting a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Roland G. Swaffield, for appellant. George A. Skinner and E. S. Williams, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court of Los Angeles county granting a new trial. Appellant's sole contention is that the order granting a new trial was made without an application therefor by respondent.

We see no merit in this proposition. The bill of exceptions shows the notice of intention and the grounds therefor; that the cause came on for hearing, and that counsel for both parties were present; that the cause was submitted, and thereafter the court granted the motion and ordered a new trial. The record discloses that nothing remained for hearing but this motion; that the cause which came on for hearing was such motion, and the order was in connection therewith. The grounds for the motion sufficiently appear from the bill of exceptions. A case is not presented where the notice of motion and the grounds therefor cannot be considered on account of the failure to incorporate the same in a bill of exceptions. Williams v. Hawley, 144 Cal. 100, 77 Pac. 762. The application for new trial and the grounds therefor sufficiently appear from the bill of exceptions, without considering the order of the trial court made pending the appeal and directed to be entered nunc pro tunc.

Order affirmed.

17 Cal. App. 604

Ex parte CUTTING. (Cr. 221.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 7, 1911.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 50*)—UNLAWFUL SALES—"SALE."

The property of a social club which sold liquor to its members is owned in common by its stockholders, and the money paid for liquor goes into the corporate fund in lieu of the liquor received by him, which belonged to the corporation, and is used to support the club, so that, if there be a profit from the sales of liquor, it lessens the amount which those members not purchasing liquor from the club would have to pay. Held, that the dispensing of liquor to club members is a "sale" within San Diego City Charter, c. 2, subd. 33, authorizing the council to regulate the sale of intoxicants.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 50.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 6291–6306; vol. 8, p. 7793.]

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 15*)—SALE BY SOCIAL CLUBS—VALIDITY OF REGULATIONS.

San Diego City Charter gives the council power to impose a license tax upon the sale and retail of liquors, and upon all business places not prohibited by law that may require a special police surveillance, or be prejudicial to public morals and the general welfare. An ordinance made it unlawful for any agent of a social club to maintain a barroom where intoxicants were sold, or given away without a license issued to the club, upon verified petition of the directors of the club, and that the common council, after investigation as to whether the persons were suitable persons to sell liquors, and that the clubroom was a suitable place, and that it was a bona fide club, should pass upon the application. The ordinance fixed the license at $5 a month, requires all liquors to be drunk on the premises, prohibits gambling, and requires a report every three months by the officers and persons selling the liquors, and prohibits licenses for social clubs exceeding 25 from being granted. Held, that the ordinance was a reasonable exercise of the police power of the city under its charter, and was valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

In the matter of the application of J. M. Cutting for a writ of habeas corpus. Writ denied.

A. J. Morganstern, for petitioner. W. R. Andrews, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Petitioner has been convicted by the city justice's court of the city of San Diego for a violation of the provisions of an ordinance of said city, No. 4345, the same being entitled: "An ordinance imposing municipal licenses on social clubs in the city of San Diego, California, providing the manner of issuing, collecting and revoking the same, regulating the sale of liquor in such clubs, and fixing a penalty for the violation of said ordinance." By the first section of the ordinance it is made unlawful for any officer, agent, or employé of any social club to maintain a clubhouse, clubroom, barroom, or other place where any wine, ale, beer, or any spirituous, vinous, malt, or mixed liquors, or any intoxicating drinks, are sold, dispensed or given away to the members of such social club, or to the guests of such members, or for any person in said clubhouse, etc., to sell, dispense or give away to any member of such social club, or to any guest of any member, any wine, ale, etc., without a license therefor issued to such social club, as provided in said ordinance. Section 4 provides that no license shall be authorized to be issued under the ordinance, except upon a verified petition under oath of the board of directors or trustees of such social club, which petition must contain a statement of the incorporation of such social club; a list of officers and persons who are to have charge and control of the dispensing of liquors in the clubhouse of such club; the location of such clubhouse, wherein liquors are to be sold, dispensed or given away; the names of the members of such club, and their addresses, showing a membership of at least 50 persons; a statement that said club has been incorporated and in existence for a period of at least six months prior to the date of such petition, and has been occupying the clubhouse during the whole of said time; that such club is a bona fide social club, organized and conducted in good faith, with a limited and selected membership, owning its property in common. Section 5 provides that, upon the presentation of such petition, the common council, after investigation as to whether the persons in the control of such club are sober, suitable, and proper persons to sell and dispose of intoxicating liquors, and that the same is a suitable place in which to maintain a clubroom or barroom, and that it is a bona fide club and not a mere pretense, shall pass upon the question of such application and grant or deny the license; the rate of license being fixed at $5 per month. The ordinance further provides that all liquors sold or dispensed in such clubroom shall be drunk on the premises, and that no intoxicating liquors dispensed by such club are to be carried off the premises, and that no gambling games are to be allowed; that at least once every three months the president and secretary of such club shall prepare a statement of the officers and the persons having charge and control of the dispensing of liquor, with their addresses, and deliver the same to the chief of police; that the council has power, after a hearing, to revoke any license issued for a violation of any of the provisions of the ordinance; that no licenses for social clubs in excess of 25 shall be granted at any time by said common council. The ordinance prohibits the transfer of any license, and provides a penalty for a violation of such ordinance.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The contention of petitioner is that the city council, under its charter, has no power to pass such an ordinance, and that the same is unreasonable, arbitrary, and attempts to regulate a lawful association which is not per se immoral or dangerous to the public health, and that no need for the exercise of police power appears to exist in order to warrant the enactment of such an ordinance. The charter of the city of San Diego by subdivision 33 of chapter 2 gives to the council the power to regulate and impose a license tax upon the sale at retail of tobacco, cigars, alcohol, or malt liquors, and upon all business places not prohibited by law that may require special police surveillance, or that may be prejudicial to public morals and the general welfare.

[1] There is no basis for petitioner's contention that the dispensing of liquor owned by a social club to its members for a consideration is not a sale. While the property of such a corporation is owned in common by its stockholders, when one or more of the stockholders receives, in consideration of a cash payment, or on credit, a portion thereof, such portion so received is the separate property of the member. The money he pays goes into the corporate fund, in lieu of the common property so dispensed, and inures to the benefit of those who drink or smoke, as well as to those who do not. This money goes to the support of the club, and, if there be a profit, lessens the burdens upon those members who do not indulge in a use of this species of club property. As said by the Supreme Court of Oregon in State v. Kline, 50 Or. 426, 93 Pac. 237: "While the cases cannot be reconciled, the current as well as the weight of authority is undoubtedly in favor of the rule that the distribution and consumption of liquors in a club by its members in the manner above stated is a sale, and a violation of laws of the nature stated"—the manner of distribution therein being not unlike that in the case under consideration. In Manning v. Canon City, 45 Colo. 571, 101 Pac. 978, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 192, the Supreme Court of Colorado says in reference to the dispensing of liquor by a club to its members for a consideration: "The money that is received is used to replenish the treasury of the club, and in buying other liquors or supplies. The member, assuming that he has an interest in it, has but a minute interest; and, when he exchanges his money for a quantity of liquor, he pays for his minute interest and the interest of each of the other members. * * * When the members of the club clothe the board of control with the authority to dispose of liquor belonging to the club, they relinquish their right to have the entire property of the club remain intact for joint use, occupancy, and enjoyment of all the members, and make such board their agents to dispose of the liquor, and, in our opinion, such disposal by the board is a sale pure and simple." It is settled law that a sale is an agreement by which one of two contracting parties, called the seller, gives a thing and passes title, in exchange for a certain price in current money, to the other party, who is called the buyer or purchaser, who on his part agrees to pay such price.

We recognize no distinction between a transfer by a corporation or partnership, of which the buyer is a member, of a portion of the corporate or partnership property for a consideration, and that of any other purchase or sale of property. In both instances the title to specific property passes for a consideration, and the transaction is a sale. If we are correct in the views just expressed, the transaction here involved is comprehended within subdivision 33, c. 2, of the charter.

[2] Aside from this, however, the charter authorizes the licensing of places not prohibited by law that may require special police surveillance, and that may be prejudicial to public morals and the general welfare. This court, upon the authorities cited, has heretofore held in Re Kidd, 5 Cal. App. 159, 89 Pac. 987, that there is no inherent right in a citizen to sell intoxicating liquors; and certainly there should be no question as to the necessity for police surveillance over places dispensing spirituous liquors. The evils which may result therefrom may not be as aggravated as those which would follow the keeping of a public house or bar for a like purpose, but the possibility of evil necessitates police control, and the character of this control is a legislative matter. In the case at bar we see nothing as indicating the unreasonable character of the control exercised. There is nothing in the ordinance interfering with the social relations between members of a club, nor restricting them in any respect, except as to their engaging in a traffic the effect of which may be injurious. That the legislative body may absolutely prohibit the sale of liquor, even by clubs, is unquestioned, and this right and power to prohibit comprehends the lesser power of control. The Constitution confers police power upon the municipal authorities when not in conflict with general laws. There is nothing in this ordinance conflicting with general laws. Within proper police regulations, it is within the province of a municipality to regulate its local affairs, and it is the duty of the court to uphold such regulations, except it manifestly appears that rights secured to a citizen have been contravened. There is no right sought to be controlled by this ordinance other than the right to traffic in intoxicating liquors, which is not an inherent right in the citizen. This ordinance, therefore, being exercised only for the purpose of protecting public safety, the public health and the public morals, is in our opinion, a valid enactment. Conceding that a man's club in certain instances is the only fireside of many of the members, nevertheless, the right to dispense for pay intoxicating liquors even at the fireside is a proper subject of police regulation. Whether or not a necessity existed for this ordinance is a matter for the city council, and not for the court. There is nothing in the ordinance directed to any acts of the association except those which from their nature may be prejudicial to good order and injurious to the public welfare.

In our opinion, the ordinance is a valid exercise of the police power and reasonable, and the action of the municipal authorities in relation thereto should be sustained.

The writ is denied.

Ex parte ROSS. (Cr. 231.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 18, 1911.)

HABEAS CORPUS (§ 85*)—DISCHARGE OF ACCUSED BOUND OVER FOR TRIAL—RECORD.

Where the evidence on a preliminary examination of accused is not authenticated, on habeas corpus by him for his discharge from custody under a warrant binding him over, the writ must be denied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Dec. Dig. § 85.*]

Habeas corpus by Charles E. Ross for his discharge from custody under a warrant binding him over to answer for crime. Denied.

Conkling & Brown, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. The writ must be denied for various reasons: First, the evidence had upon the preliminary examination is not authenticated in any manner. Second, while the aggressive acts of defendant were directed toward a third party, they were done in the presence of the officer, and so terrorized him that he was prevented from discharging a duty, and the effect of which was to resist such officer. As to the other offense of assault with a deadly weapon, it may be, if the case of People v. Sylva, 143 Cal. 62, 76 Pac. 814, is to be followed as a correct exposition of the law, that upon a final trial it might be held insufficient to warrant a conviction of the exact offense charged, although not of lesser offenses embraced therein. But upon a preliminary hearing we regard the unauthenticated evidence presented as insufficient, even if authenticated, to warrant the writ.

Assuming that reasonable grounds are shown to warrant the magistrate in binding the petitioner over, the bail is not excessive.

Writ denied.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 425*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—ASSESSMENT FOR BENEFITS —STATUTORY PROVISIONS — "PROPERTY"— "LAND."

Laws 1903, p. 376, relating to street openings, requires by section 15 that each lot, piece, or parcel of land be designated upon a diagram as a basis for assessments. Section 17 requires the amount of assessment to be set opposite each lot, piece, or parcel of land which under section 20 is made a lien upon the property assessed. These sections and sections 23 and 26, use the terms "property," "lands," and "each lot, piece or parcel of land," interchangeably. Held that, in requiring the superintendent of streets to assess the benefits from street improvements on the property of any street railroad within the assessment district, the word "property" was used in a limited sense and as referring to that species of property designated as "land," which as defined by Civ. Code, § 659, is "the solid material of the earth," and hence there was no authority for an assessment against the "ties, tracks, poles, rails and switches" as such or apart from the franchise.

Laws 1903, p. 376, relating to opening and widening of streets, provides by section 16 that the superintendent of streets upon receiving a diagram shall assess the cost of an improvement upon the land in the district, including the property of any railroad. Held, in view of Civ. Code, § 3541, declaring that an interpretation which gives effect is preferred to one which makes void, that as all railroad land other than rights of way was subject to assessment under the general language used, it was intended to assess its rights of way, whether consisting of an easement or title in fee, and that the use of the street for the purposes specified in its franchise constituted a piece or parcel of land within the meaning of the act subject to assessment for resulting benefits.

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 425*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—PROPERTY LIABLE TO ASSESSMENT — STREET RAILROADS — TIES, TRACKS, AND POLES.

Where a street railroad's use of a street for the purposes specified in its franchise constitutes a piece or parcel of land within the meaning of that term as used in the street opening act (Laws 1903, p. 376), and as such subject to assessment for benefits, the assessment of its franchise constituted also an assessment of the "ties, tracks, poles and switches" included in the greater term franchise, and the specific mention of them was surplusage.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by the Los Angeles Pacific Company against A. A. Hubbard and others, constituting the Board of Public Works of the City of Los Angeles, to enjoin the sale of its tracks, etc., for an unpaid assessment for a street improvement. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

John W. Shenk, City Atty., and Charles D. Houghton, Deputy City Atty., for appellants. Gurney E. Newlin and J. W. McKinley (Roy V. Reppy, of counsel), for respondent.

SHAW, J. In proceedings had and taken by the city of Los Angeles for the purpose of opening and widening Sixteenth street, pursuant to the provisions of the street opening act of 1903, an assessment for the cost of the proposed improvement was levied against the lands and property located within the boundaries of the district as specified in the ordinance of intention. Among other assessments was one levied upon certain property of plaintiff within the district so established, which assessment so made was as follows: "All ties, tracks, poles, wires, switches, franchises, etc., used in operating an electric street railway on Sixteenth street, between the west line of Figueroa street prolonged southerly across Sixteenth street and the intersection of said electric street railway tracks with the electric street railway tracks of the Los Angeles Interurban Railway Company at Georgia street, and between the intersection of the said electric street railway tracks with the electric street railway tracks of the Los Angeles Interurban Railway Company at Burlington avenue and the east line of Pacific avenue prolonged southerly across Sixteenth street." Plaintiff refused to pay the assessment, and the property so assessed was advertised for sale on account of delinquency in the payment thereof, whereupon this action was instituted, praying that defendants as said board of public works be perpetually enjoined from making such sale. Judgment went for plaintiff, and defendants appeal therefrom on the judgment roll. The property assessed constitutes a part of an electric railroad owned and operated by plaintiff within and extending from the city to points outside thereof.

The chief ground urged in support of a reversal involves the question as to whether the property described is subject to an assessment under the act pursuant to the provisions of which the proceedings were had. Appellants base their right to make the assessment upon section 16 of the act, which requires the street superintendent, upon delivery to him of a diagram made by the city engineer showing "each separate lot, piece, or parcel of land within the assessment district," together with the dimensions of each such parcel (Id., § 15), to "assess the total expense of the proposed improvement upon and against the lands, including the property of any railroad or street railroad within said assessment district, * * * in proportion to the benefits to be derived from said improvement."

[1] "Property" is a generic term, and, since it includes anything which may be the subject of ownership (Civ. Code, § 654), its meaning in a given case, and whether or not limited in application, must be determined by ascertaining the sense in which it is used.

[2] It is apparent from a reading of the act that the Legislature used the term "property" as applying to land only. Indeed, throughout the act, the words "property," "lands," and "each lot, piece, or parcel of land" are used interchangeably. Section 15 requires each lot, piece, or parcel of land to be designated upon a diagram, which diagram forms the basis for the acts of the superintendent in making the assessment. Section 17 prescribes the manner of making the assessment, the amount of which shall be set opposite each "lot, piece, or parcel of land" which assessment (section 20) shall be a lien upon "the property against which it is made." Upon offering the property for sale for delinquent assessments, it shall be sold (section 23) to the one who will take the "least quantity of land" and pay the assessment, and to whom the street superintendent shall execute a certificate of sale (section 26), "setting forth a description of the property sold." These and other provisions clearly indicate that in requiring the superintendent of streets to assess the "property of any railroad or street railroad within said assessment district" the Legislature used the word "property" in a limited sense, and as having reference to that species of property only designated as land, which is "the solid material of the earth." Civ. Code, § 659. Hence it follows there was no authority for the action of the superintendent of streets in levying an assessment against the "ties, tracks, poles, rails and switches" as such, entering into the construction of plaintiff's street railroad and used in the operation thereof. He might with equal propriety have assessed the buildings and improvements erected upon a lot or tract of land located in the district. The land, not the improvements thereon, is subject to assessment for the cost of widening a street, under the street opening act of 1903.

[3] Included in the assessment was the franchise, whereby was granted the right to construct, maintain, and operate plaintiff's railroad along and over that portion of the street within the boundaries of the district. The appeal of the North Beach & Mission Railroad Co., 32 Cal. 499, cited with approval in subsequent cases, is authority for the statement that such right constitutes an estate in the land of the street. In discussing a like question involving an assessment for benefits accruing to a street railroad in the widening of Kearny street in San Francisco, the court said: "Thus it appears that the appellant has acquired an interest in the soil in Kearny street; that it consists in the location of the road in the street, its right to lay down rails and attach them to the soil, and to run its cars over them for profit; its right to the exclusive use of them and the streets, so far as is necessary for the purpose, in the mode prescribed; that this interest is property—an interest in the land—and that it is real estate, and the rails thus laid down, attached to the soil and annexed to the easement became themselves a part of the land—of the estate of the company—and that, in those states where no special provision is made for taxing this species of property in a different mode, it is assessed as real estate in the same manner, and upon the same principles, as land, as if the company owned the land itself upon which the track is laid to the extent of its interest in it. * * * It is as immovably established on the particular portion of the earth as the lot occupied by stores fronting on the same street, and the estate in the one can no more be enjoyed away and apart from its fixed locality than the estate in the other." See, also, Stockton G. & E. Co. v. San Joaquin Co., 148 Cal. 313, 83 Pac. 54, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174.

[4] That a street railroad company operating its line along and over a street under a franchise so to do may be largely benefited by the widening of the street, and may therefore be required to pay the cost of such improvement in proportion to the benefits received, must be conceded. Appeal of N. B. M. R. R. Co., supra. Indeed, the proposition is admitted by learned counsel for respondent, who, however, contends that the payment of such benefits cannot be enforced by sale and conveyance of a part of the right of way essential to the operation of a street railroad in the interest of the public; that to thus dismember and break up the entirety and utility of the roa(as a line of travel would impair the paramount rights of the public therein to have the same operated in execution of an important public trust. This contention finds apparent support in numerous authorities cited by respondent. State v. District Court of Ramsey County, 31 Minn. 354, 17 N. W. 954; Seattle v. Seattle Electric Co., 48 Wash. 599, 94 Pac. 194, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 486; In re City of Seattle, 49 Wash. 109, 94 Pac. 1075; Seattle v. Seattle Electric Co., 54 Wash. 460, 103 Pac. 807; N. Jersey St. Ry. Co. v. Mayor of Jersey City, 68 N. J. Law, 140, 52 Atl. 300; So. Cal. Ry. Co. v. Workman, 146 Cal. 80, 79 Pac. 586, 82 Pac. 79. An examination of these cases, however, shows that none are in point, for the reason that in all of them the right to make the assessment was considered under statutes providing in general terms only for assessing property for local improvements.

[5] The question is not an open one in this state, it having been held by the Supreme Court (Southern Cal. Ry. Co. v. Workman, 146 Cal. 80, 79 Pac. 586, 82 Pac. 79) that the right of way of a railroad fronting and abutting upon a street is not subject to assessment for the cost of improving the street under the general language used in the Vrooman act.

[6, 7] As to all lands owned by a railroad within the improvement district, other than rights of way over which its road is operated, and which are essential to such operation, the general language of section 16 of the act in question, directing the street superintendent to assess the cost of the improvement upon the lands in the district would apply with equal force as to lands held in private ownership; and hence, if this was all that was intended, there could be no purpose in inserting the words, "including the property of any railroad or street railroad" within the district. Some effect must be given this language. Civ. Code, § 3541. We perceive no constitutional objection to an act of the Legislature providing for the assessment of all or a part of the right of way, whether owned in fee by the railroad, or consisting merely of an easement, to cover benefits received as a result of the widening of a street; and, since the words inserted in the act constitute express authority and direction to the street superintendent to assess the property of railroads or street railroads within the district, and inasmuch as all land other than rights of way in the district owned by a railroad is clearly subject to assessment under the general language used, it must have been the intent of the Legislature to provide for the assessing of such rights of way, whether the same consisted of an easement of title in fee, where the property would be benefited by the widening of the street. We are therefore of the opinion that the right of plaintiff to the use of the street for the purposes specified in the grant of its franchise constituted a piece or parcel of land within the meaning of the term as used in the street-opening act of 1903, and that such property was subject to assessment for benefits accruing to it by reason of the opening of the street. We perceive no insuperable difficulty in making a diagram delineating thereon that part occupied by the railroad for the purpose granted, nor in making a sale to the one who would take the least part of the property assessed, as directed in section 25 of the act.

[8] Since the easement created constituted a piece or parcel of land, it must follow that the improvements, consisting of poles, wires, ties, rails, etc., constructed thereon and affixed to the land pursuant to the terms of the grant and necessary to the use of the easement for the purpose granted, must be deemed a part of such piece or parcel of land. Appeal of North Beach & Mission R. R. Co., supra, and cases therein cited. The assessment of the franchise, a term used to designate plaintiff's estate in the land, constituted an assessment of all the property included in the term "land," when applied to plaintiff's interest in the street. The greater includes the less, and since the "ties, tracks, poles and switches" were included in the term "franchise," upon which the assessment was levied, the specific mention of these improvements must be deemed surplusage, and, while unauthorized by statute, gives no ground for enjoining the sale. Any objection to the form or amount of the assessment should be made to the council, which, by section 19 of the act, is authorized to correct, change, or modify the same. We think it clearly appears that it was the intent of the Legislature that the rights of way of railroads, whether owned in fee or otherwise, should be assessed for the cost of widening streets in proportion to the benefits inuring to such property as a result of the improvement made. That it might, as suggested by counsel, have devised a better means of enforcing the payment of the assessment, we have no doubt.

The judgment is reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by C. D. Brown against Harry Coffee. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Rehearing denied in Supreme Court (121 Pac. 311).

George E. Whitaker, for appellant. W. W. Kaye, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to recover $967.87, an alleged balance due on account. The complaint avers that plaintiff, at the special instance and request of defendant, performed work and labor and furnished materials in doing sundry carpenter work, the reasonable value of which was $1,467.87, upon which defendant paid the sum of $500. The answer denied the material allegations of the complaint, but admitted the existence of a balance due to plaintiff of $369. Judgment went for plaintiff in the sum of $809.73 and costs, from which defendant appeals.

As disclosed by the record, defendant was fitting up a storeroom in Bakersfield, and entered into a contract with plaintiff whereby the latter was to make certain repairs and reconstruct the front of the storeroom in accordance with certain plans and specifications therefor, as made by one Jones, an architect employed by defendant to prepare the same. Plaintiff entered upon the performance of the work, and, after proceeding therewith for a time, was employed to do certain other work in and about the storeroom, which work it appears was to be done by day labor, and as to the performance of which no price was agreed upon. The court found that, after plaintiff had entered upon the performance of this contract, "the plaintiff and the defendant entered into an agreement whereby the said contract was altered, so that the plaintiff agreed to furnish said labor and materials to the defendant as aforesaid, and the defendant agreed to pay therefor the reasonable value thereof." Appellant's contention is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the court in making the finding.

[1] Respondent has filed no points or authorities in opposition to the contention of appellant; his counsel merely suggesting that the appeal should be dismissed for the reason that the same was taken more than 60 days after the entry of the judgment. Hence it is claimed this court is without jurisdiction to review the decision on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence, in support of which he directs our attention to section 939, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that only in cases where the appeal is taken within 60 days from the entry of judgment can the sufficiency of the evidence to support the decision be reviewed. The appeal, however, is not taken under section 939, but under the alternative method as provided by sections 941a and 941b, Code of Civil Procedure. The latter section provides that any person having the right to appeal may do so by filing the notice designated therein, which notice "may be filed at any time after the rendition of the judgment, order or decree, but the same must be filed within sixty days after notice of entry of said judgment, order or decree has been served upon the attorneys of record appearing in said cause or proceeding; provided, however, that if no notice of entry of judgment be given, the notice must, nevertheless, be filed, under any circumstances, not later than six months after the entry of the judgment, order or decree." An inspection of the record fails to disclose that any notice of the entry of judgment was ever served upon the attorneys of record appearing in said cause for defendant. Hence, in the absence of the service of such notice, the appeal being taken within six months from the entry of judgment, it was had within due time. Having been taken within time, appellant, by virtue of the provisions of section 941c, Code of Civil Procedure, is entitled to have any question reviewed upon such appeal which could be reviewed upon an appeal taken within 60 days from the entry of judgment and pursuant to the provisions of section 939, Code of Civil Procedure. It thus appears there is no merit in respondent's suggestion.

[2-6] "The burden of establishing a novation is upon the party who asserts its existence." Netterstrom v. Gallistel, 110 Ill. App. 352. The only evidence tending in the slightest degree to establish the fact in controversy was that of Johnson, plaintiff's foreman, who testified that while the work was in progress, and owing to the difficulty of keeping the workmen's time, some of whom were doing the contract work on the store front and others engaged in work not covered by or included in the contract, he said to Jones, defendant's architect: "I can't keep track of the separate time here. The store front, I gave you a figure on that. And we talked it over, and I says, 'It would be better to turn it into day's work,' and Mr. Jones says: 'Yes, I believe it will. I will speak to Mr. Coffee.' And the very next day Mr. Jones told me that Mr. Coffee said it was agreeable to him to turn everything into day's work and cut out the contract, because we was so mixed up we couldn't work on the contract continuously, as we put in a tile floor, and we were delayed then a little on the front. So we came to the understanding between us that we would turn it all into day's work." Neither plaintiff nor his foreman claimed to have had any conversation upon the subject with defendant, although he was in and about the building frequently. Nor is there any evidence that Coffee, the defendant, was ever informed of the alleged conversation. It is flatly denied by Jones, who says he never made any such agreement with Johnson, and never informed Mr. Coffee, the defendant, of the making thereof; nor did the latter ever assent thereto. Nevertheless the testimony of plaintiff's foreman in support of the finding must be given the same weight as though it was uncontradicted. This for the reason that, where there is a conflict of evidence upon any issue, the conclusion of the trial court thereon will not be disturbed on appeal. Conceding the conversation as related by Johnson sufficient to constitute a novation of the contract, nevertheless, since defendant personally was not a party to it, he could not be bound thereby, unless it be made to appear that he had authorized Jones as his agent to assent thereto. In the absence of any aid from respondent's counsel, we have examined the record and fail to find therein any evidence tending to establish the fact that Jones had authority to assent to a change in the terms of the contract, the effect of which was to release plaintiff from his obligation to do the work for the stipulated sum agreed upon between him and defendant. The evidence discloses no acts on the part of defendant which would justify plaintiff in assuming that Jones possessed such power. Both defendant and Jones testified that the latter was not so authorized. The fact that Jones was an architect employed by defendant to draw the plans and specifications under which the work was done, and engaged to superintend the work and see that it was performed in compliance with such plans and specifications, conferred upon him no implied power to change the contract. Such power was wholly beyond the scope of his agency. It would be a dangerous proposition to hold that the employment of one as an architect and superintendent of construction of a building conferred upon him by implication the authority to change, modify, or alter the contracts entered into between the owner and the contractor. Gerrish v. Maher, 70 Ill. 470; 31 Cyc. 1644; Lawrence v. Johnson, 64 Ill. 351. Neither does the record disclose any acts upon the part of defendant which would estop him from disputing any assumed authority by Jones to make the contract on behalf of defendant. It is true that defendant knew plaintiff was engaged in the prosecution of the work upon the store front, but he was justified in presuming this work was being done under the contract therefor which he had made with plaintiff. Haubert v. Mausshardt, 89 Cal. 436, 26 Pac. 899.

The finding is not supported by the evidence, and without such finding the judgment cannot stand. It is therefore reversed.

1. Appeal and Error (§ 348*)—Time for Taking—Notice of Judgment.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 941b, authorizing notice of appeal within 60 days after notice of entry of the judgment appealed from, or within six months after entry of the judgment, if notice of the judgment be not given, before respondent can object to a review of the evidence on an appeal, taken within six months on the ground that the appeal was not taken within the 60-day limit, he must show giving of notice of entry of the judgment.

2. Appeal and Error (§ 1082*)—Review—Questions Not Raised on Intermediate Appeal.

Where a respondent, who objected in the District Court of Appeal to review of the evidence on the ground that the appeal was not taken within 60 days after notice of entry of the judgment appealed from as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 941b, failed to show giving of such notice, he is not entitled to establish that fact on rehearing in the Supreme Court.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by C. D. Brown against Harry Coffee. From a judgment of the District Court of Appeal (121 Pac. 309) reversing a judgment in favor of plaintiff, he moves for rehearing in Supreme Court. Rehearing denied.

George E. Whitaker, for appellant. W. W. Kaye, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. [1, 2] The appeal in this case was properly taken to the District Court of Appeal, where the judgment in favor of plaintiff was reversed upon the sole ground that a material finding of fact was unsupported by the evidence. Defendant objected in that court to any review or consideration of the evidence on the ground that the appeal was only from the judgment and that it had not been taken within 60 days after notice of the entry thereof. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 941a, 941b, 941c. But he furnished no evidence that he had ever given such notice, and his objection was for that reason disregarded. We think it was correctly held by the appellate court that the respondent should have furnished proof of the service of a notice which would have prevented a review of the evidence on the appeal. And if he desired relief after judgment from the consequences of his omission to supply the evidence which he offers now in support of his application for a rehearing in this court, he should have sought that relief in the court having original jurisdiction of the appeal, and of all questions essential to its decision. This he failed to do, and by his petition to this court asks, in effect, for a first hearing of a question which should have been first determined in the District Court of Appeal. We are unwilling to encourage a practice so irregular and so inconvenient.

Rehearing denied.

BRESETTE v. E. B. & A. L. STONE CO.

(S. F. 5,771.)

1. Master and Servant (§ 217*)—Injury to Servant—"Assumption of Risk."

A complaint for injuries to an employé while oiling a rock crusher, which alleges that the employé's coat sleeve was caught in uncovered gearing over which it was necessary for him to reach in working as oiler, that the employer negligently failed to warn the employé, who was inexperienced, as to the danger, and negligently set the employé to work in a place of danger, but which does not intimate that the exposed gearing was not obvious, shows, as a matter of law, that the employé assumed the risk, within the rule recognized by Civ. Code, § 1970, that an employé, understanding the dangers incident to the defective condition of machinery, assumes the risk, where he continues in the use thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 574–600; Dec. Dig. § 217.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 589–591; vol. 8, pp. 7584, 7585.]

2. Master and Servant (§ 260*)—Injury to Servant—Assumption of Risk—Pleadings.

Where specific allegations show that the employé must have known of defects in machinery, causing injury, and the danger therefrom, the complaint is demurrable, though it contains a general allegation of the absence of knowledge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 260.*]

3. Master and Servant (§§ 101, 102*)—Obligation of Master—Safe Place of Employment.

The requirement that the place of employment shall be reasonably safe must be considered in connection with the rule as to the assumption by an employé of known and understood risks.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 173; Dec. Dig. §§ 101, 102.*]

4. Master and Servant (§ 154*)—Injury to Servant—Negligent Failure to Instruct.

Where an employé knew and understood the danger of oiling machinery, arising from the fact that he was required to work near unguarded gearing, the failure of the employer to instruct him as to such danger was not actionable negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 308; Dec. Dig. § 154.*]

5. Master and Servant (§ 217*)—Injury to Servant—Negligence—Assumption of Risk.

Though an employer was guilty of negligence in failing to provide guards for the protection of his employés, he was not liable for injuries to an employé in consequence thereof, where the employé knew and understood the danger, thereby assuming the risk.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 574–600; Dec. Dig. § 217.*]

6. Master and Servant (§ 219*)—Injury to Servant—Assumption of Risk.

Where a danger was so open and obvious that, considering the age, intelligence, experience, judgment, and discretion of an employé, he ought, in the exercise of reasonable care, to have known and appreciated it, he assumed the risk.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 610–624; Dec. Dig. § 219.*]

7. Master and Servant (§ 256*)—Injury to Servant—Complaint—Requisites.

A complaint, in an action for injuries to an employé, which affirmatively shows contributory negligence or assumption of risk is demurrable.

E. B. & A. L. Stone Company. From a judgment for defendant, rendered on sustaining a demurrer to the amended complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Costello & Costello, for appellant. Heller, Powers & Ehrman (Sydney Schlesinger, of counsel), for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an action for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been suffered by reason of the negligence of defendant. A demurrer was sustained to plaintiff's second amended complaint, and judgment went for defendant. This is an appeal by plaintiff from such judgment.

[1] The complaint contained two counts. Facts shown by each are as follows: Defendant was the owner of a rock crusher, which it was operating. On November 15, 1908, plaintiff, who had up to that time followed the occupation of a barber, and had never at any time had any experience in the care and operation of machinery, was employed by defendant as oiler in and about said rock crusher. He continued in the service of defendant as such oiler from November 15, 1908, to January 10, 1909, being at all times under the supervision and direction of one Patrick Martin, the manager and general superintendent of defendant. On said January 10th while performing his duties as such oiler, he was severely injured, "while in the act of reaching over the gear wheel, in motion, with his left hand, in order to locate the oil hole preparatory to oiling the said machinery, by having his jumper sleeve on his left arm caught in certain gearing," with the result that his left arm was drawn into said gearing, up to the left shoulder, and injured to such an extent as to require amputation. The gearing was without a cover and wholly unprotected by guards or otherwise.

The first count alleged negligence on defendant's part in failing to instruct plaintiff of the dangers attending his employment. It alleged the following facts: Defendant had full knowledge of his inexperience in the matter of machinery. Nevertheless it never properly instructed him, and never warned him "as to the dangers or hazards connected with the said machinery." When he was instructed as to his duties in the matter of oiling, the said machinery was in motion, and he was following these instructions when injured. Defendant carelessly and negligently failed to instruct him as to the proper manner of oiling the machinery, and never "cautioned plaintiff as to the dangerous character of said machinery." His injuries "were caused by reason of defendant's failure to warn said plaintiff of the dangers attending the employment," and by reason of plaintiff's lack of knowledge of said dangers.

The second count alleged negligence producing the injuries in the failure of defendant to furnish a suitable and safe place for plaintiff's work. The material allegations were as follows: "That on the 10th day of January, 1909, the said plaintiff, as the hired servant and workman of said defendant corporation in and about the said rock crusher, was negligently, imprudently, and carelessly set to work in and about the said rock crusher in an unsuitable and unsafe place, and very near and by certain dangerous, unfenced, and unguarded machinery; that said defendant well knew that the said place at which said plaintiff was set to work was dangerous and unsafe; that said plaintiff was standing in the only practicable place in which he could stand to oil said machinery, and in close proximity to said dangerous, unprotected, and unguarded gearing, whereby the said plaintiff was exposed to great and unnecessary risks not required by his employment; that the said defendant, disregarding its duty to provide a safe place for said plaintiff to work in, and disregarding its duty to use reasonable and ordinary care for the safety of said plaintiff, nevertheless ordered said plaintiff to work in and about said unsafe place, and plaintiff was injured by reason of the unsafeness and dangerous condition of said place in which he was set to work; that plaintiff had no knowledge of the unsafe condition of the said place in which he was required to work in and about said rock crusher, and was never at any time warned or informed as to the unsafe condition of said place."

[2] The allegations of the amended complaint, hereinbefore substantially set forth, show that the sole reason for the unfortunate injury to plaintiff was that he allowed the sleeve of his coat to catch in certain exposed and uncovered gearing over which it was necessary for him to reach in the performance of his work as an oiler. The complaint in one count is substantially that the defendant was negligent in not warning him, he being a man inexperienced in the use of machinery, as to the danger and the necessity for care in the performance of this duty; and in the second count that the defendant was negligent in setting him to work in a place dangerous by reason of the fact that the gearing about which he was compelled to perform his work was unprotected and unguarded. There is absolutely nothing in the complaint to intimate that the exposed condition if this gearing was not obvious. Fairly construed, the allegations of the amended complaint affirmatively show that the only condition of the machinery having to do with plaintiff's injury was patent to any casual observer, and that any one, no matter how inexperienced he was in the use or knowledge of machinery, would necessarily know of the risk entailed in working over the gearing, and that if he allowed his hands or arms to come in contact with the gearing he would be severely injured. Whatever danger was attendant upon the performance of his duties by plaintiff in that place was clearly apparent to any one. That danger was the possibility of allowing his hands or arms to come in contact with the uncovered and unguarded gearing. That one's hands or arms will be hurt, if allowed to become involved in the cogs of moving machinery, is so apparent a fact that certainly any adult must know it. In spite of such a general allegation of the absence of knowledge on the part of the employé as we have in this case, a complaint is demurrable, if the specific allegations thereof show that he must have known of the defects and the danger therefrom. See 1 Labatt on Master and Servant, § 388; Cleveland, etc., Co. v. Powers, 173 Ind. 105, 88 N. E. 1073, 89 N. E. 485.

[3] Under these circumstances, even if we assume that there was any negligence on the part of defendant in respect to the matters alleged in either count, a complete answer to plaintiff's action is to be found in the law relative to assumption of risk, as it existed in this state at the time he received his injuries. With full knowledge of the alleged defect in the matter of the machinery, and with full understanding and appreciation of the dangers therefrom attendant upon the performance of his duties as oiler, he voluntarily entered upon the employment and continued therein to the time of his accident, a period of nearly two months, without making any complaint as to the conditions. As to such a situation, under the law as it was at the time of the accident, there is practically no disagreement among the authorities. The employé assumes the risk, and cannot recover for injuries resulting therefrom. This rule is recognized by section 1970 of the Civil Code, where it is provided that mere knowledge by an employé of the defective or unsafe character or condition of any machinery, etc., shall not be a bar to recovery, unless it shall also appear that the employé fully understood, comprehended, and appreciated the dangers incident to its use, and thereafter consented to use the same, or continued in the use thereof. It was not until the act of April 8, 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 796), was enacted that any attempt was made to abolish the defense of assumption of risk. The rule and its limitations have been fully discussed in various decisions of this court. See Long v. Coronado R. R. Co., 96 Cal. 269, 31 Pac. 170; Limberg v. Glenwood Lumber Co., 127 Cal. 598, 60 Pac. 176, 49 L. R. A. 33; Murdock v. Oakland, etc., Co., 128 Cal. 22, 60 Pac. 469; Anderson v. Seropian, 147 Cal. 201, 208, 81 Pac. 521; Sanborn v. Madera Flume, etc., Co., 70 Cal. 261, 266, 11 Pac. 710; Vestner v. Northern Cal., etc., Co., 158 Cal. 284, 289, 110 Pac. 918; Bush v. Wood, 8 Cal. App. 647, 655, 97 Pac. 709. See, also, 1 Labatt on Master and Servant, §§ 388, 393. As was said in Brett v. Frank & Co., 153 Cal. 272, 94 Pac. 1052: "The requirement that the place of employment shall be reasonably safe is itself always to be considered in connection with the rule of law as to the assumption by the employé of known and understood risks." There is nothing in the facts of this case, as disclosed by the complaint, to take it out of the operation of the rule precluding recovery. The facts shown by a fair construction of the allegations of the complaint present a case where the only inference that can reasonably be drawn is that plaintiff knew that the gearing over which he was to reach in doing his work was uncovered and unguarded, and understood and appreciated the risk and danger attendant upon the performance of his work under such conditions, and that he nevertheless voluntarily assumed his employment without any complaint as to the conditions, and continued therein to the time of the injury, a period of nearly two months, without any complaint or criticism of such conditions.

[4] In view of what has been shown as to the obviousness of the danger, it is also clear that the defendant was not guilty of negligence productive of injury in failing to instruct plaintiff as to such danger. There was nothing to tell him in this regard that he did not already know, or must be presumed to have known. In this connection, the language of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, in Wilson v. Mass. Cotton Mills, 169 Mass. 67, 47 N. E. 506, is pertinent. The court said: "The plaintiff's contention is that he was set to work on a dangerous machine without proper instructions. But it is difficult to see what the defendant's officers could have told him that he did not already know. It was apparent that the wheels were uncovered. They were certainly not bound to tell him that if he got his hand in the cogs he would be hurt. This any child of 10 would know."

[5] While, as to the matters alleged in the second count, it may be assumed that, even although there was no statute in this state requiring guards on such machinery as was here in use, a conclusion that defendant was guilty of negligence in failing to provide guards for the protection of its employés could be sustained, the answer to any claim of liability on account thereof is to be found in what we have said regarding the rule of assumption of risk.

[6] We have examined the cases cited by learned counsel for plaintiff, and find nothing therein in conflict with the views we have stated. For instance, in Larson v. Bloemer, 156 Cal. 752, 106 Pac. 62, a case specially relied upon, this court substantially said that the testimony was conflicting upon the question of the ignorance of plaintiff as to the dangers of her employment, and, in reply to the claim that the peril was so obvious that she must be presumed to have been fully cognizant of it, said that from the photograph of the mangle, and the explanation of its mechanism contained in the record, it appeared that plaintiff could not see the heated cylinder which produced so much of the damage suffered by her. Substantially, the case was held to be one where the evidence was of such nature as to support a conclusion that plaintiff did not appreciate the danger of her employment under the existing conditions. Similarly, in other cases earnestly relied upon by appellant, including that of Ingerman v. Moore, 90 Cal. 410, 27 Pac. 306, 25 Am. St. Rep. 138, there were circumstances sufficient to make the question of the plaintiff's want of knowledge and full appreciation of the danger and risk, under the existing conditions, one upon which reasonable persons might differ. In Jacobson v. Oakland Meat Co., 119 Pac. 653, likewise, there were special circumstances clearly avoiding the conclusion, as matter of law, that plaintiff had been guilty of contributory negligence. The cases cited by appellant from other jurisdictions are all distinguishable from the case at bar, with the possible exception of Thompson v. Edward P. Allis Co., 89 Wis. 523, 62 N. W. 527. The views expressed in the later case of Renne v. United States, etc., Co., 107 Wis. 305, 83 N. W. 473, on the question of the assumption of risk of an obvious peril, are not at all in conflict with our conclusion. The law, as we understand it, was correctly stated to the jury in that case in an instruction declaring that, if the danger "was such an open and obvious danger as that, considering his age, intelligence, experience, judgment, and discretion, he ought, in the exercise of reasonable and ordinary care, to have known and appreciated it, then the law is that the plaintiff assumed the risk of such danger, and that he cannot recover."

[7] We see no escape from the conclusion that the second amended complaint presented such a case as a matter of law, and that it therefore failed to state a cause of action. We are not to be understood as holding that it is essential for a plaintiff to anticipate in his complaint, either the defense of contributory negligence, or assumption of risk, by alleging facts negativing either, but are simply applying the well-established rule that, where the allegations of the complaint do affirmatively show contributory negligence or assumption by the plaintiff of the peril producing injury, the pleading fails to state a cause of action for damages.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.

GILBERT v. PECK. (L. A. 2,738.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 25, 1912.)

1. Appeal and Error (§ 699*)—Record—Instructions—Review.

Error assigned to the refusal of instructions cannot be considered, where there is no reference to the instructions in the substantive or narrative part of the bill of exceptions, and where in the specification of errors it merely appears that the court erred in refusing to give instructions set forth, since such a record does not afford evidence that the instructions were requested or refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2928-2930; Dec. Dig. § 699.*]

2. Landlord and Tenant (§ 278*)—Summary Removal of Tenant—Grounds.

Where a tenant ceased using the premises for a house of ill fame, the landlord could not thereafter summarily remove the tenant's property on the ground of the maintenance of a nuisance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Dec. Dig. § 278.*]

3. Landlord and Tenant (§ 278*)—Summary Removal of Tenant—Grounds.

A tenant, entering into possession of the premises in April, began at once to use them for a house of ill fame. In August she made preparations to move to another place, where she intended to open a similar establishment. On August 3d she went to that place to secure a location, returning three days later. During her absence she left two persons in charge of the premises. Three days later she again departed, leaving the premises unoccupied and locking the door. They were so unoccupied until August 13th, when the landlord's agents entered and removed the tenant's property. Held, that the removal was at the risk of the landlord, and he was liable for the destruction of the goods by fire at the place where they were stored.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. § 1179; Dec. Dig. § 278.*]

4. Appeal and Error (§ 1066*)—Harmless Error—Erroneous Instructions.

Where, in an action against a landlord for summarily removing the tenant's property, the evidence showed that the tenant's unlawful use of the premises had ceased at the time of the removal, the error, if any, in an instruction that the tenant's use of the premises for immoral purposes terminated her possession under the lease and rendered her a tenant at will and did not justify the landlord in going on the premises during the tenant's temporary absence and removing her property therefrom, was not prejudicial to the landlord.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4220; Dec. Dig. § 1066.*]

5. Landlord and Tenant (§ 278*)—Termination of Tenant's Right of Possession.

A past unlawful use of premises by a tenant does not, in the absence of notice, demand, or other action on the part of the landlord, evidencing an intent to claim a forfeiture, terminate the tenant's right to possession so as to justify a forcible entry and invasion of her property rights during the term of the lease.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Dec. Dig. § 278.*]

6. Landlord and Tenant (§ 278*)—Summary Removal by the Landlord of the Tenant's Property — Damages—Actions.

Where the complaint, in an action by a tenant against the landlord for his summary removal of the tenant's property on the leased premises, stated a cause of action for the conversion by the landlord of the tenant's property, the tenant could recover therefor, though the complaint contained allegations of facts warranting a summary proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. § 1159 et seq.

7. Action (§ 35*)—Exclusive Remedies—Forcible Entry—Statutory Remedy.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1159 et seq., defining forcible entry and detainer and authorizing summary proceedings, does not make a forcible entry proceeding the exclusive remedy, where facts show a cause of action independent of the Code.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Action, Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

8. Landlord and Tenant (§ 278*)—Summary Removal by Landlord of Tenant's Property—Damages—Punitive Damages.

A landlord unlawfully removed from the leased premises personal property of the tenant consisting of furniture, jewelry, and a certificate of deposit. The furniture was stored in a warehouse, where it was later destroyed by fire. The jewelry and the certificate of deposit were subsequently restored to the tenant, who made repeated demands for restitution. The landlord made no claim of any right to retain the jewelry and certificate of deposit, but did not surrender them until about three months after the removal, and not until the tenant had sought the aid of the district attorney, who communicated with the landlord. Held to authorize punitive damages against the landlord.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by Grace Gilbert against George H. Peck. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Miner P. Goodrich and Frank Karr, for appellant. W. A. Anderson, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The action was brought against four defendants to recover damages for the unlawful taking and withholding of personal property belonging to the plaintiff. At the trial there was a dismissal as to all the defendants except George H. Peck. The plaintiff had a verdict against him in the sum of $2,200. From the judgment entered on this verdict and from an order denying his motion for a new trial Peck appeals.

It appears in the record, without dispute, that in April, 1909, Peck, who was the owner of a three-story building in San Pedro, rented the third floor and a part of the second floor of the building to plaintiff at a monthly rental of $75. The tenancy was from month to month, running from the first to the last day of each calendar month. Plaintiff went into possession, and remained in possession until August, 1909. The rent for May and June was paid by her. She had, in the premises, a piano and certain furniture, as well as some jewelry and a certificate of deposit for $5,000. On the 13th of August, while the plaintiff was absent from San Pedro, and the premises were unoccupied, the defendant Peck, through his agents, entered the premises and removed therefrom the personal property above described. The furniture and piano were stored in a warehouse, where, some days later, they were destroyed by fire. The jewelry and the certificate of deposit were ultimately restored to the plaintiff. By her amended complaint the plaintiff alleged that the defendant, notwithstanding a demand for the return of the property, refused to return the same. She also charged oppression and malice, as a foundation for a claim for punitive damages. The jury returned, in addition to its general verdict, a special finding that the value of the furniture and the piano destroyed by fire was $1,200, leaving the balance of $1,000 to be accounted for as punitive damages.

[1] The defense was based on the ground that the plaintiff was using the premises as a house of prostitution. That she had so used them for a time was admitted. It was and is claimed by the appellant that such use of his property constituted a nuisance which he had a right to abate by taking possession of the rented premises and removing the plaintiff's property therefrom. Among the errors assigned is the refusal of the trial court to give to the jury various instructions embodying this theory. But such alleged refusal cannot be considered here. There is no reference to the instructions in question in the substantive or narrative part of the bill. All that appears is a series of declarations, in the specification of errors, to the effect that "the court erred in refusing to give the jury instruction 2 [and other numbers] offered on behalf of defendant, as follows" (quoting the alleged instruction). Such a record does not afford evidence that the instructions in question were requested or refused. Goldman v. Bashore, 80 Cal. 146, 22 Pac. 82; Ferrier v. Ferrier, 64 Cal. 23, 27 Pac. 960; Estate of Higgins, 156 Cal. 257, 104 Pac. 6.

[2] But this somewhat technical consideration is of no great importance here, since the propositions of law underlying the instructions claimed to have been refused are presented for decision on the defendant's exceptions to instructions shown to have been given by the court. Instruction 4 was as follows: "It appearing without dispute here that, at the time of the removal of plaintiff's property therefrom, the premises were not used for the purposes which she admits she had theretofore used them, there was not, then, at the time of such removal, in existence a nuisance which could justify the defendant or his agent in summarily removing plaintiff's property from the premises." If the facts were as stated by the court, we think there can be no criticism of the rule of law declared. The mere occupancy of the premises by the plaintiff and the presence therein of her household effects did not constitute a nuisance. The nuisance, if there was one, was created by the use of the premises for immoral purposes. When that use ceased, there was no longer any ground for claiming that a nuisance was being maintained. Whether or not the past misconduct of the plaintiff would have authorized the defendant to terminate the tenancy by proper legal procedure is a question not presented here. No such attempt was made. A notice to quit was served on plaintiff on July 7th, long before the defendant, as he claims, had any knowledge of the use to which the premises were being put. It was not put upon the ground of such use. As a notice of intention to terminate the lease, under either section 789 or section 1946 of the Civil Code, it was served too late to bring the plaintiff's tenancy to an end prior to the time of the entry complained of.

[3] The record shows that the court was fully justified in stating as an undisputed fact that at the time of the removal of plaintiff's goods she was no longer using the premises for purposes of prostitution. It appeared that she had gone into possession in April, 1909. That she at once commenced to maintain a house of ill fame was admitted. In August, 1909, she began to make preparations to move to Coalinga, where she intended to open a similar establishment. On August 3, 1909, she went to Coalinga to secure a location, returning on the 6th. During this absence she left a maid and one other person in charge of the premises. On the 9th she again departed for Coalinga, and on this occasion left the premises unoccupied, locking the door. They were so unoccupied until the 13th, when the defendant's agents entered and removed the plaintiff's property. These facts being uncontradicted, it appeared that, at the time of the taking of her property, the plaintiff had discontinued her unlawful use of the premises, and it necessarily followed, as declared by the court, that the defendant was not justified in removing her effects. Such removal was at his risk, and the destruction of the goods by fire threw the loss upon him.

[4] Complaint is made of instruction 2, in which the court told the jury, among other things, that plaintiff's use of the premises for immoral purposes terminated her possession under the lease, and rendered her a tenant at will. It may be questioned whether this was an entirely accurate definition of her status. But in view of the established fact that the unlawful use of the premises had ceased, the instruction cannot have been prejudicial to the appellant.

[5] The past unlawful use of the premises did not, in the absence of notice, demand, or other action on the part of the lessor evidencing an intent to claim a forfeiture, terminate the tenant's right of possession so as to justify a forcible entry and invasion of her property rights during the term of the hiring. Almy v. Greene, 13 R. I. 350; 18 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 379, 380. If she was rightfully in possession, it is not material whether she was correctly described as a tenant at will. Instruction 2 further declared that plaintiff's use of the premises for immoral purposes would not justify the defendant in going upon the premises during plaintiff's temporary absence and removing her effects therefrom. If this declaration referred to an unlawful use which had ceased at the time of the entry, we think, for the reasons above stated, that the court was right. If, on the other hand, the court was undertaking to declare the rights of the parties during the actual period of an immoral use of the premises, the instruction if erroneous, cannot have had any effect here, since the fact was, as the court in instruction 4 declared, that such use no longer existed at the time of the entry.

[6] The defendant objected to the introduction of any evidence on the ground that plaintiff's exclusive remedy was by an action under the forcible entry and detainer provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 1159 et seq. The objection was properly overruled. The complaint stated a good cause of action for the conversion of personal property. If there were also allegations of facts which would have warranted a summary proceeding under the code sections referred to, this would not bar the plaintiff of her right to maintain an ordinary action for damages.

[7] The Code itself does not undertake to make the forcible entry proceeding the exclusive remedy where facts showing a cause of action independent of the Code provisions are alleged, and we are cited to no authority supporting appellant's claim in this regard. Walker v. Chanslor, 153 Cal. 118, 94 Pac. 606, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 455, 126 Am. St. Rep. 61, relied on by appellant, merely holds that where the owner of real property, having the right of possession, makes a forcible entry expelling the person in wrongful possession without using more force than is necessary, the wrongful occupant cannot maintain an action of trespass, but is limited to his remedy under the statute for making forcible entry. See, also, Canavan v. Gray, 64 Cal. 5, 27 Pac. 788; Burnham v. Stone, 101 Cal. 165, 35 Pac. 627. This is based upon the ground that at common law the person so ousted had no right of action at all, and the statute gives him no new rights beyond those embraced in its terms. The doctrine has no application to an action brought by one in rightful possession. The complaint here alleged that plaintiff was entitled to the possession of the premises, and the objection to the reception of evidence in support of her claim for damages occasioned by an invasion of her right of property was without merit.

The testimony regarding the value of the property destroyed was conflicting. Without reciting it, we may say that there was substantial evidence to sustain the finding of the jury that the goods were worth $1,200.

[8] The award of punitive damages was also justified by the evidence. The plaintiff, notwithstanding repeated demands, was unable to obtain prompt restitution of her property. She was put off from time to time with excuses which the jury may well have viewed as mere pretexts. The defendant made no claim of any right to retain the jewelry and the certificate of deposit, but did not surrender these articles until October. In that month plaintiff sought the aid of the district attorney, who communicated with the defendant. The latter then deposited the certificate and the jewels in a bank, where he caused them to be attached on an alleged demand against the plaintiff. These circumstances, together with other matters which appear in the record, were ample to authorize the jury to infer that the defendant, in taking and retaining the property, was actuated by a spirit of malice and was seeking, not merely to enforce his rights, but to oppress the plaintiff. There is no merit in the point that, because no actual damages were recovered for the taking of the jewelry and the certificate, there could be no exemplary damages. The argument assumes that the exemplary damages were based on the taking of these items alone. But the taking of all the property was, as the jury may well have concluded, a single transaction, and the fact that part of it was returned does not prevent a recovery for exemplary damages in addition to the value of the part lost to plaintiff. Besides, the conduct of defendant with reference to the jewelry and the certificate might properly have been regarded by the jury as indicating the motive and spirit which actuated his taking of the other property. We see no error in the instructions on the subject of exemplary damages, and there is no ground for holding that the award was excessive.

The alleged errors in overruling objections to offered evidence were unimportant. They could not have worked any substantial injury to the appellant.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

Ex parte COOPER. (Cr. 1,718.)

1. ADULTERY (§ 1*)—CONSTRUCTION OF PENAL STATUTES.

The definition of adultery constituting cause for divorce, defined by Civ. Code, § 93, as the voluntary sexual intercourse of a married person with a person other than the offender's husband or wife, has been adopted in the construction of penal statutes including the word "adultery."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adultery, Dec. Dig. § 1.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 212–214].

2. ADULTERY (§ 1*)—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE—UNMARRIED WOMAN.

In the absence of statute sexual intercourse on the part of an unmarried woman does not constitute "adultery" on her part, but amounts simply to fornication; and hence an unmarried woman cannot be guilty of an offense under Pen. Code, § 269a, as amended March 21, 1911 (St. 1911, p. 426), providing that every person who lives in adultery is guilty of a misdemeanor; Civ. Code, § 93, defining adultery as the voluntary sexual intercourse of a married person with a person other than the offender's husband or wife.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adultery, Cent. Dig. §§ 1–6; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

3. ADULTERY (§ 3*)—AIDER AND ABETTOR—ACCOMPLICE—"PRINCIPAL."

Where the idea of guilt, on the part of an unmarried participant, of the offense of living in adultery is excluded by the terms of the statute defining the offense (Pen. Code, § 269a, as amended March 21, 1911 [St. 1911, p. 426]), it follows that such participant cannot be held punishable as being an aider and abettor in the offense, even though she be held to be an accomplice under Pen. Code, § 31, defining "principals" as all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, or who aid or abet its commission.

In Bank. Application by Grace Cooper for writ of habeas corpus, directed against the Chief of Police of the City of Los Angeles. Petitioner ordered discharged from custody.

Charles Scholz and William Freeman (S. S. McCahill, of counsel), for petitioner. Guy Eddie, City Prosecutor, and Frank W. Stafford, Deputy, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The petitioner is held in custody on a charge of violating the provisions of section 269a of the Penal Code, as amended March 21, 1911, which provides that "every person who lives in a state of cohabitation and adultery is guilty of a misdemeanor and punishable by a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year, or by both." The prosecution was instituted against her and one Claud C. Miller jointly, and the deposition upon which the warrant of arrest was issued and upon which the commitment for examination was based stated as follows: "That on the 27th day of December, 1911, at and in Los Angeles city, in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, the crime of cohabitation and adultery was committed by Claud C. Miller and Grace Cooper, who at the time and place last aforesaid did willfully and unlawfully live and cohabit one with the other in a state of cohabitation and adultery; the said defendant Claud C. Miller being then and there a married man, and the said Grace Cooper being then and there an unmarried woman; and the said Claud C. Miller and the said Grace Cooper not being married one to the other; and the said Grace Cooper at all times herein mentioned did know that he, the said Claud C. Miller, was a married man, and was married to a woman other than herself." The question upon which a decision is sought is whether upon these facts petitioner, being an unmarried woman, is guilty of the offense defined by the section above quoted.

Section 269b, Penal Code, as amended March 21, 1911, by the same act that amended said section 269a, provides: "If two persons, each being married to another, live together in a state of cohabitation and adultery, each is guilty of a felony and punishable by imprisonment in the state prison not exceeding five years." The origin of these two sections is an act entitled "An act to punish adultery," approved March 15, 1872 (Stats. 1871–72, p. 380), section 1 of which was the same as section 269a, except that the words "open and notorious" were contained therein, immediately preceding the words "cohabitation and adultery," and section 2 of said act was the same as the portion of section 269, above quoted, with the same exception. By act approved March 21, 1905 (Stats. 1905, p. 656), these two sections were incorporated in the Penal Code as sections 269a and 269b, and by an act approved March 21, 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 426), the two sections were amended by striking out the words "open and notorious." We have thus referred to the history of the legislation on this subject for the purpose of showing that the only purpose of the amendment of 1911 was to dispense with the element of the notoriety of the adulterous relation, which, under the law as it formerly existed, was as essential as the adulterous relation itself (People v. Salmon, 148 Cal. 303, 83 Pac. 42, 2 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1186, 113 Am. St. Rep. 268); and that, so far as the question before us is concerned, viz., whether an unmarried person can live in a state of "cohabitation and adultery," within the meaning of section 269a, we are in the same position that we would be, were we construing and ascertaining the intention of the Legislature in adopting the original act of 1871–72.

[1] It is to be observed that neither of the sections attempts any definition of the term "adultery," and we are without any definition thereof in the statutory law of this state, other than such as is found in section 93 of the Civil Code, where the adultery constituting cause for divorce is defined as follows: "Adultery is the voluntary sexual intercourse of a married person with a person other than the offender's husband or wife." This definition has been adopted in this state in the construction of penal statutes including the term "adultery." In People v. Stratton, 141 Cal. 604, 606, 75 Pac. 166, it was said: "Adultery is the sexual intercourse of a married person with a person other than the offender's husband or wife. Fornication is distinguished from adultery by the fact that the guilty person is not married." Again, in People v. Salmon, 148 Cal. 303, 305, 83 Pac. 42, 43 (2 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1186, 113 Am. St. Rep. 268), it was said: "Adultery is, as is well understood, sexual intercourse of one spouse with any one other than the other spouse." And it was expressly held by the District Court of Appeal of the Second district that, in view of this definition, an unmarried man could not live in a state of cohabitation and adultery, within the meaning of section 269a of the Penal Code. In re Sullivan on Habeas Corpus, 119 Pac. 526. It is to be borne in mind that section 93, Civil Code, which was a part of the original Code adopted in 1872, was enacted at the same session of the Legislature as that at which the original act to punish adultery, approved March 15, 1872, was enacted; and it is only reasonable to assume that the word "adultery" was used with the same meaning in both laws. As we have seen, section 93, Civil Code, has already been held to furnish the definition of adultery in the construction of penal statutes.

[2] We are satisfied that the overwhelming weight of modern authority is to the effect that, in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, participation in an act of sexual intercourse on the part of an unmarried woman does not constitute "adultery" on her part, but amounts simply to fornication. See Bishop on Statutory Crimes, § 654; 2 McClain on Crim. Law, § 1086; Bashford v. Wells, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 580, note; 1 Bouvier, Law Dic. 105; Buchanan v. State, 55 Ala. 154. This is not the rule favored in Wharton's Criminal Law, although the learned writer gives it as a definition obtaining in many jurisdictions; but it is expressly stated in a note to section 1720 of his work that, where the offense is restricted as it is by our Civil Code (section 93), an unmarried person cannot be guilty thereof by reason of mere participation in the act, either as principal or accessory. In many of the states, the Legislature has by express provision inserted in the statute making adultery a crime a declaration that an unmarried participant in illicit intercourse shall also be deemed guilty of the offense, thus recognizing the necessity of making some such provision, in order to bring such a participant within the meaning of the statute. Most of the decisions holding an unmarried participant guilty of the offense are based on such statutes. In view of our definition, such an unmarried participant, whatever the extent of his or her moral delinquency, is not guilty of "adultery." We think it very clear that our original act to punish adultery cannot be reasonably construed otherwise than as designed solely against the person guilty of "adultery," and no different design can reasonably be attributed to the amendments, in view of the obvious fact that the only object thereof was, as already shown, the elimination of the element of notoriety. It is to be borne in mind, too, that the latest amendments to this law were adopted by the Legislature after the decisions of this court as to the meaning of the term "adultery" in criminal statutes had been rendered, and presumably with full knowledge of such decisions. So far as the question we are considering is concerned, there is no material difference between "adultery" and "living in a state of adultery." It is only the adulterer who can live "in a state of adultery." The plain purpose of the whole act was simply to make the adulterer guilty of a public offense in all cases of living in a state of illicit intercourse, but to make the offense only a misdemeanor where the other participant was unmarried, and a felony where such other participant was also married.

[3] It is earnestly contended in the able brief filed by learned counsel for the state that, even if petitioner was not herself guilty of adultery, she was nevertheless a principal in the crime defined by section 269a, by reason of the fact that by her participation in the illicit intercourse she willfully and knowingly aided and abetted her married codefendant in the commission of his offense. In view of the provisions of section 31 of the Penal Code, we think that this would be true, if the section defining the offense (section 269a) did not exclude the idea of any criminal offense on the part of the unmarried participant in the illicit intercourse on account of such participation alone. Of course, an unmarried person might be guilty as a principal of this offense, under section 31 of the Penal Code, by aiding and assisting in its commission in some other way than by living in a state of illicit intercourse with a married person; but we are considering here simply such aid and assistance as are involved in the mere fact of participation in the illicit intercourse. The question in this connection is, not whether the unmarried party willfully and knowingly participating in such illicit intercourse is an accomplice of the married party thereto, but whether, assuming that he or she is an "accomplice," within the meaning of that term as used in our statute, it was nevertheless the design of the Legislature not to make such participation criminal and punishable. We are of the opinion that a fair and reasonable construction of the provisions of sections 269a and 269b of the Penal Code requires this conclusion. It is recognized both by Bishop and Wharton that such unmarried participant cannot be held, merely by reason of such participation, to be guilty as an aider or abettor, if the statute is in such terms as to exclude the consequence that both parties are to be punished. Bishop on Statutory Crimes, § 659; 2 Wharton, Crim. Law, § 1721. As Mr. Wharton puts it: "Of course, when, as in Pennsylvania, the offense is limited by statute to married persons, this reasoning fails." Learned counsel for the state quotes the Pennsylvania statute involved, as follows: "If any married man shall have carnal connection with any woman not his lawful wife, or any married woman have carnal connection with any man not her lawful husband, he or she so offending shall be deemed guilty of adultery." So far as the question we are considering is concerned, this statute is not materially different from our own, which makes only the person "who lives in a state of * * * adultery" guilty of the public offense therein defined, thus impliedly excluding the idea of any guilt of such offense on the part of the unmarried participant, whose only part in the affair has been to live with the married party in the state forbidden to him by the law. Where the idea of guilt on the part of an unmarried participant of such an offense as this is thus excluded by the terms of the statute defining the offense, we think it must be held to follow that such participant cannot be held punishable as being an aider and abettor in the offense, even though he or she be held to be an accomplice under the provision of section 31 of the Penal Code. There is nothing in People v. Coffey, 119 Pac. 901, in conflict with this view.

We conclude, therefore, that upon the facts stated petitioner is not guilty of any public offense created by statute of this state.

It is ordered that petitioner be discharged from custody.

In re DARGIE'S ESTATE. (S. F. 6,015.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 24, 1912.)

DIVORCE (§ 170*)—INTERLOCUTORY JUDGMENT —EFFECT.

Under Civ. Code, § 131, providing for the entry of an interlocutory judgment in actions for divorce, and section 132, providing that when one year has elapsed the court on motion of either party, or upon its motion, may enter the final judgment, and that such final judgment shall restore the parties to the status of single persons and permit them to marry after the entry thereof, the marriage is not dissolved by the mere lapse of one year after the entry of the interlocutory judgment, but is only dissolved when the court has rendered and pronounced final judgment, since the statute does not declare the marriage dissolved at the expiration of one year, but merely declares in effect that it becomes dissolved when, after the expiration of that period, the court shall so declare.

Thomas M. Dargie, a legatee, appeals. Affirmed.

Peter F. Dunne and Edgar D. Peixotto, for appellant. A. A. Moore and Stanley Moore, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. An order was made for the payment of a family allowance to Erminia P. Dargie, as widow of the decedent. The appellant, a nephew and legatee of the decedent, objects to this allowance on the ground that Erminia P. Dargie was not the wife of the decedent at the time of his death and is not his widow. The decedent and Erminia intermarried in 1881. In March, 1906, in a suit for divorce by said Erminia against the decedent, in the superior court of Alameda county, an interlocutory decree was entered declaring that said Erminia P. Dargie was entitled to a divorce from said William E. Dargie, and that at the expiration of one year from the entry thereof she would be entitled to a final judgment dissolving said marriage, and that such final judgment should then be entered by the court of its own motion or on motion of either party. No final judgment was ever pronounced or entered in the case. The parties afterward became reconciled and lived together as husband and wife. William E. Dargie died on February 10, 1911.

The appellant contends that, when an interlocutory decree is made under the provisions of sections 131 and 132 of the Civil Code, in an action for divorce, declaring that the plaintiff is entitled to a divorce, the marriage is dissolved at the expiration of one year from the date of the entry of such decree, and that this dissolution takes place at that moment, by force of law, without the making or entry of any final judgment or any further order or action of the court regarding it.

[1] We cannot agree to this interpretation of the statute. It declares that, "when one year has elapsed after the entry of such interlocutory judgment, the court on motion of either party, or upon its own motion, may enter the final judgment granting the divorce, and such final judgment shall restore them to the status of single persons, and permit them to marry after the entry thereof." Clearly there is here contemplated and required further judicial action as a condition precedent to the making and entry of the final judgment. The language is that the "entry" of the final judgment is to be by "the court." This shows that the word "entry" is not used to describe the mere clerical act by the clerk of writing such judgment in the judgment book, but that it was employed to describe and include the action of the court in rendering or pronouncing the final judgment. Whether a formal entry in the judgment book is necessary or not we need not inquire. The statute at least requires that the court shall again act in the case by declaring the final judgment. Unless it so acts, there is no authority for the entry of any final judgment. The clerk cannot, in the absence of such action, enter it of his own motion.

It is the final judgment that grants the divorce. The interlocutory judgment does not have that effect. It merely declares the right: That the party is "entitled" to a divorce, a divorce to be afterwards adjudged. By the terms of the statute, it is the final judgment alone that grants the divorce, dissolves the marriage, restores the parties to the status of single persons, and permits each to marry again. The statute does not itself declare the marriage dissolved at the expiration of the year from the interlocutory judgment. It merely suspends for one year the power of the court to dissolve it, and, in effect, provides that it becomes dissolved only when, after the expiration of that period, the court has, by its final judgment, so declared. In the meantime the parties remain in the legal relation of husband and wife. This is in harmony with the decisions in Deyoe v. Superior Court, 140 Cal. 484, 74 Pac. 28, 98 Am. St. Rep. 73, Grannis v. Superior Court, 146 Cal. 250, 79 Pac. 891, 106 Am. St. Rep. 23, and Periera v. Periera, 156 Cal. 9, 103 Pac. 488, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 880, 134 Am. St. Rep. 107. There is nothing inconsistent with this in Claudius v. Melvin, 146 Cal. 257, 79 Pac. 897. The question here involved did not arise and was not discussed in that case. It follows from what we have said that, at the time of the death of the decedent, Erminia P. Dargie was his wife, and that she is now entitled to such rights as the law confers upon her, under the circumstances, as his widow, including the right to a family allowance.

The order is affirmed.

FIRST NAT. BANK OF MONROVIA v. MARYLAND CASUALTY CO.

(L. A. 2,647.)

1. PLEADING (§ 433*)—CONSTRUCTION—OBJECTIONS BELOW—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

An insurance policy covered loss by burglary of money by abstraction from the "safe or safes," described in the schedule attached, by any person making entry into such "safe or safes" by the use of "tools or explosives directly thereupon," but not for loss from a burglar-proof safe containing an inner steel, burglar-proof chest, unless the same shall have been abstracted from the chest after entry into the chest by the use of tools or explosives directly thereupon. The safe described in the schedule was of the latter kind, containing an inner steel, burglar-proof chest. Held, that a complaint on the policy, alleging that certain persons feloniously abstracted money "from the safes owned by said plaintiff, and described in the said schedule in said policy,

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

* * * by making entry into such safes by the use of tools directly thereupon," was sufficient against an objection, first raised on appeal, that it did not allege facts showing that the entry into the burglar-proof steel chest was effected by the use of tools directly thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Dec. Dig. § 433.*]

2. Insurance (§ 665)*—Burglary Insurance—Actions—Sufficiency of Evidence.

Evidence, in an action by a bank on a burglary insurance policy, held not to sustain a finding that the inner steel chest of the safe was entered by the use of tools directly thereupon, within the terms of the policy, but by operation of the combination.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 665.*]

3. Insurance (§ 146*)—Actions—Proof.

To recover on an insurance policy, plaintiff must bring himself within its express provisions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 292–298; Dec. Dig. § 146.*]

4. Insurance (§ 146*)—Construction of Policy.

While doubtful provisions of an insurance policy are construed in insured's favor, if its terms are unambiguous, no forced construction can be indulged to pass liability on the company.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 292–298; Dec. Dig. § 146.*]

5. Insurance (§ 425*)—Burglary Insurance—Construction of Policy.

A burglary insurance policy covered loss in consequence of the abstraction of money from the "safe or safes," described in the attached schedule, "by any person or persons who shall make entry in such safe or safes by the use of tools or explosives directly thereupon," and provided that the company should not be liable for loss from a burglar-proof safe containing an inner steel chest, unless the money was taken "from the chest after entry also into the said chest effected by the use of tools or explosives directly thereupon." Held, that the company would not be liable on the policy for money taken from the inner steel chest by the use of the combination furnished the burglar by an employé, without having made entry into such inner chest by the use of tools directly thereupon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 425.*]

6. Appeal and Error (§ 209*)—Review—Objections in Trial Court.

Failure to object to the evidence or move for a nonsuit or request specific findings does not preclude appellant from attacking, on appeal, a finding as not sustained by the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 209.]

7. Appeal and Error (§ 173*)—Grounds of Defense—Estoppel.

That an insurance company, sued on a bank burglary policy which required that entrance into both the outer safe and the inner steel chest contained therein be made directly by tools, disputed the manner in which the burglar effected an entrance, in attempting to show that even his entry into the outer safe was not effected by tools thereon, would not estop it, on appeal, from asserting that a finding that the entrance into the inner chest was made with tools directly thereupon was not supported by the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 173.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by the First National Bank of Monrovia against the Maryland Casualty Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

John Murray Marshall and J. W. McKinley, for appellant. Shankland & Chandler, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This action is brought to recover the sum of $20,000 on four burglary insurance policies of $5,000 each, known as the "Peerless Bank Burglary Policy," issued in favor of the plaintiff, and under which defendant agreed to indemnify the plaintiff from loss by burglary, accomplished through entry into the bank safe of plaintiff "by the use of tools or explosives directly thereupon." In the complaint, four causes of action against the defendant are stated; each counting on one of the policies issued. Each policy had attached to it a schedule, showing the location and character of the vault within which the bank safe of plaintiff was constructed, the character of the safe itself—being burglar proof—and that within the safe (there was but one) was contained an inner steel, burglar-proof chest. The policies, each identical in terms and conditions, were, with the schedules thereto attached, made by proper reference, and in extenso, parts of the complaint.

Each policy provided, considering its provisions solely with reference to a burglarious entry of safes, which is alone material here, that the defendant would indemnify the plaintiff, "subject to the following special and general agreements which are to be construed co-ordinately, as conditions: Safe Burglary. A. For all loss by burglary of money, bullion, bank notes, * * * in consequence of the felonious abstraction of the same from the safe or safes described in the said schedule and located in the banking room also described in the said schedule * * * by any person or persons who shall make entry into such safe or safes by the use of tools or explosives directly thereupon, in the sum of $5,000. * * * Special Agreements. A. The company shall not be liable: (5) for the loss of money, bullion, bank notes * * * from a combination fire and burglar-proof safe or from a burglar-proof safe containing an inner steel burglar-proof chest, unless the same shall have been abstracted from the chest after entry also into the said chest effected by the use of tools or explosives directly thereupon."

The complaint, in charging the liability of defendant in each of said counts under each policy, alleged that on the 14th day of December, 1908, "during the night of said day, certain persons, to wit, George Allen Beatty, Ernest W. Sundin, ——— Hatfield, and C. S.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Martin, feloniously abstracted from the safes owned by said plaintiff, and described in the said schedule in said policy, and located in the banking room of plaintiff, * * * by making entry into such safes by the use of tools directly thereupon, the sum of $29,725.50."

No demurrer to the complaint was interposed by defendant. The answer denied that the persons mentioned in the complaint feloniously abstracted any sum of money from "the safe owned by plaintiff, and described in any of the schedules in the policy set forth, * * * or from any safe owned by plaintiff, by making entry into such safe, or any safe, in any manner whatsoever," or "that any person made entry into any of the safes mentioned in plaintiff's complaint by the use of tools, or any tools, directly thereupon, or by the use of tools, or any tool, in any manner whatsoever." Certain special defenses arising under some of the provisions of the policy were set up, namely, that C. S. Martin had been an employé of plaintiff in making repairs about the vault and safe of plaintiff, and while so employed had acquired knowledge of the combinations of the vault and safe, had disarranged the time lock, and had concocted the burglary in conjunction with the others, who were alleged in the complaint to have participated in it; also that the entry into the safe and abstraction of the money therefrom was wholly the result of the undue exposure of the safe on the part of plaintiff while Martin was employed in making the repairs upon it.

The cause was tried by the court. Its findings were against the special defenses interposed by defendant, and also against it upon the main issue; the court, as to the latter, making two findings: (1) That on the day named in the complaint, Beatty, Sundin, and Hatfield feloniously abstracted the sum of $29,725.50 from the "safe owned by plaintiff, and described in the schedules in the burglar policies in controversy, * * * by making entry into such safes by the use of tools directly thereupon, to wit, a screw-driver, a sledge hammer and a key"; the other that said money was feloniously abstracted by said persons "from said safes described in the schedules * * * by making entry into such safes by the use of tools directly thereupon, to wit, by the use of" the same instrumentalities.

Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff for $19,500.68; the court finding, as the evidence showed, that, subsequent to the burglary, and before the trial of the action, the perpetrators above named were apprehended, and money and property of the value exceeding $10,000 was received from them and turned over to plaintiff. No motion for new trial was made by defendant, but it appeals directly from the judgment on a bill of exceptions.

The principal grounds urged for a reversal are: (1) That the complaint fails to state a cause of action against the defendant; and, (2) that the findings of the court that the safe, or safes, described in the schedules and covered by the policies was, or were, entered by the use of tools directly thereupon, is not sustained by the evidence.

[1] As to the attack on the complaint. In this regard, it is insisted that as, by the terms of the policies, the defendant could only be liable where tools were used, not only on the safe itself, but upon the inner burglar-proof chest contained in the safe, it was necessary, in order to state a cause of action against defendant, to allege facts showing that the entry into the safe, and into the burglar-proof chest in which the money was contained, was effected by the use of tools directly upon the safe, and directly upon the burglar-proof chest; that the schedules attached to the policies show that there was but one safe, and that it contained an inner burglar-proof chest, and that an allegation that the "safes" of plaintiff were burglariously entered by the use of tools directly thereupon is not an allegation that the chest was so entered. We do not think this point well taken, or, at least, in the absence of any special demurrer to the complaint, that defendant can be now permitted to make it. The policies insured the plaintiff against burglary by entry into the safe and the burglar-proof chest. It is true that in the policies the safe and the inner burglar-proof chest are mentioned as separate and distinct from each other, and in seeking to fix liability on defendant for a burglarious entry into the safe and chest it would have been more correct to describe the entry to have been made into the safe and chest, rather than to have described it as an entry into the "safes." But, as the policies covered an entry into both the safe and the chest, we do not think an allegation that the entry was made into the "safes" of the plaintiff was radically a failure to state a cause of action, within the terms of the policy. The complaint alleged the entry to have been made into the "safes" described in the policies, and the answer referred to them in the same terms. The case was tried on the theory that the complaint sufficiently described the thing or things which were burglarized, and for which plaintiff claimed defendant to be liable under the policies; and while, to bring it exactly within the terms of the policies, the complaint should have alleged the entry to have been made, both into the safe and inner chest contained therein, still the failure to do so cannot, after trial and judgment, be made the basis of attack on the sufficiency of the complaint. The defendant should have taken advantage of this point by special demurrer for ambiguity or uncertainty.

[2] The second point is on the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings that entry was made into the safe or safes of plaintiff, described in the schedule and referred to in the policies, by the use of tools directly thereupon. There is practically no dispute as to how the burglary was effected. The banking business of the plaintiff is conducted at Monrovia, Los Angeles county. In June, 1908, the president of the bank entered into a contract with the Parcells Safe Company, engaged in the business of supplying safes, vault doors, and in doing bank contract work, to furnish vault lining, doors, and safes, and properly install them on premises in Monrovia, to which the bank contemplated moving its banking business. In consideration of this contract for the new work, the Parcells Safe Company agreed to do certain work about the vault and safe on the old bank premises—to make certain repairs on the vault and safe doors, plumb them up, and renovate and clean them generally, including the locks and bolts, and repaint the safe with aluminum. The vault on the old premises was of brick, with an outer vault door secured by a combination lock. Inside the vault was another door with a vestibule, or space, between it and the outer vault door; this second door opening with a key. The safe was inside the vault beyond this inner or vestibule door, and the door thereof was secured by a combination lock and a time lock. Inside the safe was an inner steel burglar-proof chest in which the money of the bank was kept, and this was secured only by a combination lock. The safe and time lock were of a pattern in use a great many years ago.

The Parcells Company contracted with one Charles S. Martin, George A. Beatty and E. W. Sundin to do the work of installing the vault and safes in the new bank building, and the renovating and repairing of the vault and the safe just described in the old one. Martin was a well-known safe and vault expert, and the agent of the Parcells Company took him to the bank and introduced him to the president thereof as the man who would attend to the repairing, renovating, and cleaning of the vault and safe then in use by the bank. Martin went to work about the vault and safe, and was engaged there during the banking hours from the 1st to the 10th of December, and performed for the Parcells Company the work which they had contracted with him to do. While so employed, his movements and work about the premises were supposed to be constantly under observation by some of the officers of the bank working in the banking room, and who had been instructed to make note of them. Beatty and Sundin at no time, until the night of the burglary, were upon the old bank premises. They were working, installing the vault and safe in the new bank premises. Notwithstanding the precautions taken by the bank officers to observe the movements of Martin, the latter, while at work about the vault and safe and the locks and bolts connected therewith, secretly acquired knowledge of the combinations upon the doors of the vault and safe and the combination of the inner steel chest. He, also, while cleaning up the time locks and bolts on the inner side of the safe door, removed from the time lock a pin which he shortened and replaced. His object in shortening the pin was so that a hook, which is suspended from the pin while the time lock is running and in operation, could be jarred off the pin by heavy blows directed upon the outside of the safe door, thereby releasing the dogging or locking bar from the bolts of the safe, and allowing the door thereof to be opened by the combination. Martin also fashioned a key, whereby the inner vestibule door of the vault could be opened. Having acquired this information as to the combinations, and manipulated the time lock, Martin entered into an arrangement with Beatty and Sundin, who, like himself, had practical expert knowledge of the safe and lock business, and with another party named Edward Hatfield, to burglarize the bank. He furnished his associates with a card, upon which he had written the combinations of the vault, safe, and inner chest doors, gave them the key to the vestibule door, and instructed them how the time lock had been manipulated by him, so that it could be rendered ineffective by the use of a hammer.

Supplied with this information, on the night of December 14, 1908, Beatty, Sundin, and Hatfield proceeded from Los Angeles to Monrovia to carry out their scheme of robbing the bank. Martin did not accompany them, having left several days previously for Ventura, so as to be able to prove an alibi, should suspicion be directed to him on account of his recent employment about the bank premises. Reaching Monrovia, Beatty effected an entrance to the bank premises through a window, carrying with him a bag, containing a screw-driver, plyers, other small tools, and two heavy hammers. He alone entered the bank premises, and alone actually perpetrated the burglary. With the combinations furnished by Martin, he readily opened the vault door, entered and turned on the electric light in the vault. He then, for the purpose of preventing any one from entering the vault while he was at work, changed the combination on the vault door and locked it. He opened the inner vestibule door with the proper key therefor, which he found hanging up within the vault. He then tried the combination on the safe door, but was unable, as he testified, to open it on account of the time lock being set, and then proceeded to operate, as directed by Martin, on the time lock. He struck the handle of the doors several times with a large hammer, but noticing that the handle was being slightly bent without producing any effect upon the time lock, he ceased his attack at this point. He was desirous of accomplishing the burglary without, if possible, leaving any indications or marks of how it was effected. Observing several depositor passbooks in the vault, he took one and placed it over a point opposite the time lock dial, struck several blows upon it with the hammer, with the result that the hook on the time lock was jarred off the pin which held it in position, and which had been manipulated by Martin, so that this might be accomplished. The bolts being thus released from the operation of the time lock, he then worked the combination and opened the safe door, which brought him into the presence of the inner steel burglar-proof chest, containing the money of the bank. This was secured by a combination lock only, which Beatty readily worked from the information of the combinations furnished by Martin, opened the chest, took out the money deposited therein—$29,725.50—and placed it in his tool bag. Beatty had been directed by Martin, after he had secured the money from the inner chest, to readjust the time lock and put it in running condition, so that suspicion might be cast on some of the employés of the bank familiar with the various combinations thereof that they had abstracted the money. Beatty unfastened the rim of the time lock and proceeded to do this, but while doing so, as he testified, his conscience revolted against throwing the blame on some innocent man, so that, while he readjusted the hook and left the time lock in apparent proper condition, he, however, effectually disarranged another portion of its mechanism, so as to indicate to any expert safe and lock man, who might be called in to examine the time lock, that the job had been done by some one familiar with safes and locks. Having so adjusted the time lock from the inside, Beatty shut the burglar-proof chest, from which he had taken the money, and locked it. He locked, also, the safe door, and having readjusted the original combination on the vault door, which he had changed when he first entered the vault, went out and locked that also. Leaving the bank premises, Beatty and his companions returned to Los Angeles. The money was divided equally between the four participants in the burglary—Martin subsequently receiving his share—and Beatty, Sundin, and Hatfield immediately left Los Angeles for other localities.

The officials of the bank the next morning discovered that the money of the bank had been abstracted from the inner chest, but were unable to ascertain how it had been accomplished. Some days afterward an expert safe and lock smith, who was called in to examine the safes and the time lock, discovered that the time lock had been tampered with, but no definite information upon the subject of who tampered with it or why it was done was obtained until after the arrest of Beatty, Sundin, and Martin. It does not appear what became of Hatfield. Beatty, Sundin, and Martin were convicted and sentenced to terms in the state prison. After their arrest and before conviction, Beatty confessed to his participation in the burglary and the respective parts therein taken by Martin and his other associates, and pointed out and demonstrated to the authorities and the officers of the bank how the time lock had been fixed by Martin and operated on by him in securing an entrance to the safe. He and Sundin were also witnesses on behalf of plaintiff to the same effect on the trial of this cause, and the details of the burglary are recited here from their testimony, which was the only direct evidence on the subject.

In addition to the above, there is evidence that, when some safe and lock experts examined the safe and time lock and the inner burglar-proof chest after the burglary had been committed, one of them discovered, inside of the burglar-proof chest, some marks like file marks—two of them—from which one would be enabled to line up the dial on the inside of the chest.

[3] This being the evidence in the case, it is insisted by appellant that the findings of the court that the safes of plaintiff, mentioned in the schedules and referred to in the policies, were entered by the use of tools directly thereupon (considering the safe proper and the inner steel burglar-proof chest as embraced within the descriptive term "safes" mentioned in the findings) is not sustained by the evidence, because the evidence all shows that entry into the inner steel burglar-proof chest was not effected by the use of tools directly thereupon, but solely by the use and operation of the secret combination thereof. We think this point is clearly well taken.

[4] Before one is entitled to recover upon a policy of insurance, it is essential that he bring himself within the express provisions of the policy. While, in the construction of insurance policies, the rule is that doubtful provisions are to be construed in favor of the insured and in aid of his right to recover thereon, the rule is equally well established that, where the terms of the policy are plain and explicit, the court can indulge in no forced construction of the contract to cast a liability upon the insurance company which it has not assumed. The policies which were issued to the plaintiff were not general policies against burglary, but against burglary committed by the use of tools or explosives, not only upon the safe itself, but, if it contained an inner burglar-proof chest, by the use of tools also upon such chest. There can be no question of this, as the policies clearly so declare.

[5] Now, as the policies and schedules attached to the complaint show that there was an inner steel burglar-proof chest within the safe, it was necessary for the plaintiff, before it could fix any liability on the defendant under the plain terms of the policies, to show that the entry was made, not only into the safe itself, but also into the inner burglar-proof chest, from which the money was taken, by the use of tools or explosives directly upon that chest. This the evidence not only fails to show, but, on the contrary, it is clearly shown that the entrance to the inner steel chest was effected by Beatty solely by the use of the combination thereof which had been furnished him by Martin. But the risk assumed by the appellant was not for loss sustained through use of the secret combination on the safes or chest of the insured, whether it was by somebody connected with the business of the insured, or surreptitiously and secretly acquired and used by some one unconnected therewith. The policies are burglary policies—so specifically designated—and when, under them, the respondent assumed risk for an entry made, not only into the safe, but also into the inner chest, by means of tools or explosives directly thereupon, it meant an entry effected by the employment of violence—the use of burglar's tools or explosives, such as are employed by burglars to force an entrance into safes and chests of the character described in the policies. The risk which the insurance company assumed was not against burglary, however accomplished, but only against burglary by the use of tools or explosives. It may, of course, be conceded that the entry into the safe itself was effected partially by the use of the hammer operating to disarrange the time lock after it had been adjusted by Martin, so that this might be accomplished, and partly by the use of the combination which could be used after the time lock had become ineffective. And, for present purposes, it may be conceded that the entry into the safe was made by the use of tools directly upon the safe. But to make the defendant liable under the provisions of the policy it was incumbent on plaintiff to prove that, not only was entry made into the safe by use of tools, but that tools were used directly upon the inner chest itself. Now there is not a particle of evidence that any tools were used to effect an entrance into the chest itself, as the only witness who testified as to the method employed to open it was Beatty, and his evidence is that he opened it by using the combination, knowledge of which Martin had secretly secured and furnished him. His testimony shows clearly and absolutely that no tools were used by him upon the chest at all. This being true, when the court found that the safes mentioned in the policies and schedules, including the safe proper and chest under the comprehensive term "safes," were entered by the use of tools used directly thereon, to wit, a screw-driver, key, and sledge hammer, it made a finding having no sufficient support in the evidence whatever, as far as the entry into the inner chest was concerned; and, as the liability of the defendant was not only for an entry into the safe by such means, but also into the inner chest by the same means, and the entry of the latter was not so accomplished, no liability of the defendant under the terms of the policies attached, and the court undertook to fix by its findings a responsibility, when the evidence showed that none had been proven.

Counsel for respondent, recognizing, as they clearly must, that no liability could be cast on the appellant under the terms of the policies, unless the evidence showed that an entrance was effected, not only into the safe itself, but also into the inner burglar-proof chest as well, by means of tools used to effect an entrance into both, assert that there was in fact evidence in the case of the use of tools upon the inner chest. This claim is based on the evidence of the expert heretofore referred to, called by the respondent after the burglary had been committed to ascertain how it had been accomplished. This witness, testifying generally in the case as to his examination of the safes and the locks and inner chest, stated that he had discovered on the inside of the inner steel chest some marks made by a file, or some other instrument, which would enable a person to line up the dial on the inside of the chest. This, respondent claims, sufficiently shows that entry was accomplished into the chest by the use of tools directly thereon. But it shows nothing of the kind. The instrument with which these marks were made on the chest may have been a tool, and, if a file, it was, of course, one; but it was not a tool through the direct use of which entry into the inner chest was effected. Nor does the testimony of the expert indicate that the entry into the chest was effected by means of these tool marks, because they were on the "inside of the chest," and could afford no advantage to one operating upon the chest when locked by the combination. Aside from this, there is not a particle of evidence of any one as to when or by whom these marks were made, or that an entrance into the chest was effected by the use of the tool with which they were made. There is nothing to show that any tool was used, or the marks made by Martin or Beatty, or that they were made or used in connection with the burglary. How the entrance into the chest was effected is not at all in dispute. Martin gave Beatty the combination to the chest on a card, and Beatty testified that in opening the chest he used the combination that Martin had furnished him.

[6] It is insisted, however, by respondent that appellant is estopped from here asserting that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings that the safes described in the policies and schedules were entered by the use of tools directly thereupon, as far as the findings are addressed to an entrance into the inner steel chest as one of the safes referred to in the findings. In this regard, it is insisted that no objections were made on the trial to evidence offered to show entry into the "safe" or "safes," no motion for a nonsuit on the ground that the entry into the chest was the vital issue, that no finding was asked for by appellant to distinguish beween a safe and an inner chest, that the pleadings on both sides described the things burglarized as "safes," and the case was tried on the theory that the burglary of the safe was a burglary of each and all of its parts, one of which was the inner chest. We perceive no merit in this claim. It would be idle to attempt to elaborate the proposition that a failure to object to evidence, or to move for a nonsuit, or request specific findings, precludes an appellant from attacking a finding on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain it.

As to the issues made by the pleadings and the theory upon which the case was tried, the claim of respondent is equally without merit. While we have held that the complaint, in charging a burglary of the safes mentioned in the schedules and policies, sufficiently stated a cause of action to defeat an objection to its sufficiency as a pleading made for the first time on this appeal, this did not obviate the necessity of the respondent proving a case on the trial, bringing the liability of the appellant within the clear terms of the policy as set forth in the complaint, showing an entry into both the safe and the inner chest by the use of tools directly upon both.

[7] Nor was the case tried on the theory that the burglary of the safe and the burglary of the inner chest was one and the same thing, and equally within either one of the clauses of the policy. In making its case, respondent proved by the same witness—Beatty, who was the only witness detailing the circumstances of the burglary—how and by what means entrance into the vault, safe, and inner chest was effected. The appellant did not question the accuracy of the testimony of Beatty as to how he effected an entry into the vault or inner chest. Entry into the vault was not covered by the policies, and entry into the inner chest was shown by the testimony of Beatty not to have been made in a manner which would make the appellant liable under the policies. It is true that appellant undertook to prove that the time lock on the safe had been so tampered with before the night of the burglary as to render it wholly inefficient as a time lock, but in a different manner than as stated by Beatty; that the dogging or locking bar operated by it did not work on that night, so as to lock the safe at all; that the safe was only in fact locked by the combination, and that Beatty's statement of the use of a hammer to disarrange the hook on the pin, thereby releasing the locking bar and permitting the opening of the safe by the combination, was untrue; and that he in fact opened it by the use of the combination alone. But the fact that appellant questioned or disputed the method by which Beatty effected an entrance to the safe, in an effort to show that even his entry into the safe itself was not effected by the means designated in the policies, did not preclude the defendant from insisting that, even if entry into the safe itself was effected by the use of tools, still, as appellant only assumed the risk of the loss of money abstracted from the inner steel, burglar-proof chest contained within the safe, "after entry into such chest effected by the use of tools directly thereupon." that, as the entry into the chest was not effected by that means, no liability against appellant was shown; nor was it precluded from attacking a finding casting such liability on it, when there was no evidence whatever to support it.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

WALKER v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.

(L. A. 2,729.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 30, 1912. Rehearing Denied Feb. 29, 1912.)

1. Damages (§ 132*)—Personal Injuries—Excessive Damages.

Where a railway mail clerk, who was earning $1,500 per annum, sustained injuries which caused permanent deafness in one ear, and also injuries to his ribs and his right arm, which prevented its further use for delicate work, an award of $4,000 is not excessive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 372–385; Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

2. Trial (§ 295*)—Instructions—Construction as a Whole.

In an action for personal injuries, where the jury was charged that the physical pain or mental anguish which the plaintiff has suffered or will necessarily suffer are elements of damage, and that he should be compensated for his injuries, the elements of damage being his loss of earning power and pain and anxiety suffered or to be suffered, a further instruction that the plaintiff should be compensated for the pecuniary loss likely to be sustained by him, when read with the other instructions, was not erroneous in permitting the jury to enter the realm of speculation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 295.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

Action by William R. Walker against the Southern Pacific Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying its motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. McKinley, for appellant. E. B. Drake, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff, who was a railway mail clerk, was injured in an accident due to the negligence of defendant's servants. He recovered judgment for $4,000. From said judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial defendant appeals.

[1] The two points urged by appellant are (1) that the damages were excessive; and (2) that the court erred in instructing the jury. Without going at length into the testimony relating to plaintiff's injuries, we may say that it is sufficient to establish his theory of the case and to support the verdict. According to the testimony of experts, the drum of plaintiff's left ear was perforated, and he was permanently deaf in that ear. He testified that before the accident he could hear perfectly; and, although the experts differed as to the origin of his deafness and the period of its existence, we think that there was sufficient evidence to justify a conclusion of the jury that it was produced by scalding water, which was thrown upon his face and head during the accident. Dr. Pepper discovered a disturbed condition of the articulation of the ninth rib. He also testified that cicatricial tissue on the right arm, resulting from plaintiff's injuries, impeded the action of the muscles to such an extent that plaintiff could never again use that arm for quick or delicate work, and that his strength in that arm would always be impaired. From such evidence the jury would have been justified in concluding that plaintiff could never again follow his business as a mail clerk. Plaintiff was 43 years old at the time of the trial. His salary at the time of the accident was $1,500 per annum. In view of the above facts, we cannot say that the verdict of $4,000 was excessive.

[2] The court instructed the jury upon the various elements of damage which they might properly consider in reaching their verdict, and one of these was "the pecuniary loss likely to be sustained by him (plaintiff) during life." Appellant cites Melone v. Sierra Railway Co., 151 Cal. 116, 91 Pac. 522, as conclusive of the matter. In that case the court held two certain instructions to be erroneous. In one the jurors were told that they might fix damages in favor of plaintiff in any "such reasonable sum as the jury shall award him on account of the pain and anxiety he has suffered or may suffer by reason of his injuries." In the other they were informed that "in estimating the damages to be awarded you may take into consideration * * * how far his injuries are permanent in their character and results, as well as the physical and mental suffering he may have sustained or may undergo in the future by reason of the injuries." The reason for the decision was that the condemned instructions permitted the jury "to enter the realm of speculation regarding such future suffering." We do not think that the instructions read as a whole, as they must be, permit the jury to enter this realm of mere speculation. In the case at bar the jurors were also instructed as follows: "If you find that from the injuries received in the accident set out in the complaint the plaintiff has suffered physical pain or mental anguish, or that he will necessarily suffer such in the future, then you are instructed that you may consider such physical pain and mental anguish, and also the fact, if it be a fact, that he will continue to suffer the same in the future, as elements of damage. The measure of any recovery in favor of the plaintiff herein is called compensatory damages; that is, such a sum as will compensate him for injuries he has sustained. The elements entering into such damages are the following: (1) If the injury has impaired plaintiff's power to earn money in the future, such a sum as will compensate him for such loss of power. (2) Such reasonable sum as the jury shall award him on account of pain and anxiety he has suffered by reason of his injuries, or will certainly suffer in the future."

Taken altogether, the instructions were not, we think, misleading. The instruction of which appellant complains in the case at bar was given in the case of Cook v. Los Angeles P. E. Ry. Co., 134 Cal. 279, 66 Pac. 306 (see folio 256 of the transcript), and in that case the court held that the instructions as a whole stated the law correctly. We have reached the same conclusion in this case.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION (§ 51*)—HEIRS—DISQUALIFICATION TO TAKE—KILLING INTESTATE—"MURDER"—MANSLAUGHTER.

One who, as heir, would, under Civ. Code, § 1386, share in the estate of decedent, is not, by reason of his conviction of manslaughter for killing intestate, within section 1409, declaring that no one convicted of "murder" of deceased shall succeed to any of his estate; "murder" not only being a technical word within section 13, requiring such words to be construed according to their peculiar or technical meaning, but being precisely defined by Pen. Code, § 187, so as to exclude manslaughter, and Pol. Code, § 4480, requiring, with relation to each other, the provisions of the four Codes to be construed as though they were all parts of the same statute.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Patrick Kirby, deceased. From an order of distribution, James Kirby appeals. Reversed.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, for appellant. Cullinan & Hickey, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from a final order of distribution of the estate of Patrick Kirby, deceased.

Patrick Kirby died intestate on January 18, 1910, leaving neither wife, issue, father, nor mother surviving. His surviving heirs, according to section 1386 of the Civil Code, were two brothers, Michael and James Kirby, one sister, Bridget Mannion, and the children of Ellen Daly, a deceased sister. On December 1, 1910, Michael Kirby transferred his interest in Patrick's estate to one James Kirby, a son of said Michael. Said James Kirby is the appellant herein. On February 23, 1910, Michael Kirby was duly charged by information, in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, with the murder of said Patrick Kirby. On July 1, 1910, he was, upon said charge, convicted of the crime of manslaughter. An appeal was taken from the judgment of conviction, and it has been affirmed and has become final. Because of this conviction, the court below refused to distribute the share of Michael Kirby to his assignee, James Kirby, and distributed the entire estate to the other persons above mentioned. It is claimed that this was error.

By section 1386, if a person dies intestate, leaving neither issue, husband nor wife, father nor mother surviving, his estate goes to his brothers and sisters, and to the children or grandchildren of any deceased brother or sister by right of representation. An exception to this rule is declared by section 1409, a new section added to the same title in 1905. It is as follows: "No person who has been convicted of the murder of the decedent shall be entitled to succeed to any portion of his estate; but the portion thereof to which he would otherwise be entitled to succeed descends to the other persons entitled thereto under the provisions of this title." If Michael Kirby was not "convicted of the murder" of Patrick Kirby within the meaning of this section, then James Kirby, the assignee of Michael, is entitled to succeed to one-fourth of the estate. What, then, is the true meaning of the words last quoted?

"Words and phrases are construed according to the context and approved usage of the language; but technical words and phrases, and such others as may have acquired a peculiar and appropriate meaning in law, or are defined in the succeeding section, are to be construed according to such peculiar and appropriate meaning or definition." Civ. Code, § 13. The word "murder" is a technical word. It not only has acquired a peculiar and appropriate meaning in the law of this state, and in the law generally, but it has been precisely defined by our statute. The Penal Code defines it as follows: "Murder is the unlawful killing of a human being, with malice aforethought." Section 187. It is divided into two degrees, the first degree including all premeditated, willful, and deliberate murders, and all killing done in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate certain lesser crimes, the second including all other kinds of murder. Section 189. Murder of the first degree is punishable by death or imprisonment for life. Murder of the second degree by imprisonment not less than ten years. In ordinary usage and at common law the word has the same meaning. Webster's Dic.; 1 Wharton's Crim. Law, § 303. The word "manslaughter," whether in common usage, at common law, or by our statute, has a very different meaning. The Penal Code defines it as "the unlawful killing of a human being, without malice," and declares it to be of two kinds: First, "voluntary—upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion;" second, "involuntary—in the commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to felony; or in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death, in an unlawful manner, or without due caution or circumspection." The meaning at common law and in ordinary usage is substantially the same. See Webster's Dic.; 1 Whar. Cr. Law, §§ 304, 305. It will be noted that it excludes the element of deliberation and premeditation.

With relation to each other, the provisions of the four Codes must be construed as though they were all parts of the same statute. Pol. Code, § 4480. From these rules and definitions the conclusion necessarily follows that a conviction of manslaughter is not a conviction of murder. It is a conviction of a different offense, an offense which does not include all the criminal elements of the crime of murder. The distinction has indeed been carried so far that it is well settled that a conviction of manslaughter upon a charge of murder is, in legal effect, an acquittal of the murder charge. People v. Gilmore, 4 Cal. 376, 60 Am. Dec. 620; People v. Backus, 5 Cal. 278; People v. Gordon, 99 Cal. 230, 33 Pac. 901; People v. Muhlner, 115 Cal. 307, 47 Pac. 128. It follows that Michael Kirby has not been convicted of the murder of Patrick Kirby, that he does not come within the exception made by section 1409, and that he was entitled to the share provided by section 1386. Whether this accords with natural right and justice is a question upon which we cannot enter. The right of inheritance in this state does not depend upon the ideas of court or counsel as to justice and natural right. The entire matter is in the control of the Legislature, and depends wholly upon the provisions of the statute, regardless of our notions of natural right and justice. Estate of Wilmerding, 117 Cal. 284, 49 Pac. 181; Sharp v. Loupe, 120 Cal. 91, 52 Pac. 134, 586; Estate of Porter, 129 Cal. 88, 61 Pac. 659, 79 Am. St. Rep. 78. The statute having made the distinction between murder and manslaughter, the courts cannot ignore it or create a definition of the word "murder" different from that declared in the statute and from that of the common-law and ordinary usage. There is no ambiguity in the language and nothing is left to construction. The appellant should have received one-fourth of the estate, and the refusal to give it to him was erroneous.

The order is reversed.

2. Negligence (§ 55*)—Injuries to Servant—Independent Contractor.

3. Master and Servant (§ 185*)—Injuries to Servant — Negligence of Fellow Servant.

A master is liable for the negligence arising from the furnishing of a perilous place to work, even though he has no actual knowledge of such condition, so that, though piers upon which a wall was built were built by fellow servants of a person who was injured by the falling of the wall, where the master's attention was directed to such piers by reason of his having offered a reward to the workman who built the best-looking pier, he is liable for an injury caused by the wall falling on account of their insufficiency.

5. Evidence (§ 471*)—Opinion.

Where a defendant, in an action for injuries occasioned by a falling wall, sought to establish that the person injured was an independent contractor, questions to the plaintiff and other witnesses, as to whose control the workmen whom the plaintiff produced were under, are equivalent to an inquiry as to who gave the orders, and are not objectionable as calling for the opinions of the witnesses.

Where, in an action for injuries from a falling wall, the plaintiff had secured workmen for the building of the wall under contract with defendant, the original contractor, and there was a controversy whether plaintiff was an independent contractor or a servant, a question to him, as to whether he gave directions for the building of the piers which supported an I-beam upon which the wall in question was built, was not objectionable as calling for evidence impeaching the contract of the plaintiff, but, on the contrary, supported his theory of the contract, and was proper.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by A. Majors against M. W. Connor and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. Wiseman Macdonald, for appellants. H. T. Gordon, A. P. Thomson, and F. McD. Spencer, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff was injured by the falling of a brick wall in course of construction, upon which he was working at the time as a mason. The wall in question was a part of an addition to the Hotel Melrose in Los Angeles, and its fall was due to the collapse of faultily constructed piers on the north half of said addition. The Connor & Perry Investment Company was sued as the contractor, and defendant Connor as manager of said company. A verdict in favor of Majors, the plaintiff, for $1,250 was returned by the jury, and judgment was entered accordingly. From said judgment, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial, defendants appeal.

Two general propositions are stated by appellants as bases of their argument on this appeal. One is that the evidence, without question, proved plaintiff to be an independent contractor. The other is that, if he was not an independent contractor, then his injuries were due to the negligence of his fellow servants.

[1, 2] Regarding the terms upon which Majors was to work, there was a conflict of evidence. It is not disputed that he was to employ the men to assist him in the brickwork, and was to furnish the tools, wheelbarrows, mixing bins, and other things necessary for the use of the bricklayers, and was to be paid a certain sum per thousand brick laid as compensation for himself and his assistants. Nor is there any question that the materials used in the construction of the addition to the hotel were to be furnished by the defendant, and that the bricklayers and laborers hired by Majors were to be actually paid by defendants from amounts due Majors under the contract. There is a sharp conflict, however, in the testimony of the witnesses who spoke with reference to the authority to direct the work. Connors said that he reserved no right of supervision nor dictation of the manner in which the work was to be done. He had a foreman, named Crow, whose duty, he said, was merely to see that Majors followed the proper lines in laying the foundations, and erected the piers of the size and at the places indicated in the specifications. Plaintiff testified, however, that as a part of his agreement he was to do whatever Crow told him to do. At least three of the men employed on the building testified that they were working, not under the supervision of Majors, but were directed in their labors by either Crow or Connor. Majors also said that he worked under the directions of Connor or Crow. There was abundant evidence, therefore, to justify the jury in concluding that Majors did not occupy the position of an independent contractor, but that he was a servant, as that term is defined in section 2009 of the Civil Code. As counsel for respondent phrase it, "This was one of those simple work contracts often favored by close-figuring owners who do their own building. * * * They adopt the device of buying so much labor in gross from a single workman; the latter taking the chance of thereby making a slight increase in his own day's wages." Even if the agreement as originally made could be considered as one whereby Majors became an independent contractor, nevertheless Connor, by assuming to direct the work, either personally or through his foreman, took the responsibility upon himself and his codefendant which might have rested otherwise upon plaintiff. 1 Thompson on Neg. § 658; 2 Bailey on Personal Injuries, § 2581; Giacomini v. Pacific Lum. Co., 5 Cal. App. 220, 89 Pac. 1060.

[3] Plaintiff's son and another mason built the faulty piers that finally collapsed under the weight of the wall constructed upon the I-beam, which rested upon said piers. It is undisputed that plaintiff had nothing to do with the actual construction of these piers. He also testified that he was unaware of the method used in building them. Was plaintiff, under such evidence, which the jury had the right to accept, in a position to deny that he was injured by the carelessness of a fellow servant? We must answer this question affirmatively. There was abundant testimony showing that the piers were mere tapering circular chimneys of half bricks, filled in with mortar and "sprawls" or fragments of brick. So constructed, they were totally inadequate to carry the weight of the wall which was to be built above the I-beam. George Adele, one of the masons, testified that this method of construction was followed by reason of the express direction of Connor, who promised a dollar to the man who would build the best-looking pier. Wolf, one of the carpenters employed on the building, corroborated Adele in this statement. Connor admitted that he offered a dollar to the man who should construct the best pier, and that after the north piers were built he gave each of the workmen a dollar. He denied giving any direction for the building of the piers in the manner described by Adele; but upon the conflict of evidence the jurors might well conclude that Connor ordered the men to construct the piers in a manner to leave them inadequate for the weight which was to be placed upon them, and that after they were so built his attention was particularly directed to them by reason of his promised reward to the builder of the most sightly column. According to the testimony of the plaintiff, Connor ordered him to proceed with the building of the wall after the I-beam had been placed on top of the north piers. Such a state of facts would not support the "fellow servant" doctrine. The place upon the wall where plaintiff was working at the time of the accident was unsafe, and the negligence arising by reason of furnishing such a perilous place for the workman is chargeable directly to the master; and this is the rule even when the master has not, as here, actual knowledge of the danger. The piers, topped by the I-beam, constituted a means or appliance furnished for the prosecution of further work. In other words, this case is clearly within the doctrine of those which hold that a tunnel, as fast as it is completed, becomes an appliance, furnished by the master, by which the remaining work is to be prosecuted. Hanley v. California Bridge Co., 127 Cal. 237, 59 Pac. 577, 47 L. R. A. 597; McRae v. Erickson, 1 Cal. App. 326, 82 Pac. 210. Essentially the same rule is also expressed in Mullin v. California Horseshoe Co., 105 Cal. 83, 38 Pac. 535, and Galasso v. Natl. S. S. Co., 27 App. Div. 169, 50 N. Y. Supp. 417.

[4] The jury was also justified in finding plaintiff guilty of no negligence in failing to observe the faulty condition of the piers. If he was, as he testified, actually ignorant of existing conditions, he was under no obligation to investigate. Starr v. Kreuzberger, 129 Cal. 124, 61 Pac. 787, 79 Am. St. Rep. 92; Silveira v. Iversen, 128 Cal. 187, 60 Pac. 687; Dolan v. Sierra Railway Co., 135 Cal. 439, 67 Pac. 686.

[5] Appellant calls our attention to the court's rulings in the admission of certain evidence. Plaintiff was asked this question: "When you produced the labor, the men, and put them on the job, under whose control and management were they?" An objection, on the ground that the question called for the conclusion of the witness, was overruled, and he answered, "Mr. Crow and Mr. Connor." Similar objection was interposed without success, and the same answer was given, to the question asked of witness Adele, "Under whose control did you do the work?" We do not see that either question called for a conclusion. Both were tantamount to an inquiry, "Who gave the orders?" Questions calling for answers much nearer the border line of conclusion have been held not erroneous. Kaltschmidt v. Weber, 145 Cal. 598, 79 Pac. 272; Bunting v. Salz, 22 Pac. 1133; Nathan v. Dierssen, 146 Cal. 66, 79 Pac. 739.

[6] The court committed no error in overruling the objection to the question propounded to plaintiff: "Did you give those men that built the piers, the north piers, instructions how to build them?" The ground of the objection was that the plaintiff was seeking to impeach his own contract. On the contrary, we think the question called for a fact, which the answer revealed, tending to support the plaintiff's theory of the contract.

[7-9] During the examination of Newton Majors, he was asked the following question: "Now, you say you worked with your father, both before and since the accident. What was his capacity for work before the accident, as compared with it since the accident?" To this question there was an objection, on the ground that the witness was not qualified to testify, and on the further ground that it was not proper redirect examination. The court said, "Oh, he may answer," and witness replied: "Well, I don't think he could do near the work. I know he could not do the work now that he could do before this thing happened." Even if the latter part of the objection were timely, the court's remark was equivalent to a ruling that discretion would be exercised in permitting counsel to propound a question not strictly allowable on redirect examination. Such discretion may always be used. The rest of the objection is entirely without force. In the first place, the witness was himself a mason, and qualified to speak with reference to the amount of work which his father could do at his trade as compared with that which he could accomplish before the accident. But, even if the witness had not been an expert in this matter, his relation to and intimate acquaintance with plaintiff would have been sufficient to qualify him to answer. Robinson v. Exempt Fire Co., 103 Cal. 5, 36 Pac. 955, 24 L. R. A. 715, 42 Am. St. Rep. 93.

The instructions fully and fairly delivered the law to the jury, and were without material error.

The judgment and order from which the defendants have appealed are affirmed.

CIMPHER et al. v. CITY OF OAKLAND.
(S. F. 5,766.)

1. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 7*)—TIDELANDS—ACQUISITION BY PRESCRIPTION.

Tidelands on any navigable estuary, over which the tides regularly ebb and flow, are charged with a public trust for purposes of navigation and fishery, and so cannot be acquired by prescription by a private person.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 24-42; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 225*)—DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY.

A mere resolution of a city council, not signed by its mayor or shown to have been passed over his veto, purporting to grant property of the city, is ineffectual, not being in accordance with the method provided by its charter (St. 1862, pp. 338, 342, 353, §§ 4, 8, 51, 53) for disposing of its property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 225.*]

3. NAVIGABLE WATERS (§ 37*)—TIDELANDS—GRANT TO CITY—"PRIVATE PERSONS, PARTNERSHIPS, OR CORPORATIONS."

Const. art. 15, § 3, providing that certain tidelands shall be withheld from grant or sale to "private persons, partnerships, or corporations," does not prohibit its grant to a municipal corporation, "private" qualifying each of the three words following it; though, when granted to a city, the prohibition protects it from grant or sale by the city to privates, except as it may be properly disposed of in furtherance of the trust on which it is held—that is, to subserve the public uses of navigation and fishery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Navigable Waters, Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

4. STATUTES (§ 77*)—LOCAL SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

Act March 22, 1909 (St. 1909, p. 665), granting to a city all the state's interest in certain tidelands, is not within the inhibition of the Constitution against local special legislation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Dec. Dig. § 77.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, Judge.

Action by Etta G. Cimpher and another against the City of Oakland. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

J. C. Bates, for appellants. John W. Stetson, City Atty., William H. O'Brien, Asst. City Atty., and Ben. F. Woolner, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The plaintiffs appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendant. The controversy between the parties is over the title to the premises in the city of Oakland known as the Lake Merritt Boathouse, being an area 75 feet square of the waters of Lake Merritt. Plaintiffs claim title by prescription and also under a resolution of the city council of Oakland, adopted December 7, 1874, purporting to grant the right to use said space for a boathouse, forever and exclusively, to Samuel Merritt. Plaintiffs have succeeded to whatever right or title Merritt obtained by the resolution.

[1] It was admitted on the trial that the space in question is tideland situated upon a navigable estuary, and over which the ordinary tides regularly ebb and flow. This being the case, it was charged with a public trust for the purposes of navigation and fishery, and no title thereto could be obtained by any private person by prescription. People v. Kerber, 152 Cal. 731, 93 Pac. 878, 125 Am. St. Rep. 93. The title by prescription therefore fails. The fact of possession by plaintiffs is good to defeat the defendant's claim only in case the defendant shows no title or right thereto.

[2] The resolution of the Oakland city council was ineffectual to grant or convey title. The act of 1852, incorporating the town of Oakland, purported to grant to said town the lands lying within its limits, as therein specified, situated between high tide and ship channel. The grant was made to facilitate the construction of wharves and other improvements. Stats. 1852, p. 180. The city of Oakland succeeded to all the rights and properties belonging to the town when it was changed to a city. Stats. 1854, p. 187, § 12. We cannot ascertain, from the boundary line as defined in these acts, whether the premises in controversy are within the limits of the town as then existing, or not. If not, of course the city could not grant any right to them. For the purposes of this decision we assume that they were included in the city limits and in the grant to the town. The city charter empowered the city council to "pass all proper and necessary ordinances for the regulation and sale of city property, and to give deeds therefor." Stats. 1862, p. 338, § 4. Ordinances were required to be presented to the mayor and to be signed by him, unless passed over his veto. Id. p. 342, § 8. It provided that all sales of property belonging to the city should be made by public auction to the highest bidder, upon such terms as the council should, "by ordinance," direct. Id. p. 353, § 51. Ordinances were required to be posted or published, and to begin as follows: "The council of the city of Oakland do ordain as follows." Id. p. 353, § 53.

The resolution purporting to grant this property to Merritt did not comply with any of these requirements. It did not purport to be an ordinance at all, nor was it in the form prescribed for ordinances. It purported to be a mere resolution of the council. It was not signed by the mayor, and it does not appear that it was ever presented to him, or that it was passed over his veto. No ordinance providing for a sale of such property or fixing the terms thereof was ever passed, and there is no evidence that the sale to Merritt was at public auction, or to the highest bidder. If it be conceded that the city had power to grant or sell the tidelands for what appears to have been a private use, or to dispose of them at all, except in aid of the public rights of navigation and fishery, it could do so only in the manner prescribed by its charter. As an attempted disposition of such land, the resolution was a wide departure from the prescribed mode and was wholly ineffectual.

[3] The city did not rest its claim upon the fact, which we assumed as above stated, that the premises were included in the boundaries of the town of Oakland and were granted to it by the act of 1852, aforesaid. It based its claim wholly upon the act of March 22, 1909. Stats. 1909, p. 665. That act grants to the city of Oakland all the interest of the state in certain described tidelands. It is admitted that this grant includes the area in controversy. Appellants claim that such grant is forbidden by section 3 of article 15 of the state Constitution. That section provides that all tidelands within two miles of any incorporated city of this state and fronting on the waters of any estuary or bay used for navigation "shall be withheld from grant or sale to private persons, partnerships, or corporations." The claim is that this prohibits such grant to a municipal corporation. We do not so understand the language we have quoted. The word "private" is an adjective which, in the connection in which it is there used, qualifies all the nouns following it in that sentence. It withholds such lands from grant or sale to private corporations, but not to municipal corporations. When granted to a city, the prohibition still protects it from grant or sale to private persons, private partnerships, or private corporations, except as it may be properly disposed of in furtherance of the trust upon which it is held; that is, to subserve the public uses of navigation and fishery. Ward v. Mulford, 32 Cal. 372; Oakland v. Oakland W. F. Co., 118 Cal. 184, 50 Pac. 277; People v. Kerber, 152 Cal. 736, 93 Pac. 878, 125 Am. St. Rep. 93. The constitutional policy is not violated by the grant to Oakland, and it must be deemed to be within the general powers of the Legislature. Oakland v. Oakland W. F. Co., 118 Cal. 185, 50 Pac. 277.

There having been no attempt made, and no steps taken by any public authority, to abandon the public use of these tidelands and convert them into proprietary lands not dedicated to public use, the statute of limitations does not apply in favor of the plaintiffs, either against the state or the city. People v. Kerber, 152 Cal. 734, 753, 93 Pac. 878, 125 Am. St. Rep. 93.

[4] The act of 1909 clearly does not come within the constitutional inhibition of local special legislation. There is no other point worthy of notice.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1033*)—HARMLESS ERROR—FAVORABLE DECISION.

A party in a suit between lower and upper riparian proprietors to determine their rights to the waters of a stream cannot complain of a judgment because it gives him no more than the law, independent of the judgment, secures to him.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 882*)—RIGHT TO ALLEGE ERROR.

Where, in a suit by a lower riparian proprietor against an upper proprietor to determine their rights to the waters of a stream, defendant declined to show the amount of water required for his use during the dry season, though the court gave him an opportunity to do so, he could not complain of a judgment on the ground of uncertainty in not awarding to him a quantum of water.

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 49*)—RIPARIAN RIGHTS—JUDGMENT.

The judgment which declared that defendant might take all the water which he required for indicated purposes, and that, so long as he took a portion of it from a branch, he might take the remainder from the main stream, did not compel defendant to continue to take water from the branch, but gave him the first right to all the water which he might require for the indicated purposes; and, while the rights of a riparian owner are not limited by the quantum of water he may happen to use, the judgment was not erroneous as against defendant.

5. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 43*)—RIPARIAN RIGHTS—JUDGMENT.

Where the court, in a suit by a lower riparian proprietor against an upper proprietor to determine their rights to the waters of a stream, found that plaintiff, as riparian owner, needed and used the water for domestic purposes, and that in the dry season there was never any surplus in the stream above such needs, a judgment awarding to defendant, as riparian proprietor, all of the water of the stream which he might require for domestic purposes appurtenant to his lands, including water for household and domestic use, watering stock, and irrigating lawns and gardens adjacent to the dwelling house on the land, was sufficiently favorable to defendant.

E. E. Hewlett, F. E. Johnston, H. L. Johnston, L. E. Johnston, and Hewlett, Bancroft & Ballantine, for appellants. A. J. Hull, John V. Filippini, and John T. York, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This controversy is between the plaintiffs, lower riparian proprietors, and defendants Hewlett, upper riparian proprietors, over the use of the waters of Huichica creek. The appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying defendants a new trial.

The waters of Huichica creek, flowing first through the lands of defendants Hewlett, were used by them, and the unused portion passed on to the lower lands of plaintiffs, where they were consumed for domestic purposes and for the watering of stock. In the warm and dry months of June, July, August, September, and October of each and every year, there was never a surplus of water above what was required for these purposes, and in many years a deficiency and shortage. The Hewletts had originally taken their water from the main stream, but subsequently they had availed themselves of the waters of the west branch of the creek. Shortly before the commencement of this action, they dammed the main stream, posted notice of appropriation of all the waters in it, filed the notice for record, dug a ditch, and proceeded to carry these waters to their lands for the irrigation of alfalfa. The result was the immediate cessation of the flow below, complaint by the lower riparian proprietors, with the statement by the Hewletts that they would find their claim presented in the recorder's office, and if plaintiffs desired to stop them from so diverting the waters they would have to proceed by injunction. This they did, and the injunction was granted.

Against the judgment, it is first contended that the portion defining the rights of Cleora M. Hewlett, owner of the upper riparian land, is indefinite and uncertain. That portion of the judgment so attacked is in the following language: "That the defendant, Cleora M. Hewlett, is justly entitled to take and use such a quantity of water flowing in said creek, through the lands of the said defendant, which, in addition to the water now taken from said west branch thereof, shall be required for all the natural or domestic uses and purposes appurtenant to the lands of said defendant which are within the watershed of and drained by and riparian to said Huichica creek (which said lands are described in the complaint in this action, and are the lands upon which the said defendant now resides), including water for household and domestic uses and purposes, for watering stock, for irrigating lawns and gardens adjacent to the dwelling house on said lands."

[1, 2] It is said that the judgment does not mean anything, so far as the defendant is concerned; that she possesses the right adjudged to her, independent of the judgment, by virtue of her riparian proprietorship. But if the court by solemn judgment has given to this defendant exactly what she says she is entitled to by law, her voice should be lifted in approbation, and not in complaint. In contemplation of the fact that what the court was called upon to decide were the twofold contentions of the Hewletts, the first an asserted right by appropriation to all of the waters of the creek, the second an asserted right of appropriation by user and prescription to certain of the waters of the creek, it was not only not a useless declaration for the court thus to define the precise rights of defendant, but it was a declaration and judgment made necessary by the very issues in the case.

[3] Nor can the complaint be entertained that the judgment is fatally uncertain in failing to award a definite quantum of water to defendants. Defendant's own conduct made this impossible; for the court vacated the submission of the cause to give the defendants an opportunity of showing the amount of water required for their use during the dry season, and defendants declined to produce such testimony. They are not in a position to complain of any uncertainty in this respect. Bathgate v. Irvine, 126 Cal. 135, 58 Pac. 442, 77 Am. St. Rep. 158; Strong v. Baldwin, 154 Cal. 150, 97 Pac. 178, 129 Am. St. Rep. 149.

[4] Nor is it perceived that this judgment in any sense compels defendants to continue to take water from the west branch. It declares in effect that they may take all the water which they require for the indicated purposes, and, so long as they are taking a portion of it from the west branch, may take the remainder from the main stream. And while it is true that the rights of a riparian owner are not limited by the quantum of water he may happen to be using, this judgment gives defendants the first right to all which they may require for the purposes of their superior use.

[5] Certain minor propositions are urged upon the appeal which have been examined, and which, it may be declared, without elaborate discussion, are not well founded, or, where well founded, are not of the essence of the controversy. These complaints go to an asserted absence of findings; that the findings are not responsive to the issues; and that the findings do not support the quantity of lands of the plaintiffs found to be riparian. But the findings show that plaintiffs as riparian owners need and use the water for domestic purposes and for the watering of domestic stock; that in the dry season of the year there is never any surplus of water in the stream over and above these needs. The judgment then awards to the defendants Hewlett, as riparian proprietors, all of the water of the stream which they may require "for all the natural and domestic uses and purposes appurtenant to the lands, * * * including water for household and domestic uses and purposes, for watering stock, for irrigating lawns and gardens adjacent to the dwelling house on said lands." Here is a most liberal award. It may involve the consumption and use of all the waters. It is the remainder, after such use, which is to be permitted to flow onto the lands of plaintiffs, and, as the court finds that in the dry months there is no surplus water above the needs of these plaintiffs, it follows that there can be none for the enlarged purposes of irrigation to which defendants purposed to devote it. The findings are therefore sufficiently complete and explicit, and the judgment is supported by the findings.

For these reasons, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

BELL v. SOLOMONS et al. (S. F. 5,673.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 29, 1912.)

1. Appeal and Error (§ 876*)—Scope of Review.

On appeal from an order refusing to set aside an order dismissing an action for want of prosecution, which latter had become final by failure to appeal, plaintiff cannot attack the dismissal on the grounds that material parts of the record had not been supplied after destruction in the earthquake fire, that the dismissal was beyond the power of the court or clerk, or that plaintiff was not in good faith notified of the intent to move for dismissal, as each of these matters could have been reviewed on appeal from the order of dismissal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3549–3559; Dec. Dig. § 876.*]

2. Appeal and Error (§ 876*)—Appealable Orders.

On an appeal from an order refusing to set aside a dismissal for want of prosecution, the court will not attempt to determine whether the pleadings and records show that the plaintiff is entitled to a judgment, as the dismissal of an action for lack of prosecution is without regard to the merits or demerits.

3. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT (§ 60*)—WANT OF PROSECUTION.

The power of a court to dismiss a cause for lack of prosecution does not depend upon the completeness of the rcords, and it cannot be attacked on the ground that at the time the order was made certain portions of the record which had been destroyed had not been replaced.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dismissal and Nonsuit, Cent. Dig. §§ 140–152; Dec. Dig. § 60.*]

4. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT (§ 79*)—FORM OF JUDGMENT.

A judgment of dismissal for lack of prosecution that the plaintiff take nothing is proper, as the court cannot undertake to determine the merits.

5. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT (§ 60*)—FAILURE TO PROSECUTE—EXCUSE.

That a judge who had formerly tried a cause was sick and unable to attend to his duties will not excuse a failure to prosecute, where the judge was but one of twelve judges of the court, as an application should have been made to the presiding justice to reassign the cause.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by Teresa Bell against Lucius L. Solomons and others. From an order denying a motion to vacate an order dismissing the action for want of prosecution, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

T. Z. Blakeman, for appellant. Edmund Tauszky and Wallace A. Wise, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco denying her motion to vacate an order, made on the motion of defendants, dismissing the action for want of prosecution. Code Civ. Proc. 583. The action was commenced in November, 1899, and was tried in October, 1900. Judgment for defendants was entered in February, 1901. Plaintiff appealed to this court from that judgment and from the order denying her motion for a new trial. On November 19, 1904, the judgment and order were reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial. The remittitur was filed in the superior court on January 16, 1905. On August 26th of that year, plaintiff filed a supplemental complaint, and upon October 10th following defendants answered thereto. The record in the superior court was destroyed by fire on April 18, 1906. No steps were taken by plaintiff for more than two years, either to restore the record, or to bring the action to trial. Finally, upon August 12, 1908, defendants procured a certified and attested copy of the transcript, and a certified copy of the remittitur, and filed a petition, for an order that this copy of the transcript be made the basis of any further proceedings, and that the certified copy of the remittitur be filed. This was in conformity with the provisions of the act in relation to the restoration of court records. Stats. 1906, p. 37. Notice of the application was served on plaintiff's attorney, and, without objection on his part, the application itself was granted on September 4, 1908. No suggestion was made at that time by plaintiff's attorney that the record was incomplete, or that he desired the restoration of the supplemental complaint and answer thereto above referred to. On September 8, 1908, defendants served upon plaintiff notice of a motion to dismiss the action for want of prosecution; the grounds of the motion being plaintiff's failure to bring the action to trial for more than two years after defendants had answered and for more than three years after the remittitur from the Supreme Court had been filed. The hearing of this motion was had, and on September 18, 1908, it was granted, and judgment of dismissal entered upon September 24, 1908. No appeal was ever taken from this judgment of dismissal. Thereafter, on October 9, 1908, plaintiff filed a petition for the restoration of the supplemental complaint and answer thereto. It was argued to the court that, as a judgment of dismissal of the action had been entered, these supplemental pleadings should be restored to the record nunc pro tunc as of the date of the restoration of the transcript. The court adopted this view, and, plaintiff refusing to accept it, the court denied her motion. No appeal was taken from this order. Thereafter, on January 19, 1909, plaintiff gave notice of a motion to vacate the order and judgment of dismissal, and this motion was denied on March 17, 1910. It is from this last-mentioned order that plaintiff prosecutes her appeal.

The propositions advanced upon this appeal are: (1) That the judgment of dismissal was irregular and void, because material and necessary parts of the pleadings had not been restored to the record; (2) that the judgment as entered was beyond the power of the court or clerk to make or enter, because of the following language in which the judgment is couched: "It is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that Teresa Bell, plaintiff, do take nothing by this action against the defendants, but that judgment of dismissal be and the same is hereby entered herein"; (3) that under the facts disclosed the plaintiff was not guilty of negligence in the prosecution of the action; (4) that plaintiff was a necessary party and an actor in the proceeding instituted by defendants to have the certified transcript filed made the basis of further proceedings, and that good faith required defendants to notify plaintiff of their intention to move for a dismissal; (5) that the pleadings and the records show that the plaintiff is entitled to a judgment against the defendants in a sum exceeding $1,000.

[1] It is at once apparent from a reading of these grounds that, one and all, they existed and were within the knowledge of plaintiff at the time of the hearing of defendants' motion to dismiss for lack of prosecution. Thus plaintiff knew that the record had not been completely restored. Plaintiff knew any and all of the facts which would justify her neglect and failure to restore the record and bring the action to trial. And as to the other propositions, if the judgment of dismissal was void, because the record had not been completely restored, or if the judgment of dismissal entered was in excess of the power of jurisdiction of court, or clerk, or if good faith required defendants to notify plaintiff of their intention to move for a dismissal, each and all of these matters were reviewable upon direct appeal from the judgment of dismissal, which appeal was never taken.

[2] The fifth proposition, that the records show that plaintiff is entitled to a judgment, is entirely beyond any consideration which here may be entered into. The dismissal of an action for lack of prosecution is without regard to the merits or demerits of the cause of action. The motion is granted as to a meritorious cause of action, as well as to one without merit, because in either case there has been a failure upon the part of the plaintiff to use the diligence which the law requires to make an end to litigation.

It is apparent, therefore, that this case is not an exceptional case like those of Moore v. Thompson, 138 Cal. 23, 70 Pac. 930, and De La Montanya v. De La Montanya, 112 Cal. 101, 44 Pac. 345, 32 L. R. A. 82, 53 Am. St. Rep. 165, where the facts subsequently arising or subsequently known may control the facts upon which the court exercised its discretion in granting or refusing to grant a particular order; but it is the typical case represented by Reay v. Butler, 69 Cal. 572, 11 Pac. 463; Goyhinech v. Goyhinech, 80 Cal. 409, 410, 22 Pac. 175; Harper v. Hildreth, 99 Cal. 265, 33 Pac. 1103; Estate of Gregory, 122 Cal. 483, 55 Pac. 144; Mantel v. Mantel, 135 Cal. 315, 67 Pac. 758; Alpers v. Bliss, 145 Cal. 565, 79 Pac. 171; Kent v. Williams, 146 Cal. 3, 79 Pac. 527. In the last-cited case, it is said: "The appeal from the order refusing to vacate the judgment does not present any facts for the consideration of the court, other than those which are presented upon appeal from the judgment itself; and the rule is well established that an order refusing to vacate a prior order or judgment from which an appeal may be taken is not appealable, unless there is a record which presents matters for consideration that could not be presented upon the appeal from the original order or judgment."

[3] But, aside from this, the contentions of the appellant are without merit. The judgment of the court was a dismissal of the action. Its power to dismiss the action did not depend upon a restoration of the records. The jurisdiction was not lost by a destruction of the records nor regained by their restoration. The jurisdiction of the court was always there, and with that jurisdiction it had power, under the law, to dismiss the action.

[4] As little merit is there in the attack on the form of the judgment. It was clearly a judgment of dismissal for lack of prosecution, and nothing more. In the nature of things, it could not and did not undertake to determine the merits of the action. Indeed, the court, by the judgment of dismissal, refused to consider them at all. Rosenthal v. McMann, 93 Cal. 509, 29 Pac. 121; Pyle v. Piercy, 122 Cal. 384, 55 Pac. 141.

[5] Nor is the failure of the plaintiff to restore the records and set the cause for trial in any wise excused by the circumstance, upon which reliance is placed, that Judge Hebbard, who had formerly tried the case, was ill and unable to attend to his duties. Judge Hebbard was but one of the twelve judges of the superior court. The application could and should have been made to the presiding justice to reassign the cause, and the application to restore the records could have been made at any time, and before any judge.

The order appealed from is therefore affirmed.

DOW v. SUNSET TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO. et al. (S. F. 5,641.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1912. Rehearing Denied March 1, 1912.)

1. Contribution (§ 5*)—Joint Wrongdoers—Statutes.

Code Civ. Proc. § 709, providing that when several persons are liable to execution, and more than a due proportion of the judgment is satisfied from the property of one of them, the person so paying may compel contribution from the others, etc., merely fixes a rule of procedure, and does not allow contribution between joint tort-feasors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contribution, Cent. Dig. §§ 6-9; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

2. Contribution (§ 5*)—Joint Wrongdoers.

Where a telephone company strung its wires too close to those of an electric light company, and the telephone wire sagged so that it came in contact with an uninsulated wire of the light company, and that company, though knowing of the danger, made no effort to correct it, both the light company and the telephone company were joint wrongdoers, and as such there was no right of contribution between them.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Waste, Judge.

Action by George W. Dow against the Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Company and the Oakland Gas, Light & Heat Company. There was a judgment for plaintiff against both defendants, which was wholly satisfied by the defendant light company, and from an order overruling its motion to direct execution against the telephone company that defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John J. McDonald, Samuel Rosenheim, and Bernard Silverstein (Garret W. McEnerney and Wm. B. Bosley, of counsel), for appellant. Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. On a former appeal in this case a judgment against both defendants was sustained. Dow v. Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Co., a Corporation, and Oakland Gas, Light & Heat Co., a Corporation, 157 Cal. 182, 106 Pac. 587. Plaintiff thereafter collected the entire judgment from the Oakland Gas, Light & Heat Company. That corporation, pursuant to the provisions of section 709 of the Code of Civil Procedure, filed with the county clerk of Alameda county a notice of payment of the judgment, with instructions that he make an entry of its claim for one-half of the amount of said judgment and costs against the Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Company. Subsequently a motion was made for an order directing the issuance of execution against the said telephone company for the amount claimed, and this appeal is prosecuted by the Oakland Gas, Light & Heat Company from an order denying said motion.

[1] The question, and the only question, presented by this appeal is this: Do the facts of this case place it within an exception to the general rule that there can be no enforced contribution from one of two joint tort-feasors to the other after the latter has been compelled to satisfy the judgment? There is no question with reference to the scope of section 709 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for it has been held by this court that a rule of procedure, and not a maxim of substantive law, is announced by that statute. It simply provides a convenient method of enforcing contribution by a judgment debtor who has paid a judgment as against a codefendant or codefendants liable for a proportion of the debt. It does not enlarge the general rule against contribution by joint tort-feasors. Forsythe v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 149 Cal. 572, 87 Pac. 24.

[2] Appellant contends and respondent concedes that in many jurisdictions the general rule regarding contribution among joint tort-feasors after payment of a judgment by one of them is subject to numerous exceptions. We need not, however, review the many interesting cases illustrating these exceptions which are cited and discussed in the briefs, because we think the law is settled in California regarding cases like the one at bar.

Plaintiff, Dow, was an employé of the telephone company defendant. He was sent to investigate some trouble with one of the telephone wires, and was assured by his superior that the wire was not "hot"; that is, not supercharged with electricity. While making an investigation, however, he was seriously injured by an electric shock received from one of the telephone wires which by the joint negligence of both defendant corporations had been permitted to come in contact with an electric light wire heavily charged with electricity. The telephone company had been, it is true, the original wrongdoer by stringing its wire in too close proximity to that of the other corporation, but, after dangerous contact had been caused by the sagging of the telephone wire upon the improperly insulated wire of the electric light company in such a way as to produce an occasional or "bouncing" contact, a servant of the latter company discovered the danger and reported it to his superior, but no steps were taken either to change the position of the electric light company's wire or to notify the telephone company of existing conditions. Both companies were liable, but appellant insists that it was only passively guilty of a tort, and that, therefore, it comes within an exception to the general rule above stated. With this view we cannot agree. It was the separate duty of each to take thorough precautions. Any accident due to neglect of such duty made the corporations jointly liable. As was said by the court in Fowden v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co., 149 Cal. 157, 86 Pac. 180, a case in which judgment had been rendered against two joint tort-feasors: "When we consider the nature of the liability of two or more persons jointly engaged in the commission of a tort, it is apparent that any such wrongdoer cannot at any stage of the proceedings insist that any or all of his associates in the act shall bear with him the burden of defending against the claim of the injured party or of compensating him for the injury. There is no right of contribution among them. They are all jointly and severally liable, as the injured party may elect. The injured party may sue all or any of them jointly, or each separately, or, having secured a joint judgment against all, enforce such judgment by execution against one only, the only limitation being that he can have but one satisfaction for the injury that he has received.

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Each of the joint tort-feasors being liable for all the damage, without regard to their different degrees of culpability, when his cause of action is satisfied as to one, it is satisfied as to all."

Forsythe v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., supra, is also authority for the doctrine that, as between two tort-feasors, there can be no enforced contribution. In that case the evidence showed that one Forsythe, a passenger on an electric car, received the injuries from which he afterwards died by reason of a collision between the car and a wagon belonging to the Los Angeles Hay Storage Company. The administratrix of Forsythe's estate sued the railway company and the owner of the wagon. Judgment was rendered in her favor against the railway company, but judgment against her for costs was given in favor of the Hay Storage Company. From this judgment plaintiff and the railway company both appealed. Mr. Justice McFarland, who wrote the opinion of this department (and we may say parenthetically that hearing in bank was denied), used this language: "This appellant further contends that, even if the judgment against it could be considered as right, still the court erred in not also rendering judgment against the other defendant, the storage company, because, as it claimed, the evidence showed that the said other defendant was also guilty of negligence which contributed to the injury. But the appellant is not a party aggrieved by the refusal of the court to give judgment against the storage company, even if such refusal could be considered erroneous as against plaintiff. It is beyond doubt the well-established general rule that there is no right of contribution between joint tort-feasors."

The above-cited cases are in their facts sufficiently analogous to the one at bar to make them binding precedents. Nor are the expressions of the rule with reference to joint tort-feasors contained in the opinions in those cases mere dicta, as appellant would have us find. It is true that in the Forsythe Case the court does construe section 709 of the Code of Civil Procedure as not being there applicable because that statute relates in terms only to cases in which judgment has been rendered, but, before discussing section 709 of the Code of Civil Procedure at all, the opinion asserts the law to be that there is no right of contribution between joint tort-feasors in a case like that, and the declaration was absolutely basic and necessary to the conclusion reached by the court in the determination of the vital question then before it, namely, was the judgment in its essence of no avail unless granted against all who proximately contributed to the injuries which caused Forsythe's death. In the Fowden Case this court decided that the general rule with reference to joint tort-feasors applied when a new trial had been granted to one of them. It was not a conclusion upon a collateral matter—not a dictum, but a necessary element in the decision of the case on appeal. If the opposite rule had been declared, the cause necessarily would have been decided the other way.

The law being thus settled in California, we need not examine the decisions in other states, wherein the general rule which we have been discussing is given many shades of variation and exception.

From the foregoing, it follows that the order denying execution is affirmed.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by Sidney L. Briggs against Hugh J. Crawford. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying his motion to set it aside, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Arthur L. Hawes, E. A. Meserve, and John D. Pope, for appellant. D. K. Trask and George P. Adams, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. The plaintiff prosecutes this appeal from the judgment and from an order denying his motion to set aside the judgment as not supported by the findings of fact. According to the allegations of the complaint, the Briggs Real Estate Company, a corporation, held title and possession of a lot of land in Los Angeles for owners who are named in the pleading. It is also alleged that on December 1, 1908, the Briggs Real Estate Company entered into an agreement for the sale of this property to the Jones & Ryder Land Company, a corporation, by the terms of which the notes of the latter corporation for $2,500, secured by a deed of trust to the Title Insurance & Trust Company, were to be taken in payment for the land; that as part of the consideration for the sale the Jones & Ryder Land Company agreed to cause to be constructed on the land a residence building at a cost of not less than $3,500, of which the sum of $3,000 was to be borrowed by the Jones & Ryder Land Company and secured by a mortgage on the property, the lien of said mortgage to be superior to the rights evidenced by the deed of trust; that, in pursuance of said agreement, the Briggs Real Estate Company on December 1, 1908, executed its deed to the Jones & Ryder Land Company, and received the promissory notes of the latter corporation for $2,500, secured as agreed by a deed of trust; that at or about the same time the Jones & Ryder Land Company executed its mortgage on the property for $3,000 to one R. D. Edwards, one of its employés, representing to the Briggs Real Estate Company that it had contracted with Edwards for a loan of $3,000 to be actually used in building the house on the lot in question; that L. E. Jones at all times acted in the transactions for the Jones & Ryder Land Company, and that both that corporation and Edwards were under his control; that the note and mortgage executed to Edwards were without consideration, and made fraudulently, for the purpose of inducing the Briggs Land Company to believe that the agreement with reference to the construction of a house on the land was being carried out; that on December 8, 1908, in pursuance of the fraudulent scheme, L. E. Jones caused R. D. Edwards to execute and deliver to him, without consideration, an assignment of the mortgage and notes; that the very slightest improvements had been placed on the property for which, if the court should find them of any value, the plaintiff offered to pay; that plaintiff was also prepared to surrender the notes executed by the Jones & Ryder Land Company, secured by the deed of trust, for any balance unpaid; that plaintiff had purchased the property about May 1, 1909, for $2,000 upon its sale under the provisions of the deed of trust; that he held title for the original owners; and that on April 1, 1909, L. E. Jones assigned the note and mortgage which he had received from Edwards to defendant Crawford, who paid no consideration therefor. The complaint also contains this language: "That said defendant at the time of said assignment to him had knowledge of the facts hereinbefore alleged." The prayer is for cancellation of the mortgage and for general equitable relief.

The answer traversed all of the material averments of the complaint. Upon the trial the court found the agreement for the sale to have been substantially as alleged in the complaint, except that the execution of the mortgage to Edwards and its assignment to Jones were both without fraud and with the knowledge of the Briggs Real Estate Company; the understanding having been that Jones was to raise the necessary $3,000 on said mortgage. There was a finding that the construction of a building on the property was commenced in good faith and with the approval of the Briggs Real Estate Company, but upon this particular lot only the cellar was excavated before the work was abandoned, and the value of the property was thereby increased $25. There are findings that no money was ever raised on the mortgage for the construction of the building; that the mortgage to Edwards and the assignment by him to Jones were without consideration; that prior to February 16, 1909, the defendant had rendered to L. E. Jones and the Jones & Ryder Land Company valuable services as an attorney at law which were reasonably worth $1,000, and that he had received cash payments on account amounting to $250; and that the assignment to him of the note and mortgage aforesaid were in consideration of this indebtedness. There are also the following findings: "At the time of the assignment of said note and mortgage to the defendant Crawford, and ever since on or about the 15th day of February, 1909, the said L. E. Jones had absented himself from the said county of Los Angeles, leaving no known address, and leaving no information from which he could be located. This fact last stated was known to the defendant, Crawford, when he received the said assignment of said note and mortgage, and said assignment was made by and through Harriet C. Jones as attorney in fact for said L. E. Jones. On said 1st day of April, 1909, the said L. E. Jones by Harriet C. Jones, his attorney in fact, as aforesaid, in addition to executing the assignment of said note and mortgage and indorsing said note to said defendant, also, at the same time, assigned and indorsed another $3,000 note and mortgage held under like conditions to the said Hugh J. Crawford, said two assignments and indorsements together constituting the satisfaction and payment of said indebtedness then existing of said L. E. Jones to said Hugh J. Crawford. At the time of receiving said assignments the said Hugh J. Crawford had no knowledge of the agreement above mentioned between the Jones & Ryder Land Company and the Briggs Real Estate Company, and had no knowledge that no money whatsoever had been loaned by R. D. Edwards to the Jones & Ryder Land Company, or that no money whatsoever had been borrowed on said note and mortgage, or that, in fact, no indebtedness existed thereon, and had no actual knowledge of the transactions between the Briggs Real Estate Company and the Jones & Ryder Land Company." As conclusions of law the court found that the mortgage of defendant was a valid lien on the property superior to the rights and claims of plaintiff, and that plaintiff should take nothing by his complaint.

Appellant's theory upon which he bases his argument herein is that, by purchasing the interest in the property at the sale under the trust deed, he became entitled to set up any defense to the mortgage which might have been urged by the Jones & Ryder Land Company; that want of consideration and failure of consideration are good defenses in an action to foreclose a mortgage; that such defenses are available by a mortgagor or by his successor in title; that, whether Crawford brings an action to foreclose the mortgage or Briggs seeks to have the cloud of the apparent lien removed, the validity and enforceability of the mortgage in the hands of Crawford is the decisive matter in the case; that a note and mortgage simultaneously executed, the note referring to the mortgage, constitute one transaction, and are to be taken together; that such note and mortgage are nonnegotiable, and, when assigned, are subject to all defenses that might be made if there were no assignment; that, therefore, the defense of failure of consideration may be urged by him as against Crawford; and that the circumstances under which defendant obtained the note and mortgage were sufficient to place him on inquiry, and to emphasize his position as an assignee with notice of the equities.

Respondent insists that this case comes within the rule of Lawrence v. Gayetty, 78 Cal. 126, 20 Pac. 382, 12 Am. St. Rep. 29, but, as appellant indicates in his brief, there was in that case no question of foreclosure of a mortgage. It was there held that where an unqualified conveyance is made upon consideration of a promise to perform certain work and place certain improvements upon the property conveyed, and to pay the purchase price in the future, there can be no cancellation of the deeds unless fraud be established. Respondent concedes that a note secured by a mortgage is a nonnegotiable instrument, within the law merchant, under the decisions of this court, but insists that there are many instances, of which the present case is an example, where defenses available between parties to the instrument may not be sustained against an assignee who has purchased for a valuable consideration. In this behalf he cites such cases as Mohr v. Byrne, 135 Cal. 88, 67 Pac. 11, and others holding that the purchaser of a chose in action takes in subordination to the existing equities of the parties to the original contract, but not with implied knowledge of the claims of third parties of which the purchaser has no actual notice.

[1, 2] But appellant contends that, by becoming the owner of the record title by his purchase at the sale under the deed of trust, he became not a "third party" as that term is used in the authorities cited, but a successor in interest of the mortgagor, entitled to assert all of the latter's equities against the mortgagee or his assignee. We think this contention must be sustained. This case comes within the principles announced in Meyer v. Weber, 133 Cal. 682, 65 Pac. 1110. In that case the Webers had given a note and mortgage to the Woodbridge Canal & Irrigation Company in consideration of an agreement upon the part of the mortgagee to construct a ditch from its main canal to the land described in the mortgage. The Woodbridge Canal & Irrigation Company assigned this note and mortgage to the plaintiff, and then became insolvent. The ditch was never built. Meyer sued to foreclose, and this court held that the defense of failure of consideration was available against the assignee. After discussing the nonnegotiability of the instrument, the court said: "The assignment and transfer of the note and mortgage in question, therefore, was without prejudice to any set-off or other defense existing in favor of the defendants Weber, the same as though there had been no assignment, and the action had been brought by the company to whom they were given. Civ. Code, § 1459; Code Civ. Proc. § 638. As the findings of the court show an utter failure of consideration as between the original parties, judgment properly followed in favor of the defendants." See, also, Higgins v. McDonald, 17 Cal. 290. If Edwards, the original mortgagee, had sued to foreclose the mortgage as against the Jones & Ryder Land Company, the original mortgagor, the partial failure of consideration would have been available as a defense, and it is equally potent in this action as between the successors of the original mortgagor and mortgagee. Anglo-Californian Bank v. Field, 154 Cal. 516, 98 Pac. 267. The rule is thus stated in 27 Cyc. at page 1324: "One about to take an assignment of a mortgage is bound in his own interest to inquire of the mortgagor as to the validity of the instrument and of the transaction on which it was founded and as to the amount due, and whether the mortgagor has any defenses or set-offs to interpose against it. If he neglects to do this, he takes the mortgage subject to all infirmities or objections which could have been set up against it in the hands of the original mortgagee, being charged with knowledge of all facts which such an inquiry would have disclosed."

[3] We do not think that, because the agreement to build was a verbal one, the force of the rule charging the assignee with knowledge of the equities is lessened. There is no provision of law that has been called to our attention requiring such a contract to be in writing. Where a consideration for a mortgage fails in whole or in part, that fact is the essential matter to be established by the defendant in an action to foreclose or by the plaintiff in a cause like the one at bar. Whether the failure is due to breach of a written or a verbal agreement is immaterial.

[4] Even if, as respondent asserts, the agreement to build the house were one required to be in writing, the court found that it was partially executed and in good faith, by the excavation of the cellar. This would take the transaction out of the statute of frauds.

[5] We are of the opinion that even if, as the court found, Crawford took the mortgage without actual knowledge of the partial failure of consideration as between the original parties, he was charged with notice of the equities in favor of plaintiff.

[6] Nor was it necessary that notice be alleged in the complaint, as the facts were fully set forth showing the want of consideration for the original mortgage. In view of this conclusion, it will be unnecessary to review appellant's argument based on the peculiar circumstances under which defendant took the assignment of this and another mortgage from his long absent client, by the latter's attorney in fact, for notes, supported by mortgages, amounting in all to about ten times the just amount of his claim as found by the court. Nor need we consider the respondent's contention that an order denying a motion to set aside a judgment is not appealable.

The judgment is reversed, with instructions to the lower court to enter a judgment to the effect that, upon payment by plaintiff of $25 into court for the benefit of the defendant, the lien of the latter's mortgage be decreed to be satisfied.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

LOS ANGELES GAS & ELECTRIC CO. v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY.

(L. A. 2,560.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 2, 1912.)

1. Taxation (§ 446*) — Assessment — Collateral Attack.

The conclusion of assessing officers as to the value of property for the purposes of taxation, when honestly arrived at, and not made in pursuance of some fixed rule, the result of which is necessarily discriminatory and inequitable, cannot be attacked collaterally in the courts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 785; Dec. Dig. § 446.*]

2. Taxation (§ 446*)—Assessment—Inequality—Relief.

A taxpayer may collaterally attack an assessment made fraudulently and corruptly, with the intent of discriminating against him, where such discrimination results from inequality of valuation, the same as from any other cause.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 785; Dec. Dig. § 446.*]

3. Taxation (§ 446*) — Assessment — Collateral Attack.

Where an assessment for taxation is fraudulent, but the assessment has been reviewed by the board of supervisors, acting as a board of equalization, and it has fixed the same value as the assessor, the assessment cannot be attacked for fraud without showing that the board of supervisors participated in the fraud, since its review of the assessment is judicial, and its decision is an independent and conclusive judgment, taking the place of that of the assessor; and by fixing the valuation at the same amount as the assessor it renders the fraud of the assessor immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 785; Dec. Dig. § 446.*]

4. Taxation (§ 446*)—Assessment—Review—Conclusiveness.

The fact that an assessor intentionally uses a different method in reaching the value of one person's property from that used in all other cases involving similar property, where the only result of such action is an overvaluation of the property of that person, does not change the rule that the review by the board of equalization is conclusive, in the absence of fraud, since the question for the board is a pure question of fact whether the property had been overvalued.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 446.*]

5. Taxation (§ 543*) — Recovery of Tax Paid—Evidence—Sufficiency.

In an action to recover back a tax, claimed to have been illegally assessed, evidence held insufficient to show that, on the hearing before the board of equalization, by reason of the noise and confusion in the manner of conducting the proceedings, the members of the board could not hear and understand the testimony of the witnesses.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1013; Dec. Dig. § 543.*]

Action by the Los Angeles Gas & Electric Company against the County of Los Angeles. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. D. Fredericks, Dist. Atty., and Hartley Shaw, Chief Deputy Dist. Atty., for appellant. Wm. A. Cheney and Geo. P. Adams (Le Roy M. Edwards, of counsel), for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from a judgment and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, in an action brought by plaintiff to recover $11,728.12 state and county taxes paid by plaintiff under protest for the fiscal year 1906–07. The judgment was in favor of plaintiff for the full amount claimed.

The amount sought to be recovered was a portion of the taxes paid by plaintiff upon certain tangible assets, such as its gas pipes, meters, regulators, electric service, poles, wire, electric underground system, gas works plant, electric works plant, etc., and was the amount claimed to have been illegally collected by reason of an overvaluation of such property by the assessor of Los Angeles county. Recognizing the general rule that no remedy can be had in the courts for mistakes honestly made in the valuation of property for purposes of taxation by the assessing officers and tribunals appointed by law for the review of assessments, such as our county boards of equalization, the theory of plaintiff's complaint was that the excessive valuations of its property were the result of an arbitrary plan adopted by the assessor for the valuation thereof, varying from that employed by him with reference to the property of other taxpayers, and resulting in placing upon its property an unequal burden of taxation, which plan was willfully and designedly adopted by him for the purpose of discriminating against plaintiff. The result was, it is claimed, not that the property was assessed for a sum exceeding its cash value, but that it was assessed at a greater proportion of such value than any other property, and especially the property of its two competitors in business, thus bringing about inequality of taxation, and denying plaintiff the equal protection of the laws. While the trial court found that the allegations of the complaint to the effect that the assessor acted with corrupt or malicious motives or fraudulently were untrue, it did find that "the extreme disparity between the valuation of plaintiff's property and other property of substantially the same character and value * * * all arose from a design on the part of the assessor to discriminate against plaintiff, and the adoption and use by said assessor of an intentionally radical different method in arriving at the value of plaintiff's property from that used in all other cases involving property of the same character and similarly situated, and from an entire failure on the part of the assessor to make any examination whatever of any of the properties of plaintiff so assessed, and that by reason of said intentional discrimination and the use of said radically different method plaintiff was inevitably assessed upon a very much larger proportion of its properties' value than were other taxpayers and property owners in the county of Los Angeles, and than were its competitors in business in said county."

There was no attempt to state in the complaint or to prove on the trial anything in the nature of willful fraud on the part of the county board of equalization, to which application was made by plaintiff for a reduction of its assessment, and by which such application, so far as the particular property here involved is concerned, was denied. The only allegation in this behalf was as follows: "Plaintiff alleges that so many other protests and petitions for reductions of assessments were filed after plaintiff's said protest and petition (alleged to have been filed July 13, 1906) were filed, heard, and submitted, and the time of the said board of supervisors in which to hear and pass upon the same was so short, that the said board of supervisors did not have time in which to consider in detail said protest of plaintiff, and by reason thereof refused to reduce or alter said assessment values in any manner whatsoever." It is possible that after judgment this allegation might properly be construed in support of the judgment as alleging that the board refused to reduce or even consider the assessment, solely because it did not have time to give it any consideration; but there was no evidence in the record tending to support any such conclusion. The trial court found that "said board did not take time in which to consider in detail said protest of plaintiff, and said protest was not fully heard or considered by said board, and plaintiff was not given time and opportunity to introduce fully all evidence offered by it in support of its protest, and said board did not act with fairness and justice in the matter, and failed and refused to give plaintiff's application careful and proper consideration, and the action of said board in passing upon said protest and claim of plaintiff, and refusing to reduce or alter said assessment values in any manner whatsoever, was merely perfunctory in character and hardly more than a mere form, and did not constitute a hearing of plaintiff's protest."

[1] It is not disputed that the conclusion of assessing officers as to the value of property for purposes of taxation, when honestly arrived at, and when not made in pursuance of some fixed rule or general system, the result of which is necessarily discriminatory and inequitable, is conclusive on the courts, however erroneous the conclusion of those officers may be. The law necessarily leaves the determination of the question of fact of value to certain officers, and when it appoints tribunals for that purpose, as in this state primarily the assessor, and, for purpose of review, the board of supervisors, acting as a county board of equalization, the conclusion of those tribunals on such a question of fact constitutes a judgment that is not collaterally assailable in the courts. This is the universal rule, and it has been so held in this state. San Jose Gas Co. v. January, 57 Cal. 614; Henne v. Los Angeles Co., 129 Cal. 297, 61 Pac. 1081. See, also, Gray on Limitations of Taxing Power, § 1460. As put in Taylor v. Louisville, etc., R. R. Co., 88 Fed. 350, 31 C. C. A. 537, such an attack will not lie in the courts, "where the injury complained of arises only from the erroneous but honest judgment of the lawfully constituted tax tribunal."

[2] But it is likewise universally held that a taxpayer may so assail an assessment in the courts, where it was "fraudulently and corruptly made, with the intention of discriminating against him, and for the purpose of causing him to pay more than his share of the public taxes," and it has that effect, or where there is something equivalent to fraud in the making of the assessment, producing such effect. See County of Los Angeles v. Ballerino, 99 Cal. 593, 32 Pac. 581, 34 Pac. 329; Pacific, etc., Co. v. Dalton, 119 Cal. 604, 51 Pac. 1072; Oregon, etc., R. R. Co. v. Jackson Co., 38 Ore. 589, 599, 64 Pac. 307, 65 Pac. 369, and cases there cited. This is as true where the injurious effect so produced is caused by inequality of valuation as by any other cause, for, as said in Judson on Taxation, at page 608: "It is obvious that, where taxation is upon property that requires valuation, inequality of taxation is produced as surely by inequality of valuation as by inequality of the rate of tax."

[3] We are, however, satisfied that it should be held, even if we assume that there is enough in the evidence to warrant a conclusion that there was anything equivalent to fraud in the matter of the valuation of this property by the assessor, that to enable plaintiff to prevail it must be made to appear that the county board of equalization in some manner participated in the fraud when the matter came before it on application for reduction. Under our law, the county board of supervisors is a county board of equalization, invested with the power, after giving notice in such manner as it may by rule prescribe, "to increase or lower the entire assessment roll, or any assessment contained therein, so as to equalize the assessment of the property contained in said roll, and make the assessment conform to the true value of such property in money." Pol. Code, § 3673. When completed, the assessment roll must be delivered to its clerk, who must give notice of the time at which the board will meet to equalize assessments. Pol. Code, § 3654. The board must meet on the first Monday of July in each year for equalization purposes and continue in session until such business is disposed of, but not later than the third Monday in July. Pol. Code, § 3672. No reduction can be made, except upon the verified application of the taxpayer, showing the facts upon which it is claimed the reduction should be made (Pol. Code, § 3674), and on the hearing the board must examine, on oath, the taxpayer or his agent, and may subpœna witnesses and hear and take such evidence as in its discretion it may deem proper. Pol. Code, §§ 3675, 3676. Upon such hearing, it is the duty of such board to determine the value of the property under consideration for assessment purposes upon such basis as is used in regard to other property, so as to make all the assessments as equal and fair as is practicable. In discharging these duties, the board is exercising judicial functions, and its decision as to the value of the property and the fairness of the assessment, so far as amount is concerned, constitutes an independent and conclusive judgment of the tribunal created by law for the determination of that question, which abrogates and takes the place of the judgment of the assessor upon that question. Where the only alleged effect of the fraud of the assessor is excessive valuation of the property of the taxpayer for assessment purposes, the conclusion of the board of equalization that the fair value for such purposes is the amount fixed by the assessor would appear to render the fraud of that officer immaterial; for it is in no way injurious. According to the conclusion of the board, the property is assessed at the same value proportionately as all the other property in the county. Unless that determination can be avoided, it is conclusive on the question of fairness of the valuation; hence on the question of injury. Under the authorities, it cannot be avoided, unless the board has proceeded "arbitrarily and in willful disregard of the law intended for their guidance and control, with the evident purpose of imposing unequal burdens upon certain of the taxpayers" (Oregon, etc., R. R. Co. v. Jackson Co., supra), or unless there be something equivalent to fraud in the action of the board. Mere errors in honest judgment as to the value of the property will not obviate the binding effect of the conclusion of the board. Such a board is, "in the absence of fraud or malicious abuse of its powers, * * * the sole judge of questions of fact and of the values of property." La Grange, etc., Co. v. Carter, 142 Cal. 565, 76 Pac. 243.

The precise question under discussion has never been determined by this court, but what we have said not only appears to be true on principle, but is supported by ample authority. In State v. C. P. R. R. Co., 21 Nev. 178, 26 Pac. 225, 1109, an action to recover taxes, it was said that, while fraud in the assessment is a good defense, it clearly must be such fraud as works some damage; that a fraudulent overvaluation of property, attempted by the assessor, can do no harm, if corrected by the board of equalization; and that, "if the board bring their honest judgment to bear upon the matter, and determine that the property has not been overvalued, this determination is conclusive that the assessor's attempted fraud has done the defendant no damage." In Southern Oregon Co. v. Coos Co., 39 Or. 185, 64 Pac. 646, the complaint was similar to the complaint made here, namely, fraudulent discrimination on the part of the assessor resulting in an overvaluation of plaintiff's property as compared with the valuation put upon other property of equal value and similarly situated. The court said that, "when the assessment is attacked because arbitrarily and fraudulently made, the charge must go further than to inculpate the assessor," and "that it must likewise involve the board of equalization and the county court, sitting as an equalizing body, as the judgment of the latter is paramount." In Burton, etc., Co. v. Traeger, 187 Ill. 9, 58 N. E. 418, where the board of review had full power to correct the assessment, if unjust in any respect, but, after hearing, had allowed the assessor's valuation to stand, it was held, no fraud being charged on the part of the board, that, even if there was fraudulent conduct on the part of the assessor in making the valuation, "such * * * fraud is purged by the hearing, review, and action of the board of review." See, also, California, etc., Co. v. Los Angeles, 10 Cal. App. 185, 191, 101 Pac. 547; Crawford v. Polk Co., 112 Iowa, 118, 83 N. W. 825; volume 27, Ency. of Law, p. 728; Cooley on Taxation (3d Ed.) p. 1459, note. No case cited is opposed to our views on this point. The question was not considered in either County of Los Angeles v. Ballerino, supra, or Pacific Postal Co. v. Dalton, supra, and apparently could not have been involved in the latter case.

[4] Learned counsel for plaintiff appear to concede that the judgment of the board of equalization, honestly given, "is conclusive on value, a matter of fact," but say that this is "not a case of excessive valuation, * * * but a plain case of the intentional use, for the purpose of discrimination, of a different method of assessment." But, in view of the fact that the only alleged effect of the assessor's action was an overvaluation of plaintiff's property as compared with the valuation of other property, the question was simply whether there was such an overvaluation of plaintiff's property—a pure question of fact for the board of equalization to determine. As said in Crawford v. Polk Co., supra: "An error in overvaluation, * * * if fraudulent, differs from others [errors] only with respect to the motive of the assessor. The same remedy is available." The case just cited is also authority for the proposition that in such a case fraud on the part of the assessor does not make the assessment void; but that the taxpayer must pursue the method pointed out by statute for any review thereof. The cases of Columbia Savings Bank v. Los Angeles Co., 137 Cal. 467, 70 Pac. 308, and Board of Commissioners v. Wilson, 15 Colo. 90, 24 Pac. 563, are not at all in point, as is shown by the quotations therefrom contained in plaintiff's brief. In neither case was there any question of valuation of property concerned. In one the assessment was upon United States bonds, which could not be assessed at all, and was absolutely void, and in the other the questions raised were regarding the construction and validity of statutes and the legality of a tax imposed, none of which questions could be conclusively determined by the board of equalization. In the Colorado case, it was said: "If the right to tax property was unquestioned, and the only questions were those of valuation and amount of tax, we might hold their [the board's] action conclusive."

We have already set forth the finding of the trial court regarding the proceedings before the board of equalization. In so far as it may be held to imply any lack of opportunity to plaintiff to fully present its case on the application for a reduction to that body, or any lack of diligence or fairness on the part of the members thereof in the hearing, consideration, and decision, or that the action of the board was hardly more than a mere form, not constituting a hearing of plaintiff's protest, we are satisfied that it must be held to be without sufficient support in the evidence. By reason of the fact that plaintiff's application was not filed until three days before the time when the board of equalization must finally adjourn, and that there were numerous other applications for reduction of assessment, the time for the consideration of plaintiff's application was necessarily short. It is also apparent that the proceedings before the board were not and could not be conducted with the same degree of order and formality that is ordinarily attained in a well-regulated court of justice. But there is no pretense that plaintiff did not introduce all the evidence that it offered, or that it was deprived of opportunity to offer all the evidence it desired, or that the members of the board did not do their best to arrive at a fair and honest decision in the matter.

[5] There is some complaint to the effect that, by reason of noise and confusion in the manner of conducting the proceedings, the members of the board could not hear and understand all that was said by the witnesses; but this claim appears to be based solely on the expressed doubt of one of the representatives of plaintiff whether they could, under the circumstances, hear all that was said. An official stenographer heard all the evidence and took it down in shorthand, and all of the members of the board who testified (four of the five members) said that they heard such evidence and considered it. It appears from the evidence that when it came to a decision the application of plaintiff for a reduction of its assessment was granted in part upon some property, but denied as to the property involved in this case. The record does not show what evidence was given before the board of equalization as to the value of the property here involved. The finding as to the action of the board being properly attacked by specifications of insufficiency of evidence, and the statement on motion for a new trial purporting to contain all the evidence given in the lower court on all matters covered by such specifications, there is absolutely no warrant for holding that the decision of the board was not an absolutely fair and correct decision upon the evidence introduced before it—a decision to the effect that, applying the same method as was applied in the ascertainment of the value for assessment purposes of all the property in the county, the value apportioned to plaintiff's property was not excessive. We can find no warrant in the record for avoiding the decision of the board of equalization, and that being so it must be held that it is an adjudication that the valuations placed upon plaintiff's property here involved were not excessive, and that such property was not assessed at a greater proportion of its value than any other property in the county—an adjudication which is conclusive upon the courts. The conclusion we have reached renders it unnecessary to consider any other proposition discussed on this appeal.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

SECOMBE v. LOUIS PHILLIPS' ESTATE et al. (L. A. 2,749.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 2, 1912.)

1. TAXATION (§ 573*)—NATURE OF PROCEEDINGS—STRICT COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE.

Notwithstanding the change in the law, whereby property delinquent for taxes is struck off, in the first instance, to the state, the doctrine that tax proceedings are in invitum, and must be in strict accord with statutory requirements, still obtains.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1141–1144; Dec. Dig. § 573.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 734*)—ASSESSMENT—SHOWING AMOUNT OF TAX.

An assessment of land, and so the tax sale based thereon, is void; there being no dollar mark or other indication on the assessment roll showing the meaning of the figures in the column for statement of amount of tax.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1470–1473; Dec. Dig. § 734.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon F. Moss, Judge.

Action by A. H. Secombe against Louis Phillips' Estate, a corporation, and others. Judgment for defendants; plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. A. Stice, for appellant. O. B. Carter, Carter, Kirby & Henderson, and Frank L. Perry, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff, who was the grantee named in certain tax deeds, sued to quiet title to the lots which were described in said deeds. Separate trials were had, and judgments given in favor of defendants John Stigers and Julia A. Ivers, quieting their titles, as against plaintiff, to the parcels claimed by them respectively. It was stipulated at the trial that plaintiff's only claim of title was under his tax deeds and that, unless said deeds were sufficient to vest title in him, John Stigers was the owner of lot 28 and the northwest 20 feet of lot 29 in block 172 of the city of Redondo Beach, as per map recorded in Book 39, p. 1 et seq., Miscellaneous Records of Los Angeles county, and Julia A. Ivers of lot 24 in block 10 of Elysian Heights, in the city of Los Angeles, as per map recorded in Book 83, p. 55, Miscellaneous Records of said county. Both defendants offered to pay, and did pay into court for plaintiff, the amount of the taxes, penalties, interest, and costs due on each piece of property at the time of its sale by the state. The plaintiff appeals from the judgments and from the orders denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] Appellant's counsel makes the general statement that tax proceedings can no longer be said to be in invitum, and that the court "as jealously guards the title of the state now as it formerly did the rights of delinquent taxpayers." In this regard, he cites Miller v. Williams, 135 Cal. 184, 67 Pac. 788, Davis v. Pacific Improvement Co., 137 Cal. 250, 70 Pac. 15, Best v. Wohlford, 144 Cal. 734, 78 Pac. 293, Fox v. Wright, 152 Cal. 60, 91 Pac. 1005, Bank of Lemoore v. Fulgham, 151 Cal. 236, 90 Pac. 936; and he insists that under the authority of these cited cases the informalities appearing in the record are but trivial, and should not by this court be held to invalidate his asserted title. A reading of any one of the cases cited, however, will demonstrate the fallacy of his conclusion that proceedings culminating in the sale of property for delinquent taxes are no longer in invitum. While it is true that the change in the law, whereby the property delinquent for taxes was struck off, in the first instance, to the state, made inapplicable some of the reasoning of the earlier cases, the doctrine that such proceedings must be in strict accord with statutory requirements has never been abandoned. When we consider, for example, that in Miller v. Williams, supra, the reason for sustaining the judgment was that the lands were sold for eight cents more than was due for taxes, and that in Fox v. Townsend, 152 Cal. 51, 91

Pac. 1004, 1007, the assessment on one lot was held void, because a dollar mark or other sign was not used to explain the figures in that column of the assessment roll designed to show the value of the property and the amount of the taxes, the existence of the requirement of strict compliance with the statute is emphasized.

[2] Respondents urge a number of reasons in support of the court's conclusion in their favor. One of these is that the assessment on each parcel of land was void, and that the tax sales, based upon such assessments, were likewise nullities, because there was no dollar mark or other abbreviation or indication on the assessment roll showing what the figures meant which appeared in the column prepared for the statement of the amount of the tax on each lot. An examination of the transcript shows that this objection to the sufficiency of the deeds is well taken. This brings the case at bar within the rule of such authorities as Fox v. Townsend, supra, and therefore justifies the decrees entered herein.

Numerous other arguments are made by respondents in support of the judgments; but as appellant has filed no reply brief, and as the one reason above given seems to be sufficient, it will not be necessary to review the other points made by respondents' counsel in their brief.

It follows that the judgments and orders must be, and they are hereby, affirmed.

MARDIS v. McCARTHY, Mayor, et al.

(S. F. 6090.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 29, 1912.)

1. Constitutional Law (§ 63*)—Division of Governmental Powers—Delegation of Legislative Power.

If, by the approval by the electors, pursuant to Const. art. 11, § 8, of a freeholder's charter or an amendment thereto, vesting in a city authority to legislate concerning local matters, the Legislature delegates legislative power, such delegation is not objectionable, being specially authorized by such provision of the Constitution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 108–114; Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

2. Municipal Corporations (§ 300*)—Public Improvements — Procedure—Validity of Ordinance.

If a freeholder's charter, adopted pursuant to the Constitution, may define the procedure for tunnel or street improvements, it may authorize the board of supervisors of the municipality to enact the mode of procedure by ordinance; the ordinance having the same binding effect as if its terms had been incorporated in the charter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 300.*]

3. Municipal Corporations (§ 450*)—Public Improvements — "Assessment" — Districts.

St. 1911, p. 1686, amending the charter of the city and county of San Francisco, adds to article 6 a chapter numbered 8, which by section 1 empowers the board of supervisors to order the construction of a tunnel and levy the expenses thereof upon private property "in the manner and under and subject to the proceedings, powers, * * * and limitations of chapter 2, of this article, providing for street work and street improvements." Chapter 2 of the charter, by section 5 (St. 1899, p. 295), authorized the board of supervisors to define the districts benefited by a proposed improvement and to be assessed to pay its expense, and St. 1911, p. 1691, added to chapter 2, art. 6, of the charter, a section numbered 33, which provides the methods of procedure for constructing tunnels and "for the assessment of expenses thereof * * * on private property." Held, that the charter provisions authorized the assessment of the cost of construction of a tunnel upon a special district; the word "assessment," as here involved, meaning a burden imposed upon property to pay the cost of the improvement made with reference to the supposed benefit.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 549–555; vol. 8, p. 7583.]

4. Municipal Corporations (§ 485*)—Public Improvements—Assessments—Certificates—Validity.

An ordinance, enacted by the city and county of San Francisco, providing the procedure for the construction of tunnels, etc., and authorizing the issuance of certificates by the auditor bearing interest at the rate determined by the board of supervisors, payable out of the assessments levied against the property within the assessment district, was not objectionable, as authorizing the city to borrow money for the work, the certificates not being obligations of the city, and was authorized by St. 1911, p. 1691, adding to Charter of City and County of San Francisco, art. 6, c. 2, a section numbered 33, permitting the board of supervisors to provide for the payment of assessments, in annual installments, interest on the certificates, being properly chargeable to the property owners as incidental expenses in providing a fund for doing the work.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1140–1144; Dec. Dig. § 485.*]

5. Municipal Corporations (§ 269*)—Public Improvements — Authority to Construct — Charter Provisions — Construction.

The charter of the city and county of San Francisco, as amended by St. 1911, p. 1686, adding to article 6 a chapter numbered 8, empowering (section 1) the board of supervisors to order "the construction" of any tunnel, etc., in or under a street, includes the incidental power to lay and pave sidewalks necessary to make the tunnel available for public use.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 718–724; Dec. Dig. § 269.*]

6. Municipal Corporations (§ 413*)—Street Improvements—Expenses.

Even if the construction of a tunnel "in or under" a street be an improvement of the street, Charter of City and County of San Francisco (as amended by St. 1911, p. 1686) art. 6, c. 8, § 1, authorizing the board of supervisors to order the construction of tunnels

---

"in, on, or under any accepted or unaccepted street * * * and levy the cost and expenses thereof upon private property," would prevent the application of article 6, c. 2, § 23, of the charter, requiring accepted streets to be improved by the city and county, so that the cost of such tunnel improvements in an accepted street could be levied upon the property benefited.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 413.*]

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 269*)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—IMPROVEMENTS AUTHORIZED.

The power to order "the construction" of a tunnel in any street, etc., given to the board of supervisors by the charter of the city and county of San Francisco, as amended by St. 1911, p. 1686, adding to article 6, c. 8, a section numbered 1, authorized the changing of grades of a street necessitated by the tunnel.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 269.*]

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 514*)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—SUPPLEMENTAL ASSESSMENTS—PROPRIETY.

Where an ordinance authorizing the construction of a street tunnel provided that the "benefits estimated shall not exceed the total of such estimated costs, damages, and expenses," and that the assessments shall be "in accordance with the benefits," a provision authorizing supplemental assessments was not invalid on the ground that an additional assessment could not be made which would exceed the benefits determined when the original assessment was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 514.*]

9. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 514*)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—ASSESSMENTS—SUPPLEMENTAL ASSESSMENTS—TIME OF OBJECTION.

An objection to the provision of an ordinance for a supplemental assessment for street tunnel improvements is premature if made before an attempt to levy such additional assessments.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 514.*]

10. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 304*)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

A provision of an ordinance providing for the construction of a tunnel, covering "the incidental expenses" of the work, is not objectionable because the items constituting such expenses are not specifically defined by the ordinance, it giving full opportunity for objections and a hearing thereon if improper items are included in the report upon which the assessment is based.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 811–816; Dec. Dig. § 304.*]

11. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 450*)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—ASSESSMENT DISTRICTS.

Where a street tunnel, though a single work, united separate districts, each of which was benefited thereby, an assessment upon the lands of both districts was proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1073, 1074; Dec. Dig. § 450.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by B. A. Mardis against P. H. McCarthy, Mayor of the City and County of San Francisco, and others. From a judgment for defendants on demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Hillyer, Stringham & O'Brien, for appellant. Percy V. Long, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment entered in favor of the defendants upon an order sustaining their demurrer to his complaint. The action was instituted to obtain an injunction restraining the mayor, the supervisors, and other officers of the city and county of San Francisco, from proceeding under a certain resolution, adopted by the board of supervisors, declaring the intention of said board to order the construction of a tunnel in or under Stockton street from the northerly line of Sutter street to the southerly line of Sacramento street.

A prior attempt to authorize the construction of such a tunnel, and the assessment of the cost thereof upon a special assessment district was before this court in Gassner v. McCarthy, 116 Pac. 73, where it was held that the charter of the city and county, as it then read, did not authorize the levy of a special assessment to pay the cost of constructing a tunnel. The proceedings here involved were, however, taken under amendments which have been added to the charter since the institution of the proceedings involved in the Gassner Case, and the matters there decided throw no light upon the questions now before us.

The charter amendments in question were approved by the Legislature on February 7, 1911. They consisted in the addition to article 6 of said charter of a new chapter to be known as chapter 8 (Stats. 1911, p. 1686), and of the addition to chapter 2, art. 6, of a section to be known as section 33 (Stats. 1911, p. 1691). Chapter 8 so added to article 6 bears the title "Tunnels, Subways and Viaducts," and is divided into four sections. Section 1 reads as follows: "The board of supervisors are hereby empowered to order the construction of any tunnel, subway or viaduct, in, on, under, or over, any accepted or unaccepted open public street, avenue, lane, alley, place or court, within the city and county, or any other land of the city and county, or in, on, under, or over, any land in which and where the city and county may then have an easement or right of way therefor, and to levy the cost and expenses thereof upon private property, in the manner and under and subject to the proceedings, powers, restrictions and limitations in chapter 2 and chapter 7 of this article provided for street work and street improvement."

Section 2 authorizes the board of supervisors to acquire by purchase or condemnation any land, easement, or property necessary and convenient for any purpose mentioned in section 1, and to levy the damages, costs, and expenses thereof upon private property "in the manner and under and subject to the proceedings, powers, restrictions and limitations in chapter 3 and chapter 7 of this article providing for the opening and extending, straightening or closing up in whole or in part of any street, avenue, lane, alley, court or place." The reference in sections 1 and 2 to chapter 7 is meaningless, since article 6 contains no such chapter.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Section 3 reads: "The board of supervisors may, in its discretion, order that not more than one-half of the whole of the costs and expenses of any of the work or acquisitions in sections 1 and 2 in this chapter mentioned, or the damages resulting therefrom, be paid out of the treasury of the city and county from such fund as the board of supervisors may designate. Whenever a part of said cost or expense is so ordered to be paid before the making of an assessment therefor, the board of public works, in making up the assessment provided for such cost and expense, shall first deduct from the whole cost and expense such part thereof as has been ordered to be paid out of the municipal treasury and shall assess the remainder of said cost and expense proportionately upon the lots, parts of lots, and lands, in the assessment district or liable to be assessed therefor, and in the manner hereinbefore referred to and provided."

Section 4 relates to the use of tunnels by street railroads, and has no bearing upon the present controversy.

Section 33 of chapter 2 of article 6, added to the charter at the same time, reads as follows: "The methods of procedure in this article provided for the improvement of streets or for the construction of tunnels, subways or viaducts and appurtenances thereto, and for the assessment of the expense thereof or any portion of such expense upon private property shall not be deemed exclusive, but the board of supervisors by an affirmative vote of not less than two-thirds of the members thereof, may by ordinance substitute therefor any method of procedure in any general law of the state of California now in force and effect, or as the same may be amended, or that may hereafter be enacted, providing for any such improvements in municipalities, and levying assessments for the expense or portion thereof on private property; or the said board may by a like affirmative vote of the members thereof adopt an ordinance which may from time to time be revised or amended, providing a method of procedure for such improvement and assessment; and, in such ordinance if said board deems it expedient provision may be made for the payment of any assessment levied in pursuance thereof in annual installments covering a term not to exceed ten years upon conditions as to said board may seem reasonable and just, the rate of interest to be paid on such payments not to exceed seven per cent. per annum."

It will be observed that the section last quoted provides three alternative methods of procedure: (1) The method specifically outlined in the charter itself; (2) any method of procedure, provided by general law, which may be adopted by the vote of two-thirds of the members of the board of supervisors; or (3) such method, differing both from the provisions of the charter and from the general laws, as may be provided by an ordinance adopted by a like vote of the board of supervisors. The board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco proceeded in the third way and in September, 1911, adopted by unanimous vote an ordinance providing a method for the construction of tunnels and for the assessment of the cost and damages thereof upon private property benefited thereby. In November, 1911, the board by like vote adopted an ordinance amending several sections of such ordinance.

The general scheme of the ordinance as amended is similar to that of the "local improvement act" of 1901 (Stats. 1901, p. 34). It will not be necessary to set forth its various provisions in detail, since the appellant does not question that if the board of supervisors has the power to adopt a method of procedure for levying and enforcing special assessments for the construction of tunnels, the method here adopted was a reasonable and proper one and sufficiently safeguarded the rights of the property owners, except, perhaps, in certain particulars which will be referred to hereafter.

Pursuant to the provisions of this ordinance the board of supervisors adopted a resolution of intention to order the construction in or under Stockton street of a tunnel which with its approaches should extend from the northerly line of Sutter street to the southerly line of Sacramento street, the tunnel itself to extend from the southerly line of Bush street to a line 150 feet southerly from the southerly line of Sacramento street. The resolution of intention described two districts which were to be connected by the said tunnel and upon which, as comprising the lands specially benefited by such improvement, the damages, costs, and expenses of the construction were to be assessed.

Other facts bearing upon the appeal will be mentioned in connection with the particular points upon which they bear.

1. The appellant contends, first, that the provision of section 33 giving to the board of supervisors authority to provide a method of procedure for the improvement and assessment constitutes an unauthorized delegation of legislative power by the Legislature of the state.

[1] It is hardly worth while to discuss the question whether a grant of power contained in a freeholders' charter or an amendment thereto derives its force from legislative action on the part of the state Legislature. If, by the approval, under section 8 of article 11 of the Constitution, of a charter or an amendment which vests in a local body authority to legislate concerning local matters, the Legislature may be said to be delegating legislative power, such delegation is one that is expressly authorized by the Constitution. In re Pfahler, 150 Cal. 71, 88 Pac. 270, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1092; Platt v. City and County of S. F., 158 Cal. 74, 110 Pac. 304; Hellman v. Shoulters, 114 Cal. 136, 44 Pac. 915, 45 Pac. 1057. That the procedure for constructing tunnels, or making other street improvements, is so far a matter of local concern as to be properly included within the scope of a municipal charter is not questioned by the appellant. See Byrne v. Drain, 127 Cal. 663, 60 Pac. 433.

[2] And if the charter may define such procedure directly, we see no reason why it may not confer upon the legislative body of the municipality (in this instance, the board of supervisors) power to enact a mode of procedure by ordinance. The provisions of the ordinance adopted pursuant to the authorization of the charter have the same sanction and the same effect that they would have had if incorporated in the charter itself. Harrison v. Horton, 5 Cal. App. 415, 90 Pac. 716; Murphy v. City of San Luis Obispo, 119 Cal. 624, 51 Pac. 1085, 39 L. R. A. 444.

[3] 2. It is claimed that in some particulars the ordinance establishing the procedure to be followed is an attempted exercise of powers in excess of those granted. Under this head it is claimed, first, that the charter amendments do not authorize the assessment of the cost of the improvement upon a special district. By section 1 of the new chapter 8 of the charter, the board of supervisors is empowered to order the construction of a tunnel and to levy the cost of the expenses thereof upon private property "in the manner and under and subject to the proceedings, powers, restrictions, and limitations of chapter 2 of this article providing for street work and street improvement." By section 5 of chapter 2, which is thus incorporated into chapter 8, the board of supervisors is expressly authorized to define the districts benefited by a proposed improvement and to be assessed to pay the expense thereof. Stats. 1899, p. 295. Furthermore, section 33 of chapter 2 of article 6, which was also, as we have seen, added to the chapter in 1911, contains language clearly indicating an intent to authorize the assessment of the cost of the improvement upon property specially benefited. The section provides for methods of procedure for the construction of tunnels, and "for the assessment of expenses thereof or any portion of such expenses upon private property." The term "assessment," as used in this connection, means the kind of assessment here involved, i. e., a burden imposed upon property "for the purpose of paying the cost of the improvement, and laid with reference to the benefit which such property is supposed to receive from the expenditure of the money." Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 241.

[4] Another objection to the ordinance regulating the procedure is that it contains a provision authorizing the issuance by the auditor, in the absence of sufficient money to pay demands upon the assessment fund, of certificates bearing interest at a rate to be determined by the board of supervisors. It is contended that this is an attempt to permit the city to borrow money and that there is no authorization in law for such borrowing. But it is obvious that the certificates so to be issued are not obligations of the municipality. Union Trust Co. v. State of California, 154 Cal. 716, 99 Pac. 183, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1111. They are not a charge against the funds of the city and county, but are payable out of the assessments levied against the property within the assessment district.

The provision for payment of interest on the certificates is not open to objection. The necessity for the issuance of such certificates arises from the provision of section 33, above referred to, permitting the board to provide for the payment of assessments in annual installments. The ordinance, in accordance with this authorization, has provided that property owners desiring an extension of credit may, upon certain terms, obtain the privilege of paying their assessments in installments. No property owner is liable for interest unless he voluntarily seeks and obtains an extension by requesting that he be permitted to pay in installments. But, apart from this consideration, interest upon the certificates is properly chargeable to the property owner as an item of "incidental expenses incurred in providing a sufficient fund for the accomplishment of the work, without exacting in cash from the property owners the necessary sum." Doyle v. Austin, 47 Cal. 353.

[5] 3. The resolution of intention provides that the tunnel is to be "properly bored, lined, faced, paved with asphaltic pavement, curbed with granite curb, and sidewalked with artificial stone, with all appurtenances necessary to make such tunnel fit for public use." The appellant contends that the power granted by the charter to construct tunnels does not include power to pave or sidewalk. We think this is too narrow a construction of the charter provision. The term "construct" has a broad significance. As applied to a railroad, it has been held to cover the doing of everything necessary to make the road ready for operation. De Graff v. St. P., etc., R. Co., 23 Minn. 144; Preston v. Dubuque, etc., R. Co., 11 Iowa, 17. The grant of power to construct tunnels must, on like reasoning, include the power to do the things necessary to make the tunnels fit for use. The paving of a tunnel and the laying of sidewalks are necessary to enable the public to use the tunnel for the purposes for which it was intended. Such paving and sidewalking are therefore a proper incident of the power to construct. This conclusion in no way conflicts with Wilcoxon v. San Luis Obispo, 101 Cal. 508, 35 Pac. 988, where it was held that under the statute providing for opening or widening streets (Stats. 1889, p. 70) the city council had no authority to provide for grading and graveling the lands taken for widening a street. The statute there considered dealt merely with the subject of acquiring lands for opening, widening, or straightening streets, leaving the improvement of the streets when acquired to be covered by other statutes. See San Francisco v. Kiernan, 98 Cal. 614, 33 Pac. 720. The grading of the land added to a street was entirely distinct from the widening, straightening, or extending, which alone were provided for by the act of 1889. An entirely different situation is presented where the charter authorizes the "construction" of tunnels.

[6] In connection with this point it is suggested that, since Stockton street is an accepted street, any repair or improvement thereto must, under section 23 of chapter 2 of article 6 of the charter, be paid for by the city and county. We doubt whether the construction of a tunnel "in or under" a street is fairly to be regarded as a repair or improvement of the street. But, if it be such improvement, the specific grant, by chapter 8 of article 6, of authority to construct tunnels "in, on, or under any accepted or unaccepted street, * * * and to levy the cost and expenses thereof upon private property," certainly takes the construction of such tunnels, with their necessary incidents, out of the operation of the general provision that accepted streets must be kept in repair and improved by the city and county.

[7] 4. It is next contended that the construction of the approaches to the tunnel will involve a change of grade of Stockton street to the extent of the length of the approaches, and that such change has not been authorized by the method defined in chapter 6, art. 6, of the charter, providing for the change of grade of streets. The answer to this point, as to the point raised with reference to the paving of the tunnel, is that the change of grade is a mere incident to the construction of a tunnel. Gassner v. McCarthy, supra. The boring of a tunnel necessarily involves the making of approaches to the mouths of the tunnel. The grant of power to construct the tunnel is therefore a grant of power to do the incidental thing, and the procedure provided for tunnel construction is all that need be followed.

[8] 5. Section 28 of the ordinance, providing the method of procedure, authorizes the levy of a supplemental assessment to complete the construction, in the event that the assessment originally levied should turn out to be insufficient. The section gives to any person interested the right to be heard in opposition to such levy. It also declares that the supervisors may, in lieu of levying a supplemental assessment, provide for the payment by the city and county of the amount required to complete the work.

In Gill v. Oakland, 124 Cal. 335, 57 Pac. 150, this court treated a similar provision in the street opening act of 1889 as valid. It is now, however, argued that since the amount of the benefit to accrue to the property of a private owner is determined at the time of the original assessment, an excess of cost cannot justify the imposing upon such property of a further assessment, exceeding the benefit as thus ascertained. But it is not true that the first assessment necessarily covers the full amount of the benefit. The provision of the ordinance is that the "benefits estimated shall not exceed the total of such estimated costs, damages, and expenses." The assessment is to be "in accordance with the benefits"; that is to say, not equal, but proportional, to such benefits. The property is assessed for only such proportion of the benefits as may be required to meet the estimated cost. If a further assessment becomes necessary, the hearing afforded to the property owner gives him ample opportunity to protect his property against the imposition of a burden greater than the total benefit conferred. He is not harmed by having the amount properly chargeable collected in two assessments rather than one.

[9] But, in any view, the objection is premature. No supplemental assessment has been levied in the case at bar, and it cannot be known whether any ever will be. It may be that the first assessment will produce funds sufficient to complete the improvement, or, if there should be a deficiency, that the supervisors will supply the needed balance out of the treasury of the city and county. The proper time to question the propriety of a supplemental assessment will be when an attempt is made to levy such assessment.

[10] 6. We see no force in the point that the provision in the ordinance for "incidental expenses" is invalid because the items constituting such expenses are not specifically defined by the ordinance. That incidental expenses may properly be made a charge on the property within an assessment district is not questioned. Doyle v. Austin, supra; Burk v. Altschul, 66 Cal. 533, 6 Pac. 393. And no reason is suggested for holding that the elements constituting such expenses must be enumerated in the ordinance. A general provision, like the one before us, was upheld in Brooks v. San Luis Obispo, 109 Cal. 50, 41 Pac. 791. If anything not properly chargeable as an incidental expense is included in the report upon which the assessment is to be made, the owner is, by the terms of the ordinance, given a full opportunity to object and to be heard in support of his objection.

[11] 7. In view of the peculiar nature of a tunnel, which, while a single work, serves to unite distinct and separate districts, each of which is benefited, we think there is no force in the suggestion that an assessment upon the lands in two districts is unauthorized. The case is very different from Southwick v. Santa Barbara, 158 Cal. 14, 109 Pac. 610, where it was sought, by levying a single assessment upon two districts, to impose upon the land in one the burden of paying for improvements which benefited only the land in the other.

No other contentions are advanced in support of the appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

Action by Z. T. Ives against L. C. Connacher, Anna Ives' administrator. Order refusing a new trial, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. E. Shepard and A. B. James, for appellant. J. R. Webb, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, in an action brought by plaintiff against the administrator with the will annexed of the estate of his deceased wife to quiet his title to a lot of land in Selma, Fresno county, being the W. ½ of the S. W. ¼, and the S. E. ¼ of the S. W. ¼ of section 31, T. 15 S., R. 21 E., M. D. M.; the theory of plaintiff being that such property was community property of himself and wife at the time of her death, February 23, 1910, and that therefore the same belongs to him without administration. Section 1401, Civ. Code.

Plaintiff and deceased intermarried December 27, 1903, and continued to be husband and wife to the time of her death. The property in question was purchased from the German Savings & Loan Society on March 6, 1906, and was occupied by the parties as a residence up to the time of the death of the wife. The purchase price was $1,600, payable one-fourth cash, and the balance in one, two, and three years, with interest on the deferred payments. The evidence is such that we must assume, in view of the findings, that the first payment was made by plaintiff from community funds, $50 as a cash deposit at the time of concluding the bargain, and $340 on March 30, 1906. The receipt given for the cash deposit of $50, which also stated the terms of the purchase, named plaintiff as the party paying the money, and named no other person as purchaser. A conveyance of the property, the same bearing date March 6, 1906, was thereupon executed and delivered by the German Savings & Loan Society to "Z. T. Ives and Annie Ives, his wife." This conveyance was recorded April 3, 1906. For the balance of the purchase price, notes, payable, respectively, one, two, and three years thereafter, and signed by both Mr. and Mrs. Ives, were made and delivered to the grantor, and a mortgage of said property to secure the payment of said notes was also executed and delivered by them to said grantor. It was alleged in the complaint, and not denied in the answer, that, while the title to the property was taken in the name of both plaintiff and wife, plaintiff did not intend thereby to make a gift thereof of any part of the real estate to the wife, and did not in fact make such gift, and that there was no contract or agreement between them that the title of any of said property should vest in her as separate property, so that these facts must be taken as established. We shall assume that the evidence must be taken as showing, without conflict, that the first and second notes, maturing in March, 1907, and March 1908, respectively (being the second and third payments), were made from the proceeds of sales of some of the wife's separate property (being property owned by her before her marriage), which were on deposit in a bank to her credit. There is nothing to indicate that such payments were not made on the order of the wife herself, or that there was any agreement or understanding between the husband and wife, whereby the character of any of the property as community or separate property might be affected by reason of the making of such payments from the separate property of the wife. The third note, being for the final installment of the purchase price, has not been paid.

The trial court found, in accord with the allegations of the complaint, that the property was purchased by plaintiff on or about March 6, 1906, "with the community funds of the plaintiff and his wife, Annie Ives," and was community property of the husband and wife at the time of the latter's death, and therefore concluded, in view of the admitted fact as to there being no intent to make any gift to the wife, and no gift in fact, that "the plaintiff is the owner in fee of the property, and that defendant has no interest therein."

The real question on this appeal is whether, upon the facts already stated, the finding that the purchase was made with community funds is sufficiently sustained by the evidence, by reason of the fact that the first and second notes were paid from the separate property of the wife (the money paid by plaintiff at the time of the purchase being community property), for all claims based upon the fact alone that the wife was named as a cograntee in the deed are disposed of by the admissions shown by the pleadings, in view of the decisions of this court in Fanning v. Green, 156 Cal. 279, 104 Pac. 308, and Fulkerson v. Stiles, 156 Cal. 703, 105 Pac. 966, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 181; this being a controversy solely between the husband and the legal representative of the wife, and the presumption declared by section 164 of the Civil Code therefore not being conclusive. Fanning v. Green, supra.
